This came despite the loss of the team's top-scorer, sophomore Tom Carmean who suffered what appears to be a shoulder separation with 3:34 left in the first quarter.

Carmean, who sets up the offense from behind the net and draws the double-team effectively, was in the hope on a fastbreak and was checked. He fell on his shoulder and was taken for x-rays last night. Should he be out of action for any extended period, the Gorillas' offense will face an uphill climb against Yale, Harvard and Army, all rugged defensive teams.

But Carmean's injury was not reason to lose to the Wildcats. The Gorillas waited too long before making a run and once they got within reach, let up a cheap goal at a critical moment to kill their chances.

Saturday however, the team did little wrong as an outclassed Boston College team took a savage beating.

Carmean took advantage of an extended BC defense to dish out eight assists as 16 different Gorillas scored, much to the pleasure of 1,500 fans on Boyden Hill.

Fiorini has a season-high four goals, Carmean had three,

Baseball clawed by Bears, batter Catamounts

By PETER ABRAHAM

Following a pair of disappointing losses to the University of Maine on Friday, the University of Massachusetts baseball team bounced back and swept the University of Vermont in a doubleheader yesterday at Lorden Field.

Victimized by an error-prone defense, the Minutemen lost to Maine 11-10 on eight innings (scheduled for seven) and 7-5 in a five inning second game abortened by darkness.

Yesterday, the Minutemen set the Catamounts down 5-3 as Jim Knopf authored a four-hitter, and 9-4 as Brett Valanetini and Jon Martin combined on a five-hitter with Martin getting the win.

In the first Maine game, Jeff Cimini continued on his hot streak with four hits as UMass battered three Bear pitchers for 15 hits.

The Minutemen held a 10-8 lead after five innings on the strength of a five-run third inning that was keyed by RBI singles by Steve Allen, Jack Bloise and Bruce Kingman.

But Maine, the top-ranked team in New England, scored two in the seventh as reliever Jeff Jensen lost his control and loaded the bases with walks. Allen came on to strike out Bill Reynolds before Rick Bernardo flied to left driving in Gary Lapierre. Rob Roy then walked to load the bases before a wild pitch tied the game as Bill McInnis scored.

UMass went down in order in the seventh before McInnis' fielder's choice scored Mike Bordick with the winner in the eigth. The Minutemen committed four errors in the game.

The second game saw UMass jump out to 4-1 lead after three innings before Maine struck for six in the fourth to win the game. Cimini ripped a homer on the fourth, his fourth of the season.

Yesterday, the Minutemen got home runs from Angelo Salistri and Steve Messina in the first game in support of Knopf, who ran his record to 3-1 after struggling through a three-run first inning.

Knopf struck out eight after allowing two hits in the first frame as Vermont took advantage of two UMass errors to take the early lead. A two-run homer by Kingman in the third and Salistri's solo shot in the fourth tied the game before Messina's two-run dinger won it in the sixth.

The second game saw UMass get three in the first as Todd Comeau (three-for-three) singled in Jay Zerner. Two more came across in the third as Comeau homered. RBI singles by Messina and Darrin O'Connor in the fifth drove two more across as UMass had another strong offensive performance.

Simply Marvelous: Hagler wins by KO

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) - Marvelous Marvin Hagler knocked down Thomas Hearns and stopped him at 2:01 of the third round of a savage fight for Hagler's undisputed middleweight title Monday night.

Just moments after a doctor had been called into the ring to examine a bad cut over Hagler's right eye, the champion hurt Hearns with a right to the head and unleashed a barrage that dropped the challenger. Hearns struggled up but referee Richard Steele looked at him and stopped the bout.

In terms of action, it had to be one of the great fights. It more than lived up to the tremendous hype that preceded it.

Hagler attacked and attacked and attacked. The 6-foot-1 Hearns, the World Boxing Council super welterweight champion, fought back and fought back and fought back until he was simply overwhelmed by the savagery of the champion.

Hearns, who threw every punch in his arsenal but could not hold Hagler off, ripped a cut open over Hagler's right eye in the first round. Then the champion had a cut beneath the eye and his face was a bloody mess.

It looked for a moment as if Hearns would become champion earlier when Steele stopped the action with blood streaming down Hagler's face and ring doctor Donald Romeo examined the cut as the crowd of 160,034 at the outdoor arena voiced its displeasure.

Ax poised over Index, again

Only RSO slated for total cut

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

After a 30-hour meeting with only a one-hour break, the Undergraduate Student Senate Budget Committee plowed through a fiscal crisis and wrote a Budget Act which provides funding for every registered student organization except the Index yearbook.

Budget Committee Chairman Jordan Rosner said, "The Index will have to find alternative funding. I don't see why we can't have ads in our yearbook."

Index editor Cindy Orlowski was "disappointed and upset" with the decision, saying, "They (The budget committee) had a plan for next year's book and just sprung it at us. The plan they are showing us is not feasible. They want us to go to direct sales and get funds for next year's books before they come out. We have no marketing staff. We can't do that."

The committee is also suggesting that the group ask the senate for a $26,600 loan, which Orlowski predicted cannot be granted due to a shortage of funds.

Noting last year's controversy over yearbook funding, which was finally granted, Orlowski added, "We went through the same thing last year and we've proved ourselves. I don't see why we should have to do it again."

Though final figures will be unavailable until presented at the April 24 senate meeting, Rosner said cuts made were directed toward "things I don't think the student body gets to see," adding that the committee's main goal was to save smaller RSO groups by trimming funds going to senate operations, senate committees and the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

Once original recommendations and then final cuts were made some budgets were cut almost 70 percent.

Budget committee auditor Bob Griffin said he predicts some anger and controversy over the budget, but that "some of these RSO groups that had to take cuts are not going to realize the time we put into saving them, and how really close we came to losing them."

Rosner said he was "satisfied with the act, considering what the committee had to work with." According to committee members the amount of money requested by RSO groups was $902,072.00, while the amount of money available for allocation was $158,252.00.

To avoid the continuation of the fiscal crisis, Rosner said he sees "no choice" but to suggest a student activities fee increase for each student of $12 to $13. The committee will also apply for an exemption from fees for computer and administrative costs. The waiver is only granted in cases of "severe financial hardship."

Along with committee efforts, the student senate unanimously voted to demand "that the Student Activities Office cut its budget by at least 10 percent to share the burden of the fiscal crisis in a fair and equitable manner."

DOD official pushes for tower

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS

NORTHAMPTON—A Ground Wave Emergency Network tower in Amherst would strengthen American ability to prevent a nuclear exchange from ever taking place, a Department of Defense official said last night at a public hearing in the Hampshire County Courthouse.

Frank Miller, director of strategic forces policy at the office of the Secretary of Defense in Washington, D.C., answered questions from area residents on the proposed radio tower designed to provide communication in the event of a nuclear attack.

About 150 people jammed the courtroom. Questions from the floor, some of them combative, were directed at Miller and three other defense officials during the third and last GWEN hearing before the Hampshire County Commissioners.

"The primary goal of GWEN is to reinforce our ability to prevent any kind of nuclear attack," Miller said.

Miller defended the proposed system by saying that present defense relay systems are not adequate. "GWEN will provide for the first time an EMP (electromagnetic pulse) resistant communication channel." This pulse, created by a nuclear explosion, could knock out all normal communications, he said.

"GWEN takes the information passed from early warning systems and provides a reliable, jam-proof system that insures the president has information needed to make a decision during a nuclear war," he said.

Despite Miller's continued defense of the system, several members of the crowd raised anti-GWEN signs and applauded loudly those who questioned the reasoning behind the tower proposal. In addition, after many of Miller's statements, crowd members yelled out protests aimed at the officials.

One Amherst woman brought up the environmental impact of the proposed tower.

Miller said if the environmental impact proves to be severe, "then the project may not precede," but he added that there is no indication of severe impact and no action will be taken until a study is conducted.

Asked what would happen if the tower were not built in Amherst, he said, "We will precede with the GWEN system and I presume that we'd have to locate towers in less operable areas and we might have to build more towers."

A doctor representing Physicians for Social Responsibility, an anti-nuclear group, said he was offended by Miller's lack of openness during the hearing. Miller responded by saying that his conscience was clear: "I have been perfectly candid with you here," after which a murmur of doubt went through much of the audience.

Baird makes pro-choice plea

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

The present laws that support abortion and contraception rights will soon be abolished unless the pro-choice majority start to take action, a pro-choice activist for more than twenty years said last night at the University of Massachusetts.

Bill Baird, speaking in the Student Union Ballroom in a lecture titled "Firebombing Abortion Clinics And What We Plan To Do About It," told the 200 members of the audience, "Unless you wake up you will lose by default your rights to abortion and birth control."

Commenting on the anti-abortion movement, he said, "I have never seen hatred and violence sweeping the country as now." On the other hand, he said the pro-choice movement is characterized by the greatest amount of "apathy" he had ever seen.

While most of the audience raised their hands when Baird asked who supported abortion, only one or two did so when he asked whether they had ever acted to express their support.

"On every campus 99 percent of students support abortion but less than one percent ever does anything about it," he said.

He accused the audience of "taking for granted" their present rights and asked, "If you don't give a damn about yourself, who will?"

Baird, who now operates three abortion centers in New York State, spoke of the "rage of firebombing" and issued the challenge, "If anyone dares invade our clinics it will be battle for the death."

Mass. loses arrest battle

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — Michigan State and Maryland sports fans who lament their teams' lack of national titles this year, take heart -the two schools tied for first place in the number of spring break arrests here.

The Spartans and Terrapins scored nine arrests in the period from March 1 to Easter, beating out a strong challenge by Navy in this beachside city that becomes the spring break capital of collegiate America each year.

The Midshipmen tied with Ohio State, each with six arrests, while Massachusetts and New Hampshire university students warming up from the New England winter had five arrests each.

In all, 284 college students from 180 schools were arrested during spring break, all but six of them men.

The majority, 153, were charged with disorderly conduct or disorderly intoxication. In second was resisting arrest, at 40. Other charges ranged from urinating in public to marijuana possession.

South Africans belittle concessions

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Opponents of white minority rule derided the government's plan to repeal laws prohibiting sex and marriage between whites and people of other races, saying the right to vote is the key issue for the black majority.

The repeal would remove two pillars of the apartheid system that aims to preserve white racial purity.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb said, "Efforts such as this appear to be a step in the direction of a more just society, although we realize that much more needs to be done."

But Dr. Nthato Motlana, community leader in Soweto, the populous black township outside Johannesburg, said: "These two laws denied our humanity by suggesting that sex with blacks was demeaning, but these laws are of no particular interest to black South Africans.

"The primary battle is for one man, one vote. We might believe that government is in earnest about reform if it repealed the pass law and the group areas law."

The multiracial Southern African Catholic Bishops Conference said in Pretoria that scrapping the two laws was "only window dressing."

Ex-CIA head raps aid to 'contras'

WASHINGTON — Former CIA Director Stansfield Turner urged Congress yesterday to reject President Reagan's proposal to release $14 million in aid to the "Contras" in Nicaragua, calling it "a dead-end policy" in Central America.

"The Nicaraguan communists are not an immediate threat to the United States and its interests in Central America," Turner said.

Turner, who headed the agency under former President Carter, testified before a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee which also heard Ray Cline, a former deputy director of the CIA who firmly supports Reagan's policy.

"If the United States turns its back on this group (the Contras) there will be moves to accommodate with communist regimes throughout the world and in Nicaragua," Cline said.

Meanwhile, Reagan, speaking to a group of religious leaders at the White House, kept up his criticism of the leftist Nicaraguan government again accusing it of religious persecution. The president said he had also received a message from the Pope "urging us to continue our efforts in Central America."

Republican and Democratic sources in the House predicted that the Contra aid plan would lose by 30 votes, despite an intensifying lobbying campaign by Reagan and his allies. A close vote in the Republican-led Senate was predicted.

Under the proposal to be voted on next week, the $14 million would go as humanitarian assistance to the contras seeking overthrow of the Sandinista government in Managua.

But if negotiations between the Sandinistas and the contras failed, the money would then be spent for weapons for the rightist rebels supported by the president.

Activists lash Nicaraguan aid

By STEVE HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

About 75 local members of the nationwide Pledge of Resistance group rallied on the Amherst Common yesterday to protest President Reagan's proposed $14 million aid package to Nicaraguan "control" rebels before traveling to Holyoke to picket the office of U.S. Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Pittsfield.

With chants of "Hey, Hey Uncle Sam, we remember Vietnam," the protesters rallied on the common for about 45 minutes before carpooling to Holyoke, where some members of the group met with Conte's staff, according to Andree Kehn of the Western Mass. Latin America Solidarity Committee (WMLASC).

The group presented three main themes at the office of Rep. Conte, who according to Kehn now opposes funding for the contras:

- urged that Conte actively oppose Reagan's aid proposal, and submitted a list of undecided members of Congress whom Conte might contact.
- asked that all members of Congress read the Americas Watch report on Central America and the Washington Office on Latin America report on the contra "atrocities."
- told Rep. Conte that 50,000 people have signed the national pledge to begin civil disobedience tactics if both houses of Congress approve contra funding when they are expected to vote on the issue April 23.

"Right now our focus is stopping involvement in Nicaragua," Marc Kenen of WMLASC said, but I think the group's activities will continue."

The Pledge of Resistance has been supported nationally by organizations such as the southern Christian Leadership Conference, the World Peacemakers and the National Freeze Campaign.

About 1,000 people in western Massachusetts have signed the pledge, Kenen said, including members of the Amherst Peacemakers, the UMass Radical Student Union and WMLASC.

On April 4, Reagan proposed the funding for the Nicaraguan rebels who are fighting the Sandinista government. The president has accused the Sandinistas of ruling a "totalitarian communist state."

"Reagan's distorting the truth beyond recognition," Kenen said. "The Sandinistas have strong support with the population.

"If you study carefully what Reagan says about Nicaragua, he's never been able to substantiate anything."

In a statement issued April 15 for the Western Massachusetts Contingency Network, which represents the local members of the Pledge of Resistance, local activist Mary Wentworth said Reagan's funding proposal is in violation of a 1984 World Court order that "the United States cease its aggressive activities against Nicaragua."

"Our President is asking us to condone actions that make our country an international outlaw," Wentworth said.

Early Nazi party accepted homosexuals but later persecuted them, speaker says

By LAURA KOESTER
Collegian Staff

Many gay men were members of the infamous Nazi "storm troopers" force known as the S.A. and some actually rose to positions of power, according to Gerry Scoppettuolo in a presentation yesterday on "Gays and Lesbians During the Holocaust."

Scoppettuolo, a professional staff member of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA), explained this in the context of the strong "homo-erotic content" of the German Youth Movement, an organization isolated from adults which looked the other way when it came to homosexual activity.

The head of the S.A., Ernest Rohm, was himself gay. Scoppettuolo described the S.A. as a haven for those displaced as a result of the severe economic crisis and the "dregs of society." The S.A., more commonly known as the Brown Shirts, provided people with food and lodging.

"Nazism appealed to non-Jewish gays and to many people because they felt there would be a place for them in it, that everyone would have a place," Scoppettuolo added.

He said gays were tolerated by the Nazis until 1933, when a campaign against them was used to justify the Night of the Long Knives, a spree of violence engineered by Adolph Hitler which left most leaders of the S.A. dead.

"In 1933, prostitution and gay bars were banned, and a campaign was launched against blacks, Jews, and homosexuals. A law known as 175A...spelled out nine things gays couldn't do, such as fantasizing, embracing and kissing," he said.

Scoppettuolo estimated that 50,000 gays were sent to concentration camps after serving a six-month prison sentence—not to death camps like the Jews, but to work camps. Many died from exhaustion and malnutrition.

In 1941, the policy of the SS, Hitler's secret police was to shoot immediately any member who was known to be a homosexual.

"Homosexuals were referred to as degenerates. Social hygiene and eugenics (racial purity) were used to justify these policies. There was compulsive heterosexuality—every family was expected to produce four children for the party," he said.

Shel Horowitz of the New Jewish Agenda reminded the audience that the Weimar Republic which preceded Hitler's rise to power was one of the most sexually liberated and tolerant but was "totally crushed under Hitler. Although today's climate may seem relatively favorable, we shouldn't relax."

Economic planning criticized

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

A father and son panel agreed yesterday that Americans have not adequately responded to economic challenges, but differed on which sector should bear the burden of appropriate action.

Victor Gotbaum is the executive director of District Council 37 of the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees in New York. During New York City's near bankruptcy in the mid 1970's, he worked with a coalition of labor, government and business which eventually averted that crisis.

His son, Joshua Gotbaum, is an associate at Lazard Freres and Co., an investment banking firm in New York City. He has recently been orchestrating worker buyouts of floundering industrial companies.

Speaking to an audience of 40 people in the Campus Center for the fourth and final Chancellor's Seminar on the New American Economy this year, both agreed that planning for and response to economic problems have been less than sufficient.

"Americans are lousy planners," Victor Gotbaum said, "We very often don't look around and see what is going on."

Citing the growth in military spending rather than on domestic programs, he faulted the Democratic Party for allowing MX missile funding to be approved while social programs are being cut.

Joshua Gotbaum said, "As we begin to recover economically and as we begin to get real economic growth....I wonder if we will then turn to the question of will we then become generous enough to deal with the lesser group."

Unemployment can be solved by stimulating the economy, he said, but this hasn't worked well and the unemployment problem has been "made different." Employment problems now are that people cannot get the jobs they want and many are underpaid.

"One of the problems we have is that we always talk about policy as if government is either going to create or solve every problem," he said, "and that really isn't true."

Man arrested for attempted robbery

A man pleaded innocent yesterday in Hampshire District Court after he was arrested for an attempted robbery in the Campus Center Friday morning, University of Massachusetts police said.

Police said the 27-year-old man attempted to take a bag containing $600 from a Campus Center employee who was on his way to deposit the cash in a Campus Center bank. Police said they then received a call Friday afternoon from an employee who saw the suspect in the Campus Center lobby. Police confronted the man and arrested him.

In other police news:

- A small fire burned a woman's hair and arm while she was working in Chenoweth laboratory Friday afternoon. Police said the woman accidentally set some paper towels on fire with a hot plate. She was treated at Health Services and released. The fire did not cause any other damage.
- A student security officer was punched in the face by an unidentified man while walking by the Whitmore Administration Building Saturday night. Police said a man stepped out from behind some pine trees, hit the student in the nose and ran off.

He observed that to date 63 clinics have been bombed and that now "abortion clinics are armed and the owners carry pistols."

Baird attributed much of the current "hatred" to the "rhetoric" and "bigotry" of the church, accusing it of churning out "vicious, evil propaganda."

"What is it about the chauvinistic men who run churches that they think they have the corner on morality?" he asked, adding that it is time for the church to decide that "women are people and have the right to decide what is morally correct."

Baird, who has been imprisoned eight times in his struggle for abortion and birth control rights and whose family has been forced to live 400 miles away because of death threats, said he was "tired" of fighting without support.

"I plead with you to help me," he told the audience, adding that the fight was not only for abortion but for "dignity, freedom, and self-respect."

He suggested students write letters to newspapers, encourage the student senate to pass a resolution supporting birth control and abortion rights, and support his efforts to institute 50-foot zones around abortion clinics which would be "demonstration-free" from anti-abortionists.

Pro-choice activist Bill Baird

He said unless such measures are taken there will be a return to "the primitive techniques" of illegal abortion that were prevalent at UMass when Baird last visited the campus in 1968.

As examples of such techniques, Baird recalled how women students would douche themselves with bleach or soap, insert wire coat hangers into their uteruses, or force salt up into their uteruses with turkey basters, methods that are often fatal to the woman.

Senate motion asks reconsideration for Coors

The Undergraduate Student Senate tonight will vote on a motion to nullify the Campus Center Board of Governors recommendation to discontinue the sale of Coors Beer on campus.

Passage of the motion would force the BOG to reconsider the decision made last week. It would not overturn the ruling.

BOG member Bob Cohen said, "The board has been exposed to all the information in regards to this issue. I feel that when the senate is informed about the facts in relation to Corrs' operation and treatment of workers, they too will support our decision."

Smith honors resigning president

A parade, fireworks and a "Conway Olympiad" will highlight today's celebration marking the stepping down of Smith College President Jill K. Conway.

Conway, who holds 12 honorary degrees, will take up a position as visiting scholar at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. She is resigning after 10 years as Smith president in conjunction with the retirement of her husband, five-college Canadian Studies Professor John Conway.

She said she was proud of having helped make the college "more responsive to a broader spectrum of students than before with just 18- to 20-year-olds," adding that mothers on welfare and other older women have been increasingly admitted to Smith.

Two workshops will be held in Wright Hall and will focus on areas in which Conway has done work in. From 10 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. "Women's History as Women's Education" will be held, Conway is currently in the process of writing her second volume of "The Female Experience in 18th and 19th Century America, A Guide to the History of American Women."

At 11:50 a.m. "Prospects for the Future: Women's Education, Technology and the Labor Force" will take place.

A parade of Smith students and community members will walk from Smith Quadrangle through the campus to Burton Hall lawn starting at 2:45 p.m.

The "Conway Olympiad" will then be held on the lawn in honor of Conway's commitment to athletics at Smith. The Olympiad will include sports events, a Jill Conway lookalike contest and a hoop rolling contest, along with carnival booths and musicians.

RENEE BACHER

When I was a kid, Sunday used to be my least favorite day of the week. My parents would just lie around all day, read the New York Times and give my little brother and myself a long list of chores to complete so we wouldn't bother them. Today, I view Sundays with far less dread. Now that I am on my own, I read the New York Times and nobody does the chores.

In fact, I might even venture to say that Sundays have become my most favorite day of the week, in part, because of the New York Times. Mostly I read the fluff; Arts and Leisure, Help Wanted, columnist Russell Baker, the entire magazine section and eventually the Week in Review and the front page.

A week ago Sunday, I spotted something particularly offensive in the Times. So offensive, in fact, that I thought I would perhaps stop buying the Times in protest. First let me tell you that I don't have activist tendencies, nor am I one to deprive myself for the good of the whole.

It was page 47 of the magazine section. There were photographs of four giraffes, windsurfers and a large white hotel on a beautiful white beach. The caption read, "Come to South Africa, where you can expect the unexpected." Not too deceptive, I thought. Perhaps the readers of the magazine section never get to the front page where there is daily news of the racist murders that take place on the streets of Johannesburg.

No, I don't think uninformed vacationers would expect this. Nor would they expect that their vacation money is going to support a country with a black majority of 23 million that has no say at all in their government. In fact, I'm sure it would come as a complete surprise that these same blacks live in hovels many miles outside the city limits because by law, they are not permitted to live in white cities.

South Africa is supposed to be one of the most beautiful countries in the world when it comes to wildlife as the advertisement suggests, but let's talk about civilization. To many well-educated people the word Apartheid means much less than it should. Many of my Ivy League buddies look at me blankly when I talk to them about divestment. This is sad. Of course if you mention Martin Luther King they know what's going on. "Oh yeah, he lead the Civil Rights Movement," they recollect.

Today, South African blacks are treated worse than blacks in America more than 20 years ago. How can we support these government policies? Okay, so this is not America, this is a country half a world away. Why should you care? You should care because we are all an integral part of humanity and to let this go on anywhere is as an outrage. Thankfully the United States was able to get into Nazi Germany and liberate the concentration camps or my entire race could quite possibly have been wiped out. Will it take six million deaths before we get our money out of South Africa?

And what will it take for the New York Times to retract this slap in the face it has delivered its informed readers not to mention the slap in the face this advertisement gives to American blacks. The uninformed black American vacationing in sunny South Africa can expect the unexpected discomfort of a prison cell.

Columnist failed to offer any solution

The most difficult part of responding to Sal Assad's attack last week on the Democratic party and the American economic system is deciding where to begin. Assad's commentary, consisting of a wild amalgamation of truths, half-truths, simplifications and exaggerations leaves no major segment of American political life undistorted.

Assad begins by correctly criticizing the sometimes overzealous interventionist stance of the United States, with regards to the Third World, throughout the post World War II era. But in the next breath, he reduces his own argument to absurdity by claiming that in actuality no use of any American political or military force was ever needed anywhere as "there was no presence of any Soviet danger." This claim is complete and utter nonsense, ignoring as it does Poland, the rest of Eastern Europe and Afghanistan. It is highly ironic that Assad later accuses "well intentioned but naive liberals" of "deliberate collective historical amnesia."

In other belligerent ramblings, he attacks "the widely held myth that America is a democracy." Actually, the very fact that Assad can make such a statement in a public forum (such attacks on the home government are impossible in Marxist regimes) weakens his point. Because he does not substantiate his claims that a belief in American democracy constitutes a "vivid example of Orwellian doublethink" (and I should point out here that Orwell's political works were most essentially a criticism of the evolution of Marxism into totalitarianism in the Soviet Union) it is difficult to accept with his argument. Perhaps in a future column Assad can more clearly express his "logic" on this point.

It's a forgone conclusion that a Marxist critique of the American system will include a strident warning of the "vicious plans" the American business community (who are portrayed as the sole decision making agency in the U.S. government) have in store for us. But, though exaggerated and overly paranoid, Assad's claims do have some merit.

The challenge of the future for the United States is to curtail the abuses of admittedly "profit-hungry" corporations and to forcefully promote reform among free-world allies (many of whom do not provide a free world for their own people.) The U.S. must also be ready and willing to preserve the freedom of nations threatened by Soviet imperialism (and here I am referring to nations such as Poland and Afghanistan and not others, such as Nicaragua and Cuba who have chosen Marxist governments for themselves.)

The Democratic party (embodied by such individuals as Walter Mondale, Geraldine Ferraro and George McGovern) understand the challenge of the future and continues to provide an alternative viewpoint in an era of increasing conservatism. It is true that the Democratic party is reeling from serious reversals (and it is therefore not surprising that Assad should feel free to sneak in a few easy low blows) but it is by no means dead, and may well recover if Reaganomics begins to falter in the face to tremendous budget deficits.

It is interesting to note that in a two-part series Sal Assad found the time to address himself to almost every major problem in American society ad nauseum, but completely failed to suggest any solutions or models for improvement. Perhaps before blaming every major calamity of the 20th century on the Democratic party, Assad should have considered the old saying "any jackass can kick down a barn, but it takes a hell of a good carpenter to build one." Assad has thoroughly proven himself on the first point but has yet to address himself to the second.

Letters to the Editor

Going beyond simple black and white

Yadira Betances' column about the gross error many mainstream papers make including the Collegian by not capitalizing blacks was long overdue. This error does not only have racist overtones but also underlines white man's paranoia of proper black standing in society.

Though it might seem a trivial matter, ask anybody who must bear to look at its race spelled in lower case. What this implies is a badge of inferiority, unworthiness and degradation.

It seems that Betances is caught in a power struggle with an all-white power structure to change what she calls "psychologically crippling" which she as a person of color might have experienced.

Perhaps those opposed to the mere grammatical change are afraid of the effect it will have on whites. This is a foolish thought. For one, white is only in reference to skin color. It is also a state of mind. Thirdly, it is a form of oppression that has enslaved thousands of peoples of color around the world to justify their superiority.

But this goes beyond black and white. A Fernandand Barnett said at the turn of the century, it is also political. Because white man had the power of the pen and had the law in his hands up to this date, this gross error has been prolonged.

However, the Collegian has the opportunity here and now to become a pioneer, and I must admit, this is an easy way to repay the immense damage whites have done to black folks.

Korean situation is 'complex and important'

This letter regards the Collegian on South Korea in Friday's issue. No informed, responsible person will deny that certain aspects of the South Korean government are repressive. However, the article is misleading and inaccurate.

For example, the article refers to "crippling economics," South Korea, along with Taiwan and Singapore has the fastest growing GNP in Asia.

Also, the article states that "North and South Korea were divided by the United States after the Korean War in 1945." The Korean War was fought from 1950 to 1953. The Korean peninsula became divided when the Soviet Union declared war on Japan in the last days of World War II.

Another part about the American nuclear presence in South Korea, reads, "Experts say this build-up is forcing North Korea to arm itself." Who are these experts? North Korea had armed itself by June 25, 1950 when it invaded South Korea. According to the Institute for Strategic Studies in London, the North Korean army has 700,000 troops. The South Korean army has 540,000 troops.

The situation in Korea is complex and important. People need accurate information about Korea if they are to make intelligent decisions regarding it.

How about asking the rabbits for a change?

This letter is in response to Barbara Shlosser's letter in Wednesday's Collegian entitled "Hopping mad over a 'Bunny Tale' of death."

Okay, so learning to kill, skin and eat rabbits in the woods is good experience for people. If it was for survival purposes at the moment that would be one thing. To kill them just in case might be useful in the future is unjustifiable. If you could ask the rabbits' opinion I suspect they would agree.

As to the method of killing the creature, you say that they are killed by a sharp blow to the neck instead of crushing the spine. Although it would be better to be killed painlessly, would you like to die by a blow to the neck, or would you like to live a full, natural life? I think the rabbits would choose the latter.

You continually refer to how people feel about the practice in question. For instance, you distinguish between whether the animal was a pet or not. If it was a pet, somehow the practice is abhored. People don't like that. I doubt the rabbit being murdered cares if they were a pet or not, or whether people were upset or not. The creature being used and abused is the one whose rights should be considered, not the ones who are doing the using.

When blacks were freed, was it the whites whose feelings were under consideration? If women want to be "liberated" should it be the men whose opinion should be sought? I think not.

Also, I strongly object to your analogy of memorizing calculus theorems and not practicing them. A bunch of numbers and equations on a piece of paper are not like a living, breathing, sentient creature. Theorems are tools to be used, living creatures are not.

The overall tone I perceive in your letter and in too many people's opinion, that human beings are the only animals who have the right to live without being tormented and abused, and killed by others is very sad to me. We should learn to live in harmony with all our fellow creatures of the earth, not just possibly among our own species.

Johnny rocks the blues at Agora

By JACK BRESNAHAN
Collegian Staff

Johnny Winter and his band rocked the Agora Ballroom Saturday night to an all too mellow audience. Providing a classic albeit short performance of rockin blues, Johnny didn't deem the quiet listeners worthy of an encore. If they cared to be there, I don't know why they didn't show it.

I could have listened to Johnny play all night long. Continuing to be one of the top ten guitarists in the world, he was true to form. Opening the show with an instrumental boogie, he did Mose Allison's "Parchman Farm," which Johnny first recorded about twenty years ago. Using his black Steinbecker "Lazer" guitar throughout the entire show, he also did "Mad Dog," and "Don't Take Advantage of Me," from his latest Guitar Slinger album on Alligator Records. On the latter, he turned the ending into an amazing jam of "Sunshine of Your Love." Even more surprising was him doing "Red House," with guitar work comparable to Hendrix. That was followed by "Lights Out," which was more upbeat than the studio version, as well as longer, with Johnny making it look easy on outstanding leads.

Another surprise was his rocked up version of "Help Me," generally attributed to a blusier James Cotton. This featured bassist Jon Paris doing double duty on harmonica held by a neck brace. He manages to play good blues bending notes using this difficult technique. Next came Johnny's show stopper, "Johnny B. Goode," which it seems Winter was born to play (...just like ringing a bell...). He ended the show with "Boot Hill," on which he used his slide for the first time. It turned out to be quite a treat, with Johnny playing relaxed, concise, and in a controlled fit of rock and roll.

The lawsuit seeks to block next Wednesday's bout and bar the Civic Center directors from entering into a contract with Titan until June 1987.

A Hampden County Superior Court judge is to hear the case against Titan Sports Inc. and Springfield Civic Center and Symphony Hall Inc. within 48 hours of the show to which tickets already are being sold.

Titan's WWF cards always were the biggest moneymakers for the Civic Center when Salow was its local promoter. But Salow, who was released 10 months ago, formed NWF and assembled a stable of wrestlers with the help of one of WWF's national rivals, American Wrestling Alliance, has failed to draw large crowds.

Salow contends that Shampain, his nephew and NWF president, was given favored promoter status in December 1983 by a letter from the Civic Center's directors.

Also, a letter to Titan from arena director Paul T. Whitehead dated June 13, 1984, informs the promoters that Salow had been given "the exclusive right to book wrestling dates in the Springfield Civic Center."

Titan and its president, Vincent K. McMahon, protested. The 10 directors in February rescinded their earlier action and gave both federations the right to promote wrestling shows.

The University of Massachusetts intramural men's three-on three champions took great strides in recent competition.

Juniors Mark Cormier and Dan Bryant, and freshman Tim Bryant, after a successful run in preliminary action at Boston University on St. Patrick's Day, defeated Northeastern before the Celtics-Cavaliers game at the Boston Garden on March 22. At halftime, they took on New Hampshire and tied at regulation. The contest was finished after the pro games but the team lost by one in overtime.

Springfield defense splits UM

Softball gets one win

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

This one hurt. The University of Massachusetts softball team hit the ball hard only to be thwarted by some superb defensive efforts by Springfield College and as the Chiefs pulled out a 1-0, nine inning win to split yesterday's doubleheader at NOPE.

UMass, who was led by a sensational five-for-six (including a home run) performance by freshman catcher Iiene Freeman, won the first game, 3-2.

The Minutewomen, who still can't get over the .500 barrier with a 14-15-1 slate, had 10 hits in both games.

However the play of right fielder Tammy Oswell in the second game buried UMass. She caught a Sally Maher shot at the fence with runners on second and first in the bottom of the seventh inning to deny UMass the win and the sweep.

Oswell also threw out Maher and Cathy Reed at the plate in the second and fifth inning after coach Elaine Sortino had sent them from third after fly balls to right.

"I still can't believe we lost," Freeman said, shaking her head. "We're a better team than that. We got hits today. They just played some good defense."

Bad luck continued to haunt the Minutewomen in the second game. Andrea Pinch sent a shot that bounced off shortstop Carol Frattaroli's foot and Shauna Quigley went home instead of staying at third in the ninth inning for the 1-0 win.

"If we keep it up (hitting) we'll get the breaks instead of the bad end of the deal every time," Freeman said.

While Springfield, 10-8, won the second game 1-0, UMass didn't give the Chiefs the chance to come back in the first game.

Freeman hit her second home run of the year in the second inning to give UMass the 1-0 lead. However, the Chiefs got back in it with two UMass errors, by Frattaroli and left fielder Emily Bietsch, in the fifth inning and took a 2-1 lead.

Maher smashed her first homer of the year to tie it back up in the bottom of the fifth and Martha Jamieson scored on a Chief error to give UMass the 3-2 lead.

From then on, Lynn Stockley (7-5, eight strikeouts) sat down the Chiefs in order the next two innings. Stockley gave up six hits.

Freeman was three-for-three with a homer in and one RBI in the opener and Alisa Fila, at shortstop in the opener, went two-for three.

In the nightcap, pitcher Lisa Rever gave up eight hits while striking out five.

Right fielder Chris Ciepela went two-for-three with a double while Freeman went two-for-three and Cathy Reed laced a triple.

Baseball gets past Yale, 12-9

Messina stars at plate

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team ran its record to 13-10 on the season, pounding out 15 hits to defeat Yale 12-9 yesterday in New Haven.

Leftfielder Steve Messina was the offensive star for UMass, going four-for-five with two singles, a double and a triple. Sophomore lefthander Steve Allard threw three scoreless innings of relief to pick up the win, his second against one loss.

UMass picked up a run in the second as catcher Sean Flint drove in Messina (triple) with a single. The Minutemen scored six in the third as UMass baserunners stole four bases.

Bruce Kingman singled, Jay Zerner reached on a fielder's choice (forcing Kingman) before stealing second. Matt Sheran singled in Zerner before himself stealing second. Todd Comeau walked and executed a double steal with Sheran to put runners on second and third. Doug Wright's fielder's choice scored a run as Comeau stayed on second. Comeau stole third and scored as the throw sailed into left field.

Angelo Salustri walked, went to second on Messina's single, and scored on Darrin O'Connor's single. Kingman's fielder's choice then drove in Messina.

UM starter Bobby Kostro went three innings allowing two runs (one earned) before being pulled for Allard. The lefty allowed two hits and a walk over three innings. Relievers Mick Wydra, Matt Subocz and Jeff Jensen combined to keep Yale in the game by allowing six runs and five hits.

Massachusetts scored one in the sixth as Kingman scored on Sheran's grounder. Salustri came across in the seventh after a double and a steal as Messina singled him in. Messina scored on O'Connor's sacrifice fly.

The eighth saw Zerner single, move to third on Sheran's single and score on Comeau's sacrifice fly. Sheran stole his way to third and came across on Wright's fly ball.

Lacrosse teams in action today

Gazelles host Green, men at Hofstra

By PETER ABRAHAM
and ED HAYWARD
Collegian Staff

Two lacrosse teams, one climbing to the top and another trying to stop its slide, will be in action today as the University of Massachusetts women host undefeated Dartmouth and the struggling men are at Hofstra.

The Gorillas, 2-4 on the season, face a Hofstra team that is sputtering along at 2-6.

Sophomore attackman Tom Carmean, the team's leading scorer with 18 goals and 11 assists, will probably miss the game after suffering what appeared to be a shoulder seperation in the first quarter of Monday's 16-14 loss at New Hampshire.

Senior goaltender Gerry Moreau, who has dressed for the last two games after a shoulder seperation, could replace freshman Paul McCarty between the pipes. Midfielder Greg Fisk, with nine goals and three assists, and co-captain Karl Hatton (six and five) will have to pick up much of the offensive slack. Freshman Kelley Carr (five and three) could also contribute. UMass beat the Flying Dutchmen 12-5 last season.

The undefeated teams meet today on NOPE field as the fifth-ranked women's lax team, 5-0, hosts unranked Dartmouth College, 4-0 at 3:00 p.m.

The Gazelles are led by senior All-American Pam Moryl who has scored a team leading 19 goals so far this season. She has also handed out three assists. The midfielder has not only proved to be the team's most potent scoring threat but also the orchestrator of UMass' transition game.

Other contributors to the Gazelles balanced offensive attack include Barbara Forbes with eight goals and eight assists, Becky Bekampis, nine and two, Ginny Armstrong, nine and one, and Liz Schueler, eight and one.

Anchoring the UMass defense is goal keeper Debbi DeJesus who has allowed only 18 goals in five games, saving 45 of 63 shots on goal for a percentage of .714. In the Gazelle's last game, a 6-3 win over seventh ranked Harvard, UMass got some strong backfield work from defenders Kris Kocot and Andrea Muccini to aide DeJesus.

Beth Hurt, who has scored 15 goals, and Elen Barr, who has tallied 12, lead the Dartmouth attack. The Big Green owns a share of first place in the Ivy League, equaling Harvard with a 2-0 record.

Dartmouth keeper Tori Parrott leads the defense and has a shot to save percentage of .606 percent.

Men's crew sinks Trinity

By defeating Trinity College this past weekend, the University of Massachusetts crew team recaptured the Mason Cup, held by Trinity over the past year.

Both the men's and women's Varsity teams won, the men edging Trinity by one second, 5:39 to 5:40. The women had it a little easier, winning their contest 6:43 to 6:46.

A victory by the Second Freshmen and the Women's Novice (by an incredible 30 seconds) sealed the victory and the Mason Cup.

The crew team's next contest is this Saturday, where they will race against the Coast Guard at home.

Liability focus of discussion

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

The director of legal services for the Massachusetts Teachers Association will be speaking today about recent court actions, including the Yvette Henry Case, which have raised questions concerning liability of teachers in court cases.

George Shea will be speaking at 3:30 p.m. in room 1101-02 of the Campus Center about whether members of the academic community can be sued because of grades, letters of recommendation, evaluations and reports of committees on which they serve.

Two recent cases will be discussed by Shea. One will involve the controversy surrounding the special report on the Yvette Henry case, commissioned by the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate and compiled by the Committee on the Status of Minorities.

In that case, questions have risen as to whether or not members of the committee can be sued for libel for its findings on whether or not the University violated the civil rights of Henry, a former UMass student who was arrested and charged with setting two fires in Crampton House, a dormitory beset with 18 fires in the fall of 1983.

Questions concerning the behavior of administrators and police just before and immediately after her arrest prompted the faculty senate to ask the Committee on the Status of Minorities to examine the events of the case and make recommendations to the rules committee of the senate.

That report was leaked to the Collegian and printed in its entirety in the newspaper, Feb. 28. One of the reasons the rules committee of the senate gave for not releasing the report immediately was the question of libel and whether or not members of the committee could be sued.

UMass Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey was quoted in the Daily Hampshire Gazette several weeks ago and said the report came very "close" to libeling members of the University administration.

Another case Shea will discuss will be the recent Supreme Court decision that said it was legally permissible for teachers and administrators to search lockers and personal belongings of students who are suspected of engaging in criminal activity.

That ruling came from a New Jersey court case in which a high school student sued because school officials searched her pocket book without a search warrant and found marijuana.

Senate in limbo over whether to allow Coors

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

A motion that the Student Senate veto the ban of Coors beer made by the Board of Governors will not be voted on until next week.

The motion scheduled for last night's agenda, was ruled out of order by senate speaker John Ruddock.

The student senate had 15 days to consider opposition of the BOG motion and they didn't do so in that time. Last night's motion came after the 15 day deadline, senator Chris Sullivan said.

The BOG's decision to "recommend to the Campus Center administration discontinue the sale of Coors beer because of the company's reported union breaking and discriminatory practices" was made on March 28. The motion to veto made by senators Bob Griffin and Craign Mc Dermott, was submitted on April 12.

The motion, if approved, would have forced the BOG to reconsider the Coors decision, BOG member Bob Cohen said.

Mc Dermott said "the motion was made because, 'I've talked to a lot of people and basically they think its ridiculous. Banning a beer because of the owner's politics that happen to be objectional to the members of the BOG, is misrepresentative of what the student body believes."

Mc Dermott also brought up a motion that would put the question up for referendum where student support could be assessed.

The second motion could not be voted on because of a lack of quorum. Only 41 senators were present and 47 were needed for quorum. However, the referendum motion will be placed on next week's agenda.

Mc Dermott predicted referendum results "will show support for not banning the beer."

Member Mark Friedman said the BOG decision was not a ban but a recommendation to the Campus Center.

"Our judgement was that our constituents supported the egalitarian principles that we were upholding in our decision, which represents not only the students of the university but also the official policies of the university," he said.

After discussion for 45 minutes, the Senate also voted to place an American flag at the right hand of the Speaker's podium.

Neil Mc Cabe, a senator from said the decison is "just one more step to making this a more mature assembly."

Former student government co-president Rick Patrick spoke in opposition to the motion saying, "We are here for students; to represent students and nothing else. I think it's totally unappropriate that these flags are put here."

Barbeque, bands for seniors

For graduating seniors, the hour after the last scheduled final exam means free entertainment and a meal of barbequed chicken and ribs but no alcohol as a part of this year's Senior Day.

Invitations that will be mailed out this week will serve as tickets for the event that begins at 1 p.m. and ends at 5 p.m. on Thursday, May 23 by the Campus Pond.

The area will be fenced off for the event and no bottles, cans or kegs will be allowed on the site. Entrants will be checked at the gate and escorted off the property if found with alcohol.

"We're trying to change the tone of the event, trying to make it classier" by not allowing alcohol, Judy Gagnon of the Student Activities Office said.

The entertainment will be provided by two bands, Barrence Whitfield and the Savages, and Bill "Wildcat" O'Halloren. The Savages are a rhythm and blues act from Boston, and O'Halloren is an experienced Pioneer Valley performer. The bands were chosen by a panel of graduating seniors.

"We're trying to change the tone of the event, trying to make it classier" by not allowing alcohol.
—Judy Gagnon, Student Activities Office

The event is not exclusive for seniors, however other students will be charged for the barbecue. Gagnon expects 2,500 people to attend. Seniors should bring their invitations because it is their proof that they are entitled to a free lunch. The barbecue will be prepared by University Food Services.

No rain date has been set, and no plans are being made for one, so if it rains on May 23, then seniors will be going home disappointed.

March will 'Take back night'

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

As many as 2000 people could take part tomorrow in a "Take Back the Night" rally organized by several University of Massachusetts student groups in an attempt to voice their discontent over violence against women.

Heidi Holland, one of the coordinators and member of the Student Center for Educational Research Advocacy (SCERA) said the Amherst march will begin tomorrow at 5:30 p.m. on the steps of the Student Union and will travel down North Pleasant, Triangle, and East Pleasant streets to the Amherst Common where a candlelight vigil will be held.

Holland said the march is "an effort to create a less violent and oppressive community and a more just society." She said the concept of "Take Back the Night" originated in England in the 1970s when women organized rallies to protest the lack of safety in their communities.

"The rally is meant to re-educate women and men on the issues of rape, battering, incest and a male-dominated society," she said, adding that "although the march may not prevent these things from happening, it may cause

Central America policies are reminding Kerry of Vietnam

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Reagan administrations's plans for Central America look very similar to the way the United States got involved in the Vietnam War, two senators who are Vietnam-era veterans said yesterday.

Sens. John F. Kerry, D-Mass., and Tom Harkin D-Iowa, released a study by the Institute of Policy Studies that claimed the Reagan administration had misled, deceived and lied to Congress about its activities in Central America. They were joined at a news conference by Rep. Norman Minetta, D-Calif.

"Those of us who are Vietnam veterans see very real analogies between what happened in Vietnam and the administration's policies in Central America. What we see is a replay," said Kerry, a decorated Navy officer in Vietnam who later became a leader in Vietnam Veterans Against The War.

Harkin, a Navy pilot who ferried crippled aircraft from Vietnam to Japan, also urged his colleagues to remember the lessons of the Vietnam War.

"This study demonstrates again a president is relying on deception, distortion and duplicity to garner support for an unpopular and controversial policy of intervention in an underdeveloped country," Harkin said.

Both men said they were concerned the administration's policies eventually could lead to U.S. troops being called upon to fight in Central America.

Kerry and Harkin were scheduled to leave today for a trip to Nicaragua to talk to officials there.

Kerry said Congress should turn down a Reagan administration request for $14 million in aid for "contra" fighters against the Nicaraguan Sandinista government because to approve it would be to approve the president's policies.

Discovery fails in rescue attempt, $84M Satellite becomes space junk

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) - All the planning, rehearsal and makeshift tools went for naught yesterday, as Discovery's astronauts failed to awaken a sleeping $85 million satellite and had to abandon it as useless space junk.

The effort concentrated on bringing the space shuttle close and tugging on a lever suspected of causing a total power failure on the Syncom satellite. That was done, but still the satellite did not respond.

Astronaut Margaret Rhea Seddon twice brushed the shuttle's mechanical crane against the satellite and hit the master switch with a handcrafted "flyswatter" tool.

"We have now proven it wasn't the lever arm," an official said later.

Ms. Seddon had only six minutes to accomplish the task, because after that the satelite could not be positioned properly for its mission to provide Navy communications. When the period was up, Mission Control ordered the shuttle to leave.

Mission Control watched the tricky operation on television and it was carried live by Cable News Network.

The satellite will continue its unproductive drift around Earth for years. Officials said it was premature to talk about retrieving it, the way two earlier failed satellites were brought home by a shuttle crew.

Reagan may compromise on Nicaragua aid

WASHINGTON (AP) President Reagan, threatened with defeat of his plan for the release of $14 million in aid to the "Contras" in Nicaragua, indicated yesterday he might be willing to accept a compromise on the issue, House Democrats said.

"He said there is room for negotiation," said Rep. J. Roy Rowland, D-Ga., following an Oval Office meeting with the president.

And another participant, Rep. Roy Dyson, D-Md., said, Reagan "is obviously willing to do some compromising. I think that is evidence he doesn't have his votes."

But Democratic House members said the president discussed no details of any possible compromise and indicated no intention to reduce the amount of the $14 million, which calls for humanitarian assistance to the Contras during a cease-fire.

Most of the criticism of Reagan's proposal has centered on a trigger in which the aid turns tomilitary assistance if the negotiations between the Contras and the leftist Sandinista government break down.

Meanwhile, there were also efforts on Capitol Hill to find a compromise which would allow Reagan to escape the first major congressional defeat of his second term.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. said Democrats are considering an alternative to Reagan's proposal under which the United States would provide Red Cross assistance to Central American refugees.

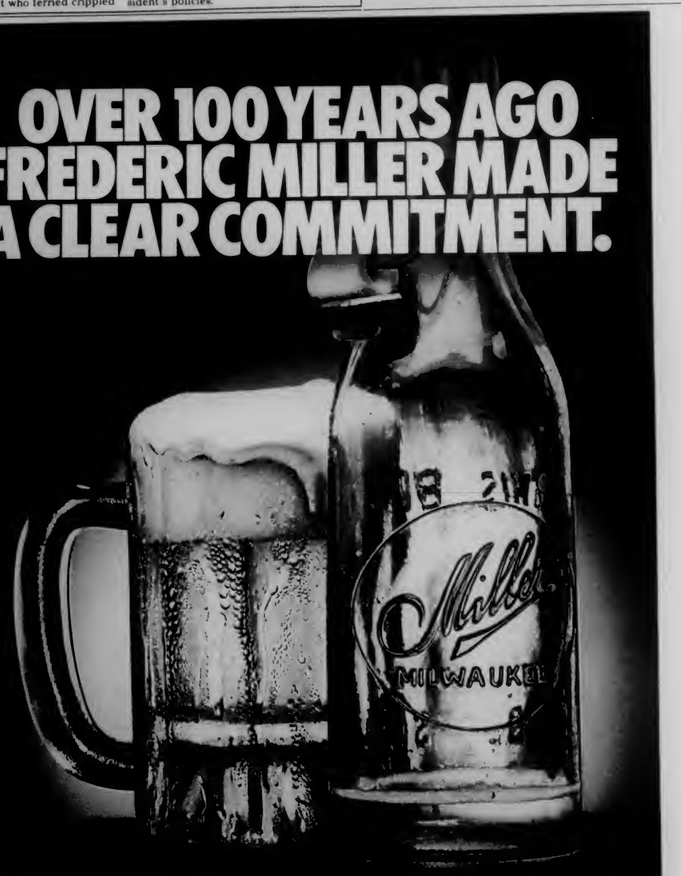
OVER 100 YEARS AGO FREDERIC MILLER MADE A CLEAR COMMITMENT.



To Quality. To Purity. To America. And That Tradition Continues...

When Frederic Miller came to America from Germany, he wasn't much different from any other newcomer.

Like millions of others, he saw in America a golden opportunity... to bring his brewing skills to their peak, using the finest resources in the world.

Frederic Miller made the most of what America had to offer. He made the best beer he knew how to make, using the finest grains and hops, the purest water.

And to show America the quality and purity of his beer, he insisted on putting it in clear bottles.

A lot has changed since Frederic Miller's day. But a lot hasn't.

Miller still uses the finest ingredients and brewing skills. It contains no additives or preservatives.

And Miller still comes in the same clear bottles.

For the same clear reasons.

Faculty Senate to vote on crisis aids

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

Spurred by its special report on the events surrounding the arrest of Yvette Henry, the Faculty Senate will vote today on proposals designed to aid the University in dealing with a crisis situation.

The motions include that policies be developed to be implemented when non-University law enforcement agencies become involved with on-campus investigations, that the duties of the Dean of Students Office be clarified, and that sensitivity training and crisis management be available for all campus security.

The proposals are the result of recommendations made by the Faculty Senate Committee on the Status of Minorities which compiled the report on Henry and found evidence of civil rights violations.

The senate will also discuss two proposals for new programs. The first would create a Department of Social Work and a Master's degree in Social Work within the Social and Behavioral Sciences.

"The new program would produce more than mere clinicians," Irving Howards, a member of the committee which developed the proposal said. "It would produce people who are aware of the world around them."

"Howards said the program is "desperately needed" in the state. "We need a program which combines theory and practicum to serve the public sector."

The second proposed program is the creation of a doctorate in music. Charles Bestor, head of the Music and Dance department, said the present faculty would be sufficient to carry the new program.

Libraries may lose affiliation

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

If future funding for the Goodell and the Tower library is not increased, both may lose affiliation with the Association of Research Libraries, which rates academic libraries according to their size and yearly expenditures.

An annual report by the Faculty Senate Library Committee states that losing the affiliation would "affect the University's standing in any rating of graduate programs, as well as the University's general position among other universities."

Richard Talbot, director of libraries at UMass, said the libraries face losing eligibility because, "our peer institutions are outspending us."

Talbot said the library has suffered a steady decline in the Association's annual index, slipping from 44th place to 86th among 104 libraries in 1984. At its current rate of decline, the University would risk losing its standing within the next four years, Talbot said.

The report states that the financial needs of the library are "critical," citing a bill for periodicals, which was due in October but went unpaid until March.

Prof speaks on Holocaust

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

The violence and widescale genocide accompanying the Holocaust of World War II Nazi Germany was a joint result of life conditions of the time and characteristics of culture, a Univeristy of Massachusetts professor said last night.

German life after W.W.I was horrible. A great chaos was caused by inflation, revolution, economic depression and political disputes between communists and the rising Nazi party, psychology professor Ervin Staub said in a lecture titled, "Creating Enemies and Victims: The Psychological Basis of Genocide and War and of Pro Social Alternatives."

"Hitler gained tremendous influence. He offered a movement, a leader (and) an ideology to which people could come and give themselves over to," Staub told a crowd of about 40 in Thompson Hall.

Staub said there were three cultural predispositions that led to Nazism. German children were taught that Jews were the killers of Christ and were parasites; Germans developed a tremendous respect for authority and Germany, under Hitler became a monolithic, uniform culture.

"We all tend to be ethnocentric," Staub argued. "The Germans seem to have done this to a great degree. They took a great pride in German culture, art, music. It was difficult to accept they lost (W.W.I), so they took on an attitude of being stabbed in the back by the Republicans, the Social Democrats and the Jews."

UMass professor Ervin Staub.

Staub said that people have a tendency to create differentiations between groups of people. People tend to categorize people as "us" and "them" and discriminate against those who have values, tastes, customs or ideals different from their own. "Religion," he said, "is a big result of differentiation and identification."

Staub urged a pursuance of "prosocial change" which begins with child rearing. He said parents should teach children about other kinds of people, cultures, religions, customs and other things that distinguish humans from one another.

"We must learn how we can evolve as cultures, as societies and as human beings that can live together," Staub said.

Staub has taught at Harvard, Stanford and, since 1971 here at UMass. His books include The Development of Prosocial Behavior in Children, and Positive Social Behavior and Morality. The talk was sponsored by the Institute for Advanced Study in the Humanities.

Cape needs summer workers

By DANIEL WHITE
Collegian Staff

Students looking for summer jobs can find them aplenty on Cape Cod, Leonard Healy, a media coordinator for the Cape Cod Summer Job Bureau said.

Healy said the tourist industry on the Cape "virtually exploded in the past few years," causing a shortage of workers. The result is that jobs such as washing dishes now pay $8-$9 an hours, Healy said.

The main area of personnel shortage is in tourist-related industries such as restaurants, hotels, and lifeguards.

"Housing can be a problem, but more and more employers are providing it and others at least know of housing in the area," Healy said. He said many students come down in groups and rent a cottage to help defray costs.

Laura Tomasetti is a UMass student who has worked on the Cape for the past few summers.

"It's fun. It's a good time," she said. "The UMass population down there is incredible.

She suggested starting to look for a job there as early as February and establishing personal connections there.

John Howard, a senior in hotel, restaurant and travel administration who has spent the past four summers in Cape Cod, said, "Initially it is hard (to find work) but once you get to know people it gets easier. It's all who you know."

He said housing is expensive but not hard to find if one starts looking early in the season.

The job bureau publishes a directory three times every spring listing jobs available on Cape Cod for the summer. The directory also includes applications, a section on available housing listed by town, and a map of the area. The directory costs $3 and is available from the Cape Cod Summer Job Bureau, Box 594, Barnstable, Mass. 02630.

Students investigate landfills for hazards

By DANIELA WATERMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Three landfill sites in the Amherst area are under investigation by several University of Massachusetts students to determine which sites pose potential danger to the community.

The students, members of the Hazardous Waste Group of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group have conducted preliminary research on landfill sites in Northampton and Sunderland, Dianne Lazarus, the group's coordinator said.

"We haven't come across any cases of blatant abuse yet, but the Sunderland site is located on the Connecticut River and it is still under investigation," she said.

The assessment process used by MassPIRG includes determining groundwater flow and wind direction, locating endangered species habitats, examining private wells and freshwater supplies within a quarter of a mile from the site and visiting the site to look at overall conditions. This is the same criteria used by the Environmental Protection Agency.

Wendy Swart, MassPIRG's student coordinator, said she hopes this investigation will be the first step in "getting these dumps cleaned up."

Earlier this week members of MassPIRG released a report at Springfield City Hall on their projections that hundreds of the state's water supplies may be contaminated from hazardous waste dumpsites.

The report states that:

•local landfills throughout Massachusetts are likely to contain industrial hazardous waste.

•state ratings indicate that 281 out of 699 known hazardous waste sites and landfills pose a high risk to public drinking water wells.

•132 out of 179 landfills in Western Massachusetts alone pose a high risk of contamination to water supplies.

"There are more than 1,500 dumpsites in Massachusetts. We don't know which ones contain hazardous waste, which is why we have to evaluate them first to find out exactly what they contain," Swart said.

The results of these investigations will be used to support a bill filed by Mass PIRG in the state Legislature.

State already regulates waste

By WILLIAM SPAIN
Collegian Staff

A federal law passed by Congress that regulates the disposal of toxic waste produced by small businesses will have no effect on companies operating in Massachusetts because they are already covered by similar state regulations.

According to Craig Goff of the Department of Environmental Quality, "Massachusetts has regulated small quantity generators of hazardous waste since 1982."

The law, which requires that all businesses generating more than 220 pounds of toxic waste a month meet stringent new standards set by the Environmental Protection Agency,was the only major piece of environmental legislation to be signed by President Ronald Reagan last year.

The new regulations could have a considerable impact on small producers of toxic waste, University of Massachusetts health professor Gary Moore said. From now on, no hazardous waste can be dumped in unregulated landfills, he said. Specialized treatment centers will have to be developed and using such centers could be expensive.

"Some funds will probably be assigned to states to develop programs, but consumers will end up paying for disposal of this waste," Moore said. "Certain products and industrial wastes will be too expensive to produce because of the disposal costs."

In fact, the new requirements are such that "some small businesses may not be able to meet the costs at all," he said.

The legislation covers at least 129 different pollutants. These include corrosive, explosive, poisonous or very flammable substances, and the heavy metals arsenic, cadmium and lead. Dumping sites will be required to have leachate collection systems, groundwater monitoring systems, and a reporting system.

Until the new law, all businesses that generated less than 2,200 pounds of toxic waste a month were exempted from the 1976 Resource Conservation and Recovery Act.

Man arrested for car violations

A 22-year-old Connecticut man was arrested Tuesday afternoon in Amherst and charged with operating a vehicle without a license and driving defective equipment, Amherst Police said.

An $800 Gibson guitar and a $162 radio were reported stolen from a Brandywine apartment, Tuesday night. Police said the alleged thief entered through a sliding glass door while the tenants were out.

In another Brandywine dwelling, a $150 portable television and a clay piggy bank containing $100 in change was reported stolen late last night.

Will serve West New England

UMass gets U.S. patent depository

By BRION McALARNEY
Collegian Correspondent

Potential investors in Western Massachusetts no longer have to travel great distances to determine the originality of their creations as the University of Massachusetts has become the second official patent depository in the state, and 54th in the nation.

Located in the Physical Science library, the depository opened this semester and contains detailed information about all U.S. patents since 1965.

"Historically, only one library in each state had this service. For years it has been the Boston Public library in Massachusetts," Eric Esau, head physical science librarian said. "For people out here it meant making a trip to Boston or waiting a week for an inter-library loan."

The depository will serve west and central New England, since Vermont and Connecticut do not have a depository, Esau said.

Patents are issued by the Patent Office of the U.S. Department of Commerce to preserve exclusive rights to an invention, substance, or design.

"If a scientist wanted to invent a new device or compound, he would check the depository to see if it was patented before filing (for a patent)," Esau said.

Attorneys also use the depository to help prepare patent applications and to determine if an invention is "reasonably new or unique," Esau said.

Esau said lawyers from Springfield and Hartford have used the depository as well as graduate students at UMass.

In order to qualify as a patent depository, the University had to acquire all patents from the last 20 years and make them available to the public, Esau said.

The depository now receives current patents every other week, with each shipment containing about 1,500 patents, Esau added.

Esau and his staff will help people find patents by providing them with a subject index, "but we cannot say this (patent) duplicates this invention," Esau said. "That is a legal matter for attorneys."

The process of being granted a patent takes about a year, he said. Patent examiners in Washington research to see if an invention is original, then make the final decision.

Solidarity act ivist will speak about Poland

A solidarity activist, who was recently prohibited from returning to Poland, will speak at 8 p.m. today in room 227 of Herter Hall about his experiences in the communist country.

Seweryn Blumsztajn, who made the international news in February when Polish authorities detained him at Warsaw Airport and then put him on a plane back to Paris, will speak on the Solidarity movement and martial law in Poland.

Born in Poland in 1946, Blumsztajn was arrested in 1965 for political activity. After another, two-year term in prison in 1968-1970 he was blacklisted by all Polish universities except the Catholic University of Lublin , the only non-state university in Eastern Europe.

During the Solidarity unrest, Blumsztajn was one of the founders of the Solidarity press service. He is author of "I'm Going Home," an autobiographical look at his struggle to return to his homeland.

Blumsztajn will speak in Polish with consecutive translation in English. The lecture, sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Department of Slavic languages and literatures, is free and open to the public.

women to come forward and help men educate themselves."

Holland said the rally is meant to "encompass all forms of violence."

"This is not just the issue of putting more lights on campus," she said. "The issue is male dominance and how we should respond to that. The march is just one response."

Speakers at the rally will include Mount Holyoke political science professor Jean Grossholtz, who teaches a course titled, "Sex and Politics: Violence against Women." Chong Amy Yu, coordinator of the Everywomen's Center Third World Women's program and Kathy Alexander, coordinator of the center's Educator Advocate program will also speak.

A demonstration by the Valley Women's Martial Arts is planned.

Holland estimated participation in the rally up to 2000 people, noting that the valley's last "Take Back the Night" march in 1979 in Northampton brought almost 3000 demonstrators.

"We have to show people that these issues are very political and should be public," she said.

Along with SCERA, the march is coordinated by the Everywomen's Center, Women's Leadership Project, Women Against Sexual Harassment, and Men Against Violence Against Women.

Talbot said the library is now operating on 80 percent of its proposed budget. "We are maintaining a level," Talbot said, "but we may fall behind."

"Our funding has not increased in three years, despite inflation," he said, attributing the decrease in funding to the state board of regents of Higher Education.

The University's recommendation for a $1.5 million increase in appropriation for fiscal year 1985 was cut by the regents to $950,000.

"The whole state system is underfunded," Talbot said, "the regents hope that the difference in funding will be covered by the state, making the library dependent on an unknown amount from year to year. It remains to be seen how it will all come out."

THE BIG SHIRT

Remember Claudette Colbert in "It Happened One Night"? In one famous scene, she wore Clark Gable's pajama top, its huge proportions emphasizing her tiny ones. This year we can all imitate Miss Colbert, because a major trend of 1985 is The Big Shirt.

Originated by Italian designers, the big shirt was instantly picked up by fashion leaders all over the world. Here in the states, oversized-shirts appear in the collections of every designer from Clavin Klein to Norma Kamali.

Fabrics range from linen to chiffon to stiff, brightly printed cotton. Smock-like shirts can be worn to the office, and gossamer ones after dark. The style covers up every figure flaw because it covers every figure.

Big shirts have other virtues, too. They highlight a graceful head and pretty hands. And they span two recent fashion directions — the "forward" trend toward androgynous dressings and the "backward" trend to femininity.

Greek 24 hour marathon to benefit multiple sclerosis

By BETHANNE MOSKOV
Collegian Staff

Members of the University of Massachusetts fraternity Pi Kappa Alpha (PIKE), are busy polishing their dancing shoes in preparation for their sixth annual dance marathon to benefit the Chicopee chapter of the Multiple Sclerosis Society, to be held tomorrow.

Ted Silva, co-chairman of the event said, "this marks our biggest effort of the year. No other organization in Western Massachusetts sponsors a fund raiser of this size."

The marathon starts at 6 p.m. tomorrow at Justin Ryans in Amherst for 24 hours. Every three hours the dancers are given a 15 minute break, and after six hours they get a half hour break. Throughout the night, there will be various types of entertainment, including disc jockeys and a hypnotist.

For the past six years the fraternity has raised $60,000 for the multiple sclerosis foundation. This year's goal has been set at $20,000 with at least 45 couples entering, Silva said.

"Last year we raised about $18,000 overall, one person raised $3,000 by himself. This is such a worthwhile cause, most people are willing to donate what ever they can," Silva said.

Each couple is responsible for getting sponsors. The sponsors agree to pay a certain amount of money for each hour the couple dances. The fraternity is also taking donations to help them achieve its set goal.

"Justin Ryans in Amherst has given us the entire place for the marathon. This will be a tremendous help because more people will stop in to cheer on the dancers. Super Stop and Shop is donating all the food plus all the prizes to be awarded for the most money collected, including a first prize trip to the Bahamas,have been totally donated," Silva said.

At this year's marathon, PIKE will receive a Congressional letter of honor and hopes to receive a letter of congratulations from President Ronald Reagan presented by Rep. Silvio Conte, R-Pittsfield, however, this has not been confirmed yet.

"We here at PIKE hope that by having such a fund raiser the local community will have a little more respect for the fraternity system. The attitude of many people towards fraternities is very negative, we are doing something positive to serve the community, and are very proud of our efforts," Silva said.

Donna Clark, the director of the Western Massachusetts multiple sclerosis chapter in Chicopee said, "The money that Pi Kappa Alpha brings in is a big help that we have grown very dependent on. Every year we look forward to working with them because they do such a good job."

Silva said more than 25 couples have entered and about 100 are showing interest. "The dance is just so much fun for both those who dance in it and work to prepare for it."

Multiple Sclerosis is a crippling disease which most frequently strikes between the ages of 15 and 50. It affects the brain and spinal cord causing problems with sight, speech, mobility and coordination. The money that PIKE raises will go towards research, counseling, medical equipment, and patient care.

Members of PIKE, who have been on the campus center concourse all week, will continue to recruit dancers today and urge all interested dancers to stop by.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Hey, play it again, SGA

Cindy Orlowski
Kim Black

For the second consecutive year, the Student Government Association's Budgets Committee voted to not fund the Index, the University of Massachusetts yearbook.

The budgets committee recommended zero funding and will ask the Undergraduate Student Senate to loan the yearbook the minimum amount necessary so that the book's production can begin in the fall. They will also submit a motion to the senate to recommend that the Index charge $15 per copy for the 1986 book.

We find this totally unreasonable. Increasing the cost of the yearbook from $6 for undergraduates and no fee for graduates to $15 is not a smart business move. One cannot substantially raise prices in a year and expect the product to sell well. The Index does not have a marketing staff to enable us to sell the book by direct sales (selling to students before the product is available), and it would take two to three years to implement such a staff and strategy. Also, it is only logical that a book produced by the students and for the students, should be funded by the students. The budgets committee's proposal means that in addition to paying a high Student Activities Trust Fund Fee (SATF), a student will have to pay $15 in order to receive his/her yearbook.

The Index staff has proven itself to be a viable, well-managed RSO. The 1984 yearbook was produced and distributed on time, for the first time in seven years. It is also up for a Printing Industries of America award, given to yearbooks for outstanding graphics composition. The 1985 Index is on schedule with the staff making its deadlines. For these reasons, it is difficult to understand why the budgets committee will not fund a yearbook at one of the nation's top universities.

We are aware of the current problems with the SATF. However these problems are not sufficient excuse for denying funds for the yearbook. The students, especially this year's seniors, emphatically stated last year and last semester that they wanted their yearbook. If we do not receive funding this year, there will be no book next year.

The Index is just as important as any other RSO on campus. The budgets committee does not see it this way. We are constantly having to fight the SGA, and this takes up time which should be spent on the book's production. Yet, the SGA is concerned with the Index coming out on time in the fall. How can we do this and fight for our very survival at the same time?

The Index is your yearbook and we would be proud to manage its production for you. But, we need your help now as we did last year when the 1985 book was on the chopping block. Your support caused a unanimous vote by the senate in the fall which gave the staff the money necessary to produce this year's book. We must have your support again. Show some initiative in letting the SGA know that you want your yearbook. If the senators represent you, the students, and at the same time won't fund the Index, then you aren't making your voices neard. The SGA and budgets committee are seeking the unachievable best of both worlds. They want a yearbook, but they are not willing to fund it. If you do not make your opinion known, you will be the one to suffer.

As the real world turns

Count Ramin Zahed

Years ago, my family and I cherished the incorrect notion that college would make a mature invividual out of me.

Today, I know that unless some divine miracle happens in the next 40 days, I'll remain the same childish imbecile who entered Amherst with a suitcase full of itching powder, toy animals and comic books. I also know that outside the Happy Valley paradise prowls that disgusting monster of reality, waiting patiently to roast little suckers like me as soon as we take off our graduation robes.

The other day, as I was watching two happy dogs mate by the campus pond, I thought, "Boy, I'm going to miss this place, this paradise of academia." Two more months and gone will be the days of buying a cup of capuccino and sophistication for a buck and a half. Gone will be the joy of reading about fraternities and farm animals, SGA candidates and their criminal pasts, and other controversial issues in the Collegian. Where else except UMass can I see that woman with the just-woke-up-pineapple hairstyle? Where else but the Earthfood Cafe can I look at people from the '60s and other lost time periods?

UMass might not have made me grow up, but it sure has taught me a lot. It was in my four-year quest for knowledge, that I learned how to roll in the succulent muddy maze of Southwest on a cold February night. It was here that I learned to sleep with Emily Dickinson in the Amherst Graveyard after a night of Drake intoxication. More than anything else, I learned that no class is more important that catching a few golden rays in the spring air. No midterm is more precious than watching an old Munsters rerun on TV, and no Christmas tradition more enjoyable than sliding down the frozen Orchard Hill slope on a tray stolen from the D.C.

Thoughts of escape from the yuppie world often visit me as I lie sleepless on my tiny futon in Amherst. I think of marrying Meryl Streep and settling down in a chic duplex in Northampton. Yet, PVTA bus rides are too harsh for Meryl. I dream of joining the Peace Corps. Then I remember that I can't survive without Haagen-Dazs coffee ice cream and double-feature theatres. All my hopes eventually turn to dust.

So, here I stand, as that hideous professional world out there gets ready to whack the living daylight out of me, and I look back at my idyllic days at UMass. Suddenly, a Joycian epiphany hits me on the head. Yes, I resolve to spend this last month sipping apple juice and feeding pop corn to the fat campus ducks, for the last time in my life. Mature or not.

Time for Coors to listen

Alex Zucker

Last Thursday the Board of Governors made a bold and courageous decision. We decided to stand by our resolution to discontinue the sale of Coors beer in the Campus Center/Student Union Complex.

This decision was not a hasty one. Both sides of the issue were presented at the meeting and board members were given ample opportunity to question and debate the motion to rescind our motion of two weeks earlier. Virtually everyone at the meeting (including the Coors representatives) agreed it was well organized and the issues were addressed fairly. Unfortunately, everyone does not agree on the outcome of the process.

People have said the BOG does not have the "power" to make decisions such as these for the entire student body. This is ridiculous. The board has the power to decide how student money is spent in the CC/SU just as the SGA senate has the "power" to decide how student money is apportioned to the various RSOs on campus. To people who ask, was the student body consulted before the board made its decision? I answer, yes. Members of the board had two weeks to consult their constituency on this issue and I trust they did so. (I certainly expect the senate membership to consult their constituencies before making their annual budget decisions).

To people like Peter Dow who condemn the BOG as "leftists" for opposing political diversity on this campus, I say we did not move to discontinue the sale of Coors beer because of the Coors family's contributions to political groups. What the owners of Coors do with their money is their own business and is protected by the United States Constitution. How their company treats blacks, women and gays in its hiring practices, etc., is everybody's business and Affirmative Action and the Equal Employment Opportunity Act support this claim.

Another point of interest: Whether or not you buy a Coors beer in the Blue Wall, you are still paying for it because the Campus Center spends student money to purchase the beer for sale. Politics is not the issue here, human rights is. I think most students would agree they do not want their money to go to a company which has failed to display concern for human rights. The Board of Governors is pressuring Coors by sending them a message in the language they understand best: Money talks, and when Coors sees that their New England market is at stake, you better believe they will listen.

An 'intellectual' numbing instead

Stephen C. Erickson

"Peace" activist Dr. Helen Caldicott, visiting our University last week, treated those in attendance with a large dose of emotional rhetoric, some humor, and a few, mostly misleading facts. Claiming that Americans ignore the threat of nuclear war, Caldicott said we are engaged in "psychic numbing." She would engage us in intellectual numbing instead.

In her presentation, Dr. Caldicott spoke of the failings of American democracy in not enacting the kind of disarmament agenda she endorses. Ironically, her prescription for ending the threat of nuclear war amounts to the exploitation of democracy itself. To quote Caldicott in what was practically her opening statement, "The weapons Reagan is building make nuclear war a certainty," followed immediately by, "Now let me talk about the medical consequences of nuclear war." She proceeded to do so at length and in gorey detail with very little in the way of substantially elaborating on her ridiculous comment about "Reagan's weapons." Someone ought to inform the good Dr. Caldicott that we're not debating the merits of nuclear war, for we seemed to have reached a consensus which even the president shares in, that the destruction of civilization would be a bad thing. Caldicott says, "We don't use democracy." Clearly, frightening people into embracing unilateral disarmament would be using democracy very poorly.

Although she spoke extensively about American democracy, Caldicott failed to note that the people in the Soviet Union is a repressive society with a system of government which gives morality not the least consideration and is willing to employ any tactic necessary to further its goal of world domination. In any discussion of U.S. - Soviet relations, the nature of the Soviet system must be understood.

A major contention of Caldicott and other peace activists is that the Soviet Union is only trying to match U.S. military might. This is clearly not the case. Since the late sixties, when the United States unilaterally halted its principle arms build-up, the Soviet Union has engaged in the greatest arms procurement and deployment in peace time history, independent of U.S. reductions in defense efforts. The Soviet build-up has far and away exceeded their defensive needs. If this trend is allowed to continue, then the world will become so destablized as to render nuclear war a greater possibility of occurring.

The Soviets do not share Carl Sagan's view of a nuclear winter nor Caldicott's view of peace. If they did, they would not have responded to the U.S. unilateral nuclear freeze that occurred in the seventies with a massive arms build-up. As Soviet General Major A.S. Milovidov has written "Marxist-Leninist's decisively reject the assertions of certain bourgeois theoreticians who consider nuclear missile war unjust from any point of view." "The struggle for peace," said Chief of Soviet General Staff V. D. Sokolovsky, "and for gaining time presumes above all, the steady strengthening of the military might of the Soviet Union and of the entire Socialist camp." In other words, peace to the Soviets is nothing but preparation for war, or the violent overthrow of capitalist society which Soviet ideology necessitates.

"Peace" activists like Caldicott approach the present arms "race" simplistically. They assume every missile in the world would be launched simultaneously in a nuclear war, and would be aimed at population centers, which is not necessarily the case. In predicting nuclear winter they ignore the missiles that will be destroyed on the ground, as well as the probable Soviet disbelief in such theories. The nuclear arms race is too crucial and complex an issue to be addressed with shallow emotional rhetoric. The second world war was caused by an unwillingness of the western democracies to understand the implications of Nazi Germany's arms build-up and its expantionary goals, as "peace" activists used the same tactics then as they do today. We must all remember, that those who don't learn from history are doomed to relive it.

Stephen C. Erickson is a Collegian columnist.

A shared responsibility

Becky Lockwood

On April 9, Dr. Helen Caldicott explained nuclear war to me. She defined "limited nuclear war" and "Star Wars" in terms accessible to a student and layperson. I realized that the United States does have the potential to be the greatest democracy in the world—provided we live long enough to understand and utilize it.

I do want to live though, and I want to grow to see my grandchildren and my friend's grandchildren thrive in a healthy environment. Thirty thousand hydrogen bombs (and an additional 17,000 requested by Reagan) don't seem conducive to the healthy atmosphere I envision. The fact that 10 hydrogen bombs are built a day adds to my agitation. Perhaps I will be discredited as a foolish "leftist" trying to "save the world" and maybe I am such a fool for believing in peace, justice and humanity, but I have very selfish reasons for doing so—I want to live and not be vaporized and I want to live free from harassment or fear.

The notion that our secretary of defense believes we can "prevail" in a limited nuclear exchange increases my fears instead of decreasing them. Considering that the earth's atmosphere would be destroyed by the detonation of perhaps a third of the weapons we now possess makes me question the credibility of such a belief. Even the semantics of defense makes me question the stability and humanity of our leaders—"peacekeeper" is a ludicrous name for a missile that will destroy the "peace" (and existence) of billions. Similarily, the fact that our 32 Trident subs are programmed to hit "soft targets" (cities) because their computers are not "sophisticated" enough to destroy inanimate missile silos threatens the soundness of the "good democratic principles" our leaders claim to support.

In November of 1979, we were 13 minutes away from initiating World War III, due to a computer error. I was only a child of 14, but somehow I was given a second chance. It has taken me six years to realize it, six years to understand and realize that I do not want to die. I now comprehend the responsibility I have to this country—to help it achieve its potential. Since the United States holds the fate of the world in its hands, I am responsible for acting and convincing our government to "save the world," not from meager threats of Marxism or immorality, but from annihilation. I will do what I can on April 20 in Washington to convince our government that people do want to live and are willing to sacrifice some of their time to help the U.S. achieve its potential. Every citizen of this country shares equally in this responsibility, whether for grandiose "leftist" reasons or the mere "selfish" desire for a long and healthy life.

Becky Lockwood is a UMass student.

Letters to the Editor

Why is there so much fear for the future?

I am not afraid of death; everyone must die. I am not afraid to bring life into this world; my children to be have a right to live, a right to struggle with whatever lies in the future. I am not afraid to grow old; growing old is a beautiful part of living. What then, disturbs me? I'm afraid I'll never have a chance to grow old. I'm afraid I'll never even be old enough to have children. I'm afraid of not having a future.

Why? I ask myself, "Why am I so afraid? How could there ever be a nuclear war?" After all, the people who have the power to start a nuclear war are still yet only people—people like me, who enjoy life, who have families, who care about mankind, who want a future. Is this possible that this is not so? Is it possible that these people are so engrossed in world power and global dominance that they have departed from the emotions of every normal human being? Is it possible that these people will rape the world of humanity, while looking upon people as mere statistics? Is it possible that these people would seriously consider sacrificing millions upon millions of people in order to win a nuclear war (a war where there are no winners anyway). If it is possible, then these people are not like me.

My only hope for a future is that these people are in fact, like me; that these people in power remember what life is and what it means to be a human being. My only hope to grow old is that no matter what happens, these people in power will never rationalize killing millions and millions of people. My only hope to have kids is that these people in power will maybe think about their own kids' future and the future of their kid ' kids. Even though it is reasonable to think that these people in power are just like you and I, I still ask myself, "Why am I still afraid?"

The unimaginable reality

David McNair

I am not Jewish, I'm a mongrel really. A bit of the Indian blood, which was wiped off our landscape, races through my veins; a small bit of German blood, which our country spread around cities such as Dresden, circulates; and my ancestors, having been sea merchants, probably gave me the blood of several other races.

You might say I represent the memory of those who witnessed atrocities throughout history. I could speak for the slaves that died during 4,000 years of Greek and Roman rule, or the Japanese killed by atomic bombs, or black Americans beaten to death for standing around being black. Atrocities, although the idea of remembering them is a source of infinite hope, are often forgotten and certainly nothing new to the dead I presume to represent. Atrocities have happened again and again and still contunue today - South Africa, Nicaragua, Ethiopia, Cambodia, etc.

Most atrocities have one distinguishing characteristic: The use of unimaginable terror. So profound, so horrific, are most atrocities that they escape being understood or imagined by those that have not witnessed them. We who have not experienced terror assume atrocities cannot, and should not, happen while "good" people like ourselves are in the world. Instinctively we become shocked by such obvious evil, convinced that a magical "good" force will always prevail. But how can we prevent atrocities if we can't imagine terror? Having no understanding of death, or terror, I cannot really imagine atrocities happening to me, and therefore cannot really imagine them happening at all. I can tell myself repeatedly that such things do happen, but, honestly, I cannot (or don't want to) imagine the reality. Those of us who have never witnessed terror and consider ourselves "good" are the ones most likely to deny the present possibility of atrocity until it is too late. Our innocence might be both a shelter from the grim reality of terror and the ultimate cause of atrocity.

Maybe we should admit that the use of terror has always been a characteristic of humanity, that its strength lies in our inability to imagine it and that atrocities like the Holocaust are always possible. Perhaps we should not only remember the atrocities of others and of ourselves, but be prepared to confront the reality of terror when someone tries to use it again.

Think of their potential contributions

It is interesting to note that the article on the Nazi Holocaust was on the front page next to an article on Bill Baird and abortion clinics. During this week of remembering what happened in Germany 40 years ago, it is well to think of the 15 million unborn children who have been aborted in the United States since the Supreme Court decision and about what contributions these 15 million potential United States citizens might have made to our country had they been given the gift of life.

The Pilobolus touch

Pilobolus Dance Theatre
At the Fine Arts Center
Thursday, April 11

ROBIN ROSIELLO
Collegian Correspondent

Without question, Pilobolus Dance Theatre combined acrobatic strength with humor, technical skill and unique choreography to create one of the most uplifting dance experiences of the semster.

Pilobolus was formed in 1971 as an outgrowth of dance classes with Alison Chase at Dartmouth College taken by students without concentrations in dance. Two of the original founders as well as other members of the company propelled each other and the observer into a new spatial dimension on Thursday.

The opening piece, Ciona, set a precedent which was developed throughout the evening. Trust was the key word as dancers threw, lifted and fell on each other. The score by Jon Appleton along with beautifully executed pyramids and slowly fluttering arm movements evoked images of a Jacques Cousteau underwater expedition. As these motions created new and visually-attractive shapes, small, humorous hand gestures and facial expressions revealed a strong rapport and sense of playfulness between the dancers.

Performed exquisitely by Carol Parker, the following composition, Moonblind, combined this sense of playfulness with sensuality. In a long, flowing dress Ms. Parker circled the stage with provocative hip movements and suddenly found her body in strange, super-extended configurations.

Continuing with the medieval Tarleton's Renaissance, the passionate and haunting Elegy for the Moment and the lighthearted balancing act by Michael Tracy in the Solo from The Empty Suitor the audience was exposed to a series of images and emotions.

The concluding piece, however, proved to be even more powerful. The tribal Day Two featured scantily-clad dancers moving as a true ensemble rather than as individuals to the funky and pseudo-African music of Brian Eno, David Byrne and The Talking Heads. As they arranged themselves in a horizontal line while rocking backward and forward, the image of a slithering snake came immediately to mind. Primitivism and communal behavior was further illustrated as the dancers crawled under the floor into a single, central mound and broke through as if shedding a skin. The most innovating aspect of the evening occurred at the end of Day Two when the dancers took their curtain calls by sliding across the water-covered stage - a fun, "clean" conclusion to a unique and refreshing concert.

Love of common people

Moon on a Rainbow Shawl
At the Hampden Theater
This Thursday and Friday

By ROBIN ROSIELLO
Collegian Correspondent

Moon on a Rainbow Shawl, the final spring production of the New World Theater is a balanced presentation of humor and tragedy. In spite of its grim, realistic portrayal of the effect of poverty on certain inhabitants of Trinidad, there are light and redeeming moments.

Set specifically in a courtyard between two small unpainted huts owned by Mr Mac, a comical dirty old man, Moon on a Rainbow Shawl concerns the interaction of the tenants of the two small dwellings. Rosa is a young orphaned woman whose motherly advice comes from Mrs. Adams who lives with her husband and daughter next door. Across the way is Rosa's lover Ephraim and Mavis, attractively played by Karen Morales, a prostitute who provides much of the comic relief.

The lives of these people have one common denominator - the need to escape from poverty-level living conditions. Lee Hammond as the ambitious and troubled Ephraim effectively displays his frustration with the life he leads and even though he displays sensitivity toward Rosa he leaves her and their baby in search for a better life. Although Anna Ibe as Rosa could have possibly performed more intensely the scene where she and Ephraim have their final battle, she and Ingrid Askew as Mrs. Adams superbly enact a tear-jerking scene as they mourn the loss of their men.

Cat's Eye
Directed by Lewis Teague
Starring Drew Barrymore and James Woods
At the Mt. Farm Cinemas

By DANIEL CALNAN
Collegian Staff

Only a mind like Stephen King's could have come up with such an outrageously entertaining screenplay as the one he wrote for Cat's Eye. King blends several of his most often used themes from his novels and short stories, and the result is 90 minutes of unusual but enjoyable celluloid.

The story line is made up of three separate episodes in the life of a nomadic and somewhat mystic cat, who instinctively shows up in the middle of the most bizarre of circumstances. The first adventure that our four legged hero takes us on, involves a business man, (James Woods), who is determined to quit smoking. He signs up for therapy at Quitters Inc., hoping that they might be able to help him kick the habit. He soon discovers that the methods that are used by this agency are any thing but conventional. Each time Woods falls off the wagon, something dreadful will happen to his family. Woods is under 24 hour surveillance to make sure that he doesn't light up. In one scene, we see the result of Woods' lack of will power as his wife is tortured with electric shock.

In the second story, and perhaps the scariest, we meet a high rolling Atlantic City mobster who has discovered that his wife has been cheating on him. The gangster, played by Kenneth McMillan, kidnaps his wife's boy friend, (Robert Hayes), and forces him to walk the entire ledge around McMillan's skyscraper penthouse. If Hayes is successful, then he receives his freedom. The suspense in this scene can truly be felt, and I noticed there were a lot of white knuckles clutching at the arms of the chairs in the theater.

The third and perhaps most imaginative story is about a little girl, (Drew Barrymore), who has to deal with the unfortunate fact that there is a tiny monster living inside her bedroom wall. This sword weiling, swashbuckling little troll can out-Gremlin any thing Spielberg has come up with. He looks hysterically nasty in his little court jester's hat, and is the masterpiece of special effects man Carlo Rambaldi. If Errol Flynn were short, green, lived behind walls and ate parakeets, this would be him.

Director Lewis Teague does a superb job, and each scene seems to visually convey King's ideas and themes. The cast is outstanding, and includes James Woods, Alan King, Kenneth McMillan, Robert Hayes, Drew Barrymore, and Candy Clark.

The idea for Cat's Eye is not an orginal one. Following in the tracks of The Twilight Zone movie, T.V.'s Trilogy Of Terror, and H.B.O's The Hitch Hiker series, Cat's Eye leads us from one bizarre situation to another. However, it is King's personal style and wit that sets this apart from the others. King even mocks himself in the first episode, where a frantic James Woods is trying to watch The Dead Zone on cable. After his frazzled nerves finally get to him, Woods screams, "I can't watch this! Who writes this crap anyway?" We also get a glimpse of Candy Clark lying in bed reading Pet Semetary.

I enjoyed this movie, though there were many people in the theater for whom it was just too weird. That's understandable. If you appreciate the style of Stephen King and if you lust the bizarre, then Cat's Eye is for your eyes.

The Beaux Arts Festival begins today with an exchange show from 6-8 pm in Wheeler Gallery. Tomorrow, there will be demonstrations by the craft shops on campus, face painting, sidewalk drawing, dance performers and music by a Brass Quintet between 12 and 5 pm near the Campus pond. That evening, the Valley Big Band will be performing swing for costumed revelers from 9 to 1 am in 1009 of Campus Center. Come one, come all and enjoy the beaux arts.

ARTS

live wire
by Peter Wissoker

This another bad week for monopoly capitalism. Actually a little bit of communication between the powers with large amounts of capital might have been helpful. There are so many things to do tonight it's pathetic, and that's just in the arts. There are tons of lectures as well.

First and foremost and soldout besides, Joan Armatrading will be at the Fine Arts Center tonight with Cook the Book. You can try getting tickets at the door. It turns out that Armatrading is about three times as popular in England as she is here, so we're actually hosting some kind of rock and roll phenomenon here.

Swiss Harpist Andreas Vollenweider will be playing tonight at the Calvin Theatre. Vollenweider's music is very soothing; kind of fantasy, quest music. Famous all over Europe, Vollenweider is beginning to make it big here. It's said by a certain Collegian Editor to be great mood music.

Cajun star, Buckwheat Zydeco, will be at Pearl Street tonight. His motto: Ils sont partis. His Music: Zydeco: Cajun party music, a sort of fast rhythm and blues using accordians to a great measure and sung in French.

Eddie Murphy will be at the Springfield Civic Center also tonight. You can take your floor out to eat or try and buy a ticket from a scalper, it will cost about the same. Circle will be playing at Sheehan's.

Pianist/composer/flautist Scott Cossu, very big on the national jazz charts (His latest Windham Hill album is currently number 1) will be at the Iron Horse for two, what should be very special, shows. And of course that is also tonight.

Friday night is surprisingly simple. There will be a Dadavision presentation featuring the Headwrappers at the Northampton CETA building. Great event, great location.

Saturday night the Coyote Sisters will be performing at the Iron Horse, in their area debut. Shannon will be singing at 10 p.m. at the Valentine Annex at Amherst College.

Sunday night Los Lobos will be at Pearl Street. This will probably be one of the smallest places to see them in the country and they should be really interesting in concert. Second City will be at the Iron Horse for two shows of driving comedy.

If you want to do a good deed, you can go to the Agora in Hartford starting at 2pm on Sunday for a heavy metal benefit for Ethiopia. The show entitled Metal for Meals features six heavy metal bands. Good morals, good fun. Monday night Suzanne Vega will be playing at the Iron Horse. It's the night her album is going to be released so everyone gets a free glass of champagne.

Trivia Question: No one answered last weeks question correctly. The instrument on the first Talking Heads single that was so unusual for them was a trumpet. You can win a copy of Ronnie Gilbert's new album if you can name the four original Weavers. Bring your answer down to the Arts desk with your name and telephone number.

The pied piper of electric harp, Andreas Vollenweider performs tonight at the Calvin Theater.

The Cayote Sisters make their first New England appearance on Saturday at the Iron Horse.

Thompson thrills

Richard Thompson
At the Iron Horse,
Friday, April 12

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

Richard Thompson's show at the Iron Horse Monday night reinforced the probability of the accuracy of the Peter Principle. This principle which states that one rises in an organization according to the level of one's incompetence, was reflected in Thompson's relative obscurity in the music world and the relative intensity/rocked-outedness of the show itself.

Thompson is a lithe guitar player who plays with the skill and speed of someone who has been playing for a long time and is self-consciously changing his style.

Backed by a four piece band he played songs from his most recent albums and from the record he did with his ex-wife Linda, including the title song 'Shoot Out the Lights.' The music is really fast riff-based rock and roll and slow ballads. They played a song by Sandy Denny called 'John the Gun' which despite Richard's protest to the contrary was almost as good as the original. Despite some excessive background vocals the band was quite competent, and guitar player Clive Grayson, from the band Any Trouble, integrated well with Richard and actually played quite a bit like him. The only problem with the concert, which by the way was great to see in such a small place, was the material written and performed by the band members. Although they are competent players and singers, they just don't make it as songwriters especially when compared with Richard Thompson who is so able to manipulate the emotions.

Von Bulow more relaxed

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) - When Claus von Bulow arrived in Rhode Island 11 days ago for his attempted-murder retrial, he politely but steadfastly declined comment as reporters mobbed him at the courthouse, restaurants and his hotel.

But as the lengthy jury selection process has reduced the massive media corps to about a dozen reporters, von Bulow appears more relaxed and now regularly chats with news people covering his retrial on charges he tried to murder his wealthy wife.

Unlike the first days when he stayed in a courthouse waiting area off-limits to the public, the Danish-born socialite now often loiters in corridors during breaks and while waiting for his attorneys after a session.

Commencement 1985

10:00 a.m., Saturday, May 25

All Candidates
There is no Commencement rehearsal for degree candidates. Candidates should assemble by school/college at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium no later than 9 a.m. graduation morning, May 25, 1985. Signs will be posted indicating schools, and Commencement Marshals will issue specific instructions and distribute programs. Upon signal, candidates will follow the Commencement Marshals to the assigned areas and be seated.

Candidates will receive diploma covers from the deans of their school or college. Diplomas will be mailed when all processing has been completed. Please be sure the Registrar has your correct permanent address.

Who is Eligible to Participate?
Undergraduate degree candidates who anticipate completing degree requirements by the end of the calendar year 1985. Questions concerning academic status should be directed to the Records Office, 213 Whitmore, 545-0555.

Master degree candidates who have previously submitted the Degree Application Form by April 30, 1985 to the Office of Degree Requirements stating the intention to complete all requirements. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, 545-0024.

Doctoral degree candidates who have completed all degree requirements by April 30, 1985. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, 545-0024.

Faculty
Faculty and staff should assemble at the SOUTH end of the stadium on the gravel between the Facilities Building and the stadium wall. Faculty will be part of the processional and will be seated immediately in front of the candidates from each school and college.

Parents and Invited Guests/Plan to Arrive Early — Space is Limited
Since the Commencement Exercises are open to the public and guest seating is without reservation, parents and friends should plan to arrive early to ensure good seating.

Handicapped Seating
Viewing area for the handicapped will be located on both sides of the stadium on the eastern and west end walkways. Since seating is limited, it is requested that only one person accompany the handicapped guest.

Invitations
There is no limit to the number of guests who may attend the ceremony and tickets are not required. Each student will receive a packet of six formal invitations.

Caps, Gowns, and Hoods
Undergraduate and Master Degree Candidates
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available at no charge (on presentation of an I.D. and announcement of the degree earned and the department awarding it) at the Textbook Annex, May 6-May 24, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

On Commencement Day, May 25, caps, gowns, and tassels may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the SOUTHWEST corner of Alumni Stadium.

Doctoral Degree Candidates
Doctoral caps, gowns, tassels, hoods and invitations will be available only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, April 29-May 24, Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. through 5 p.m., upon clearance by the Office of Degree Requirements. On Commencement Day, caps, gowns, tassels, and hoods may be obtained after 9 a.m. at the NORTHWEST end of the stadium (on the gravel area).

Doctoral candidates who plan to participate in the Commencement ceremony must have a hood. Each candidate's name will be announced over the stadium sound system and two officers of the University will drape the hood on the candidate's shoulders. Doctoral hoods can be purchased only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, at a cost of $30. (Five College Doctoral Hoods will be available at $42.95.) Doctoral hoods may be rented through the University Store at a cost of $10.

Rentals
Academic apparel for this year's University Commencement may be rented through the University Store. All faculty members are urged to place their orders as soon as possible. THE LAST DAY TO ORDER IS FRIDAY, MAY 17. Payment must be made at the time of order and there will be no refunds if apparel is not used. Academic apparel may also be purchased. For further information about rentals or purchases, please contact Connie Szelewicki at the University Store, 545-2619.

Accommodations
Many area motels are already booked for the evenings of May 24 and 25. A limited number of rooms in University dormitories will be available for relatives and their guests for the nights of May 24 and 25. Please contact the Conference Services Office, 918 Campus Center, (413) 545-3400, as soon as possible to request a form to register for dormitory housing. These forms must be returned with full payment to Conference Services no later than May 3, to guarantee your dormitory room reservation.

Food Services
Coffee, soft drinks, and donuts will be available at rotundas on both sides of the stadium toward the North.

Commencement Ceremony Schedule

9 a.m.	Robing for Commencement Appropriate signs will be displayed. Graduates should line up according to their school or college.
9:30 a.m.	Seating of Graduates
10 a.m.	Procession starts
12 noon	Ceremony ends

Parking
Parking at the stadium is extremely limited. Vehicles will be directed to several parking lots located nearby and shuttle buses will provide transportation to the stadium. Buses will return to the lots immediately following the ceremony.

Traffic Assistance
To aid the traffic flow at Commencement, radio station WTTT-AM (1430) will broadcast traffic reports throughout the morning. Please tune in as you approach Amherst for the best route to the ceremony.

General Information
Medical facilities will be located in the Facilities Building at the south end of the stadium.

Public telephones will be located on the west side of the Facilities Building.

Restrooms are located at both ends of the Facilities Building at the south end of the stadium.

Viewing areas for those confined to wheelchairs will be located on both sides of the stadium, on eastern and western walkways.

For additional information, contact the Office of University Relations, 390 Whitmore, 545-2560.

Please remember alcohol is not permitted in the stadium.

middle third of the game," Major Hams, the Army coach said. But the military academy rallied late in the contest.

UMass scored the game's first two tried, the first coming as Goose Gosselin dashed over the line and the second coming as UMass dove on a loose ball in the end zone.

Two penalty kicks by the Army and a single boot by UMass made the score 15-6 before Army rallied behind two tries, one from each center.

The visitors took a 17-15 lead. UMass had a chance at victory in the final minutes but Keith Kelley's kick sailed wide. UMass, playing its toughest opponents, is 0-3 thus far this spring.

Zoo Disc, the UMass Men's ultimate frisbee team traveled to SUNY-Purchase this past weekend and raised its season's record to 10-0. More importantly it faced the strongest teams in the Northeast Region (New England and New York) and stayed undefeated.

Players of the week Gary Flaxman and George Durney led UMass with relentless defense, which has come to be the trademark of Zoo Disc. In Saturday's games, Zoo Disc trounced Stoneybrook College and a Boston semi-pro team 15-8 and 15-4 respectively. In the last game on Saturday, UMass played rival Cornell (ranked second to UMass in the region). After taking the half 8-6, UMass' conditioning and depth was too much for the Ivy Leaguers, and UMass went on to win 15-10.

Sunday saw Zoo Disc stomp Albany 15-6 in the quarter finals. In the semi-finals, Brand X, a New Jersey based semi-pro team, confused UMass early with an experienced zone defense, and Zoo Disc fell behind 4-1. However Zoo rallied to take the half 8-5 and the game 15-10.

UMass squared off Cornell again in the finals late Sunday.

"With Saturday's relatively easy victory over Cornell, we let down and did not adequately prepare for the final game," recalled offensive stand-out Steve Smith. Zoo Disc was down 8-5 at half and 14-9 late in the 15 point (win by two) game. However, a few inspirational pleas by field coordinator Gregg Novick lit a fire under UMass, and they scored seven unanswered points to win 16-14.

Senior Robert Barnicle summed it up best, "We've come a long way together over the years, and this year especially, we've worked hard. We certainly proved we are for real this weekend."

Zoo Disc continues on the road to Palo Alto, where the National Collegiate Championships will be held May 25-27, travelling to Cornell this weekend to meet more stiff competition. "It would be nice to win all our games," said four-year starter Alex Sokoloff, "but our goal is a National Championship."

Undefeated Gazelles crush Dartmouth

Big Green shutout 13-0, Women climb to 6-0

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Staff

Bunny Forbes three goals and three assists led the fifth ranked, 6-0, University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team to a 13-0 victory over previously undefeated Dartmouth College, 4-1, yesterday at NOPE field.

It took the Gazelles 26 seconds to take the lead as Pam Moryl took the opening face-off and drove the ball deep into Dartmouth territory, drawing three defenders to her. Moryl then passed the ball to a wide open Mary Scott who put her shot past Dartmouth goal keeper Tori Parrot. This quick start came much to the liking of UMass coach Pam Hixon.

"We try to come out and get the first score," Hixon said. "On the home field you can do that but we always try to come out hard and fast."

Scott's goal marked the third time this season that UMass has put a point on the score board within the first minute of play.

But after the initial score the game took on the seesaw style of play that would continue throughout the game. The two teams traded possession for the next twelve minutes with both mounting threatening attacks but coming away with nothing.

Unfortunately for Dartmouth, they continued failing to capitalize on scoring opportunities while UMass put the ball in the net with the proficiency that has enabled the Gazelles to total 71 goals in their six games. In four previous games Dartmouth keepers had only allowed 30 goals.

Defensively UMass displayed a similar command of skills. With Andrea Maccani and Kris Koeot playing well in the backfield, the Big Green only managed to take 17 shots. Of these UMass goalie Debbie DeJesus saved seven in registering her first shut out of the year.

Following the period of back and fourth play UMass pulled away from the visitors as it scored six goals in the next nine minutes. Forbes scored her first goal of the day unassisted to start the run. Minutes later Becky Bekampis took a Liz Schueler pass and made it a 3-0 ballgame.

Forbes scored the following two goals for UMass. The first came at 7:07, unassisted and the second came on a pass from Moryl. Schiller scored on a penalty shot at 5:41 then a Forbes to Scott combination made it 7-0 two minutes later.

Dartmouth then pulled Parrot from the net and Maureen Towers took over. Not a team to settle, UMass tallied one more goal with :03 to go in the half when Forbes took a Moryl assist.

In the second half UMass stuck quickly again with three goals in the first two minutes. Bekampis scored the first and Moryl the second with Ginny Armstrong tallying her first goal of the contest at 23:10. Later in the game Schueler and Armstrong put in the Gazelles' final two scores.

The UMass defense got help from some poor Big Green shooting throughout the game but especially in the second half as Dartmouth attackers put several balls off the goalposts and failed on numerous penalty shot opportunities.

The second half was not as clean as the first due to some inconsistent officiating that had both coaches storming up and down the sidelines. But it was still a UMass game all the way.

"I don't think the officiating affected the outcome but it did affect the flow of play," Hixon said. "We let it disrup us a little but I think we learned a lesson today to keep playing our game and maintain our poise."

"Overall I was very pleased with the game. Our double teams worked well on defense and Kris Koeot played very well for us today. Offensively we executed our game plan very well. When Pam Moryl was double teamed she passed off well and that's what we needed. Everyone contributed," Hixon said.

Gorillas knock off Hofstra

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. - The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse got itself back on the winning track with a 13-8 win over Hofstra, last night, led by junior Tom Lukacovic, who scored four goals.

Goalie Gerry Moreau, who suffered a shoulder injury earlier this season, played for the first time in four games and stopped four shots. UMass, now 3-4, outshot Hofstra by a 26-11 margin.

Matt O'Reilly scored two goals and six other players chipped in one apiece as UMass broke the game open in the second period.

Down 2-1 after one period, the Gorilla's outscored Hofstra 5-1 to take a 6-3 halftime lead. UMass led 10-6 after three quarters.

The lacrosse team will be in action again Saturday at 2 p.m. at Yale.

The UMass baseball team faces Boston University in a doubleheader today at 1 p.m. at Lorden Field and the softball team hosts highly-touted UConn for a doubleheader at 2:30 p.m. at NOPE.

Men's golf gets by Amherst, Zoo Disc wins, rugby defeated

Golfers now 9-1, await States

By PETER ABRAHAM

The University of Massachusetts men's golf team defeated cross-town rival Amherst College for the first time in recent history to run its record to 9-1.

The men, in a match at Hickory Ridge against the Lord Jeffs, Providence College and Holy Cross, combined for a 378, eight strokes better than Amherst.

The Friars were third at 386 with Holy Cross last at 413.

Senior Charlie Ross was the medalist, shooting a 74. Amherst's Curt Burgess also carded a 74.

Sophomore Bill Conely had a 75 for UMass, sophomore Tim Smith shot a 76 along with junior Alan Vorce. Junior Jim Ryan was a 77.

"It was a good team effort against a team that usually gives us problems," UM coach Jack Leaman said. "It was our best score in sometime and shows our steady improvement. I was very pleased to do as well as we did."

The Minutemen will be at the State Championships today at Stow Acres Country Club. Amherst is considered the team to beat according to Leaman, but UMass should have confidence going into the match.

The University of Massachusetts rugby team lost a 15-6 lead as the Army came back to win 17-15 in action Saturday.

The West Pointers, a highly-regarded side in the East, looked sluggish for much of the game.

Just a few thoughts...

In the words of Billy Crystal (a.k.a. Fernando Lamas), "He was simply marvelous."

The Marvin Hagler-Tommy Hearns fight is being billed in retrospect by experts as one of the best fights of all time and the first round is being called the best of all time. Hearns had the right at the start of the bell. But Hagler showed his true form by battling back and disposing of the "Hit-Man" in round three...The question is not who was the better fighter, for Marvin answered that one, but it is Marvin's future. What else does he have to prove? He has destroyed everyone else in his class and has beaten all the big names.

One solution might be for Hagler to go down to Hearns' weight class and fight again. Although Hagler really shouldn't have to (the champ shouldn't go to his opponents, they should come to him), it would make for quite an interesting contest.

It's round two in the NHL playoffs with some first-round series that would make Chernenko stand up (he's the Russian guy who's dead). Well, it took Montreal one more game than I thought for them to send the Bruins back to The Metro or City Side, or wherever else they drink. That last game was the ultimate. Both Doug Keans and Steve Penney were superb in the nets. But the Habs had that one break...Next up will be Quebec. You thought Friday the 13th was violent? Wait until this war...The Islanders did it again. Just when it looked like they would be bumped off, they did what has never been done before, came back to win three straight after losing the first two. The Flyers played them extremely tough and should take that series.

Billy Smith is something. He is the best clutch goalie in the game while at the same time being the biggest cheap shot artist. Consider this: Against the Capitals, Smith made a save on Mike Gartner. There was a rebound in front of the net and when Smith covered, he saw Bobby Carpenter coming in. Smith, without hesitation, lifted his skate into Carpenter's face. Fortunately, Bobby got out of the way in time. On the street, that is assault with a deadly weapon. But in hockey, it isn't even worth sitting in a box for two minutes.

NBA opening round action should see the Celtics and Lakers cruise perhaps until they meet again...It's too bad that the Celts stiffest competition besides the Sixers, the Bucks, will have to play the Bulls in the first round. I would have liked to have seen Jordan (what a great commercial for his sneakers) go a little further. If the Bulls win, there goes another team that will give Boston a run.

This area finally has class. Yes, batten down the hatches, Hulkamania is coming to Springfield April 24th. Look out.

No more need be said.

UMass Junior Susan Treisman reads names of holocaust victims outloud by the campus pond during a continuous holocaust vigil yesterday.

Vigil stirs painful memories

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

The sleet and cold weather didn't cooperate with the vigil for holocaust victims yesterday, but like the weather, humanity didn't cooperate with the six million Jews who were designated for destruction either.

A 12-hour vigil was held by the campus pond yesterday as part of National Holocaust Memorial Week. Names of holocaust victims were read continuously to "give them an identity and a voice," Rabbi Saul Perlmutter said.

"We have come here to remember, to feel their loss and to read their words," he said.

The names read included 55 relatives and friends of the university community. The names were submitted by student Linda Buck.

"If we read a name every two seconds, it would take 140 days to read all the victims of the holocaust," Perlmutter said.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, who was on campus to honor the polymer science program, participated briefly in the vigil by reading several of the victims' names.

"As people and as a society in Massachusetts, we care very deeply about the holocaust," Dukakis said. "We care about the Cambodian genocide because we have learned what the holocaust means and how terrible genocide is."

Six candles were lit in memory of the victims killed more than 40 years ago.

Selections of poems, letters and books written by victims and survivors of the holocaust were also read.

Stacey Roth, Student Government Association co-president elect, read a proclamation written by Dukakis.

"The memories of all the victims, of all those who resisted and of all those who were vigilant can never be forgotten, nor can the present-day implications of the holocaust be ignored," Roth read.

A passage from The Diary of Anne Frank was read by Hillel co-President Dana Grossblatt. "We Jews must show our feelings. Surely the time will come when we will be people again and not just Jews," she read.

Dukakis praises polymer research

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts is a "center of excellence" in the field of polymer science research, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis told University officials, faculty and state industry representatives yesterday at Memorial Hall.

Joined by Economic Affairs Secretary Evelyn Murphy and Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey in honoring the achievements of the polymer program, Dukakis said, "The work being done (here) is making UMass a leader in this technology."

"I view this center of excellence as being the model for other centers of excellence we're creating in this state," he said.

In addition to the UMass polymer facilities, centers of excellence are being established in marine science, photovoltaics, and biotechnology, Murphy told the gathering.

"The one thing we have going for us is we have a terribly vibrant economy," she said. "If you think about what we're doing, you can see that in these areas we have the intellectual edge."

Murphy said that 85 percent of manufactured products in the U.S. have some form of plastic component to them and that this enormous market for plastics will be utilizing polymers more and more.

Polymers are large, formahle molecules made from smaller ones which create lighter, stronger, and longer lasting metals and plastics than were previously available, said chemistry professor Richard S. Stein.

Low technology polymers are used for plastic soda bottles and freezer wraps, while high technology polymers are used for medical sutures, clamps, artifical skin, and

UMass offers blood test to find AIDS antibody

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Department of Public Health has designated the University Health Services as one of nine state testing sites to look for an antibody associated with acquired immune deficiency syndrome, a disease known as AIDS.

The free blood test for the antibody ATLV III is controversial because people who test positive might not have AIDS (or ever contract it), Dr. David Kraft, executive director of Health Services, said.

"It's a scary thing. We don't know if people who have these antibodies have AIDS," Kraft said. "We don't know what the antibodies mean except that they (people) shouldn't donate blood.

"Many people test positive, especially in sexually-active communities where the highest risk is," he said. "It's a scary thing to know that you might be carrying around antibodies that suggest you might have a disease with no cure."

AIDS, which can be fatal, is a disease that destroys the body's immune system. Although the disease can be contracted through contaminated blood transfusions or be sexually transmitted, "there are people who have been exposed to it but never develop the antibody," Kraft said. While the number of heterosexuals diagnosed with AIDS is on the increase, the majority of people diagnosed with the disease are gay men and or bisexuals. Others who have contracted the disease include intravenous drug users, Haitian immigrants and people who have received contaminated blood transfusions.

The test is funded by the American Red Cross and the Department of Public Health and can only be administered after calling a Boston hotline number to ensure confidentiality, Kraft said.

"The test is not for general offering, it's not a clinical test," he said. Health Services will test people twice a week who have made appointments through the Boston office, he said.

The test, which was recently approved by the Food and Drug Administration, is also used to test the blood of potential donors.

Kraft said the American Red Cross is afraid that many people will go to blood banks and pretend that they want to give blood so that they can be tested for the antibody. He said the test sites will keep people from clogging up the blood banks and preserve confidentiality.

"When people give blood they routinely test each sample for the antibody," Kraft said. "People who show up positive are identified and their features are taken down so they can't give blood anymore."

However, people who have their blood tested at Health Services will be identified by a number rather than giving their name, Kraft said. If their blood has the antibody then they will be warned not to donate blood.

The government currently estimates that more than a million people may be infected with the AIDs virus. Scientists say that people infected with AIDS will probably carry the disease for life.

"The gay community is discouraging the test because there's no treatment available and there's no direct correlation between

Faculty senate creates plan to stop future rights violations

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

A year and a half after an incident that made national headlines and brought multi-million dollar court action against the University of Massachusetts, the Faculty Senate yesterday passed resolutions designed to prevent such an incident from occurring again.

The resolutions are a result of a report by the Faculty Senate Committee on the Status of Minorities which examined the events surrounding the arrest of Yvette Henry, a former UMass student charged with setting one a series of fires in Crampton House in the fall of 1983.

The report, which found evidence of civil rights violations in the arrest, made several recommendations to prevent a similar situation.

"These motions serve to express the very real concern of the faculty," David Booth, chairman of the senate rules committee, said. "We'd like to clarify and prevent another situation."

The motions request that the administration develop a policy for situations when a non-University law enforcement agency is involved in an on-campus investigation. The Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said that although he thought the motions were appropriate, "a non-University agency does report had questioned the role of the FBI and the State Fire Marshal's Office in connection with the investigation of Henry.

not always have to ask for permission to enter campus."

"There is no way a criminal act can be shielded from action by civil authorities," Duffey siad. "Few campuses enjoy autonomous freedom."

The second motion, which passed unanimously, asked for a clarification of the role of the Dean of Students Office in its responsibilities to students.

The report had questioned the behavior of several staff members of that office and stated that they "did not act properly with respect to Henry."

The final motion requested the enlargement of sensitivity training and crisis management for all personnel likely to deal with such crisis situations.

Dennis Madson, vice-chancellor for student affairs, said the motions "provide an area for articulation and confirmation of existing policies."

"These policies also give us a chance to examine if we should be doing more," he said.

Duffey said he "believed the motions appropriately express the concern of both faculty and administration in clarifying appropriate behavior in such situations."

Entrepreneur Ted Turner announces bold takeover bid for CBS television

NEW YORK (AP) - Cable television pioneer Ted Turner unveiled a brash bid yesterday to take control of CBS Inc. without spending any cash and against the resistance of the nation's top-rated television network.

Industry analysts, who disagreed on the exact value of the multibillion-dollar proposal, voiced skepticism that Turner could pull off such a coup.

CBS has vowed to remain independent but had nothing to say about Turner's announcement. However, the Atlanta-based broadcaster, yachtsman and baseball club owner won immediate support from Fairness in Media, a group associated with Sen. Jesse Helms, R- N.C., which had sought to buy enough CBS stock to "become Dan Rather's boss."

Turner Broadcasting System Inc. "has no plans to make fundamental changes in the CBS television network," Turner told reporters yesterday. "CBS will seek to improve the quality, objectivity and diversity of CBS programming."

He refused to answer questions.

"I want to make it very clear that Turner Broadcasting is acting on its own and has no connection with any ideology or other group in this transaction," Turner said.

If Turner succeeds, it would be the second change of ownership among the nation's big three networks. Last month, American Broadcasting Cos. and Capital Communications Inc. announced that they would merge in a friendly $3.5 billion deal. That plan is still subject to approval by federal regulators and shareholders.

Turner said he is offering a package of stock and notes in his own Atlanta-based Turner Broadcasting System Inc. for each of CBS's 29.7 million shares outstanding. He said that he is offering no cash and that he has no partners.

His Cable News Network said those securities would be worth $175 a share, making the deal worth about $5.2 billion. Wall Street analysts put lower values on the deal, one as low as $120 a share.

CBS stock rose $5.25 a share after the announcement but then retreated and ended the day at $106.12 1/2, down $3.62 1/2 from Wednesday's close on the New York Stock Exchange. Turner Broadcasting's common stock was unchanged at $24 in over-the-counter trading.

The announcement, which ended weeks of speculation that Turner would bid for CBS, said his offer was conditioned on obtaining 67 percent of CBS's stock.

Turner's bid, which also requires approval from the Federal Communications Commission, was outlined in documents submitted to the FCC, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the antitrust division of the Justice Department and the Federal Trade Commission.

CBS spokeswoman Anne Luzzatto said only, "Once we have evaluated the material, CBS will inform its shareholders of the merits of Turner's proposal."

Turner said that if he obtained 67 percent of CBS's stock, he would take control of the board and then merge his company with the network, with the same terms offered to the shareholders who had not tendered their shares.

Meanwhile yesterday, Turner filed lawsuits in federal courts in Atlanta and New York.

The first seeks to rescind a recent change in CBS's bylaws that makes it more difficult to call a special shareholders meeting. Under the new bylaws, Turner would have to wait until next spring to seek control of the board.

The second action seeks to prevent the use of a New York disclosure law as a roadblock to his bid.

Turner met with analysts for about an hour to discuss his intentions.

"He was forceful, typical Ted Turner, confident, brash," said Ed Atorino, an analyst at the securities firm of Smith, Barney, Harris Upham & Co.

Growing college unrest hinges on divestment

(AP) - More than 1,500 anti-apartheid protesters, including 400 longshoremen, rallied yesterday at the University of California at Berkeley, while hundreds of activists staged sit-ins at Columbia, Cornell and Rutgers.

"We're going to stay out here until our demands are met," student John Fox said at the Berkeley protest against South Africa's policy of racial diacrimination. "We want the administration to know that we are not giving up."

Students, who have been demonstrating for nine days, want university regents to sell $1.7 billion invested in companies doing business in South Africa. Their rally on Thursday came as other students were leaving campus for spring break.

"You're an absolutely beautiful sight," state Assembly Speaker Willie Brown told the demonstrators outside Sproul Hall.

The rally was joined by 400 members of the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union who were in the San Francisco Bay area for a convention.

Across the nation in New York City, the sit-in at Columbia University entered its third week yesterday, amid complaints that the South African government was harassing two black South African students.

The students have been blockading the front doors of the classroom and administration building since April 4 to protest Columbia's $32.5 million in investments with American companies doing business in South Africa.

About 1,000 demonstrators rallied at Rutgers University in New Brunswick, N.J. yesterday, prompting a telephone call from Rev. Jesse Jackson, as some 70 students camped in the student center courtyard.

Bhopal aid donated

NEW YORK (AP) - Union Carbide agreed yesterday to finance a $5 million emergency aid program for victims of the Bhopal chemical disaster, but said a "fair global settlement" of the victims' lawsuits would do more good.

Carbide acted two days after U.S. District Judge John F. Keenan publicly urged the corporation to spend $5 million to $10 million as a show of "good will" without waiting for court action to be resolved. Such a donation, Keenan said, would not imply that the Danbury, Conn.-based corporation admits any liability for the Dec. 3 accident.

According to Indian government figures, some 1,700 people were killed and up to 200,000 were injured when a cloud of methyl isocyanate gas escaped from a pesticide plant and drifted through a slum area of Bhopal.

The New Delhi government sued Union Carbide last week, adding to more than 60 other suits against the company that were brought by private American attorneys on behalf of accident victims. All the cases have been placed before Keenan for at least preliminary action.

Correction: A story on page 1 of yesterday's Collegian incorrectly stated that no alcoholic beverages will be permitted at this year's "senior day," which will be called the Chancellor's Reception for Seniors. Alcohol will not be served but students can bring their own beverages, in cans only.

Outlawed Polish press thrives, speaker says

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Despite being outlawed by the Communist government, the underground press in Poland is as strong as ever according to a solidarity activist banned from his homeland who spoke last night in Herter Hall.

Seweryn Blumsztajn said the Polish government has had to "tolerate" an increasingly strong underground press because popular demand has been so great it would be virtually impossible to rid that East Bloc country of anti-Communist press agencies.

"The underground press is the most important part of the solidarity movement. (In Poland) it is hard to find toilet paper and yet hundreds of tons of paper are found for (underground) publications. Newspapers are coming out more now that at the time of legal solidarity," he said.

Blumsztajn made international news in February when Polish authorities detained him at Warsaw Airport and then put him on a plane back to Paris. He said he wanted to return to Poland after three years in Paris because "It's natural for a person to want to go back to his homeland."

Despite not being in Poland during the time martial law was declared Blumsztajn said he has been in constant contact with members of the underground press and showed several recent publications coming from Poland.

"Paper has become an important symbol of solidarity. The underground printer is no longer an oppressed printer living in an underground basement...he earns a very good living."

These "entrepreneurs" have aided in the "professionalization" of the underground press, he said.

The underground press gets much of its economic livelihood from western countries, and exist in Poland because "there is a market" for an alternative source of information, Blumsztajn said.

Solidarity activist Seweryn Blumsztajn.

"In Poland there is universal knowledge of printing techniques. It is all aimed at filling the gaps of what is published by the government," he said.

The underground press has changed since the time just before martial law and now. It began as an "mobilization for society." The press back then documented the confrontations between people and government. Today the press is much more philosophical in nature, he said.

"One could argue that the battle of culture with authorities has been won. (The press') semi-legal status is the best guarantee that the process of tolerating the press is irreversible," he said.

Valley activists to raid Washington

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegina Staff

About 200 Pioneer Valley activists will join thousands of others this weekend in Washington D.C. to lobby, protest and rally against U.S. policies in Central America, the arms race and apartheid in South Africa.

Members of UMass groups, including Peacemakers, the Radical Student Union, and the Western Mass. Latin American Solidarity Committee will join the American Friends Service Committee, a Northampton based group, and head to Washington late tonight hoping to arrive tomorrow morning in time for a rally in front of the White House, Peacemakers member Jonathan Spaulding said. The rally will later move on to the Capital building.

Spaulding said the message to be presented to President Ronald Reagan and Congress has four main themes: a freeze and reversal of the nuclear arms race, stop military intervention in Central America, oppose government and corporate support for South Africa apartheid, and create jobs by cutting the military budget.

Most UMass participants will return tomorrow, but 27 members of Peacemakers will remain through Monday to lobby in congressional offices, Spaulding said. He said there will also be "large civil disobedience action at the White House."

"We want to shatter the illusion that Reagan has a mandate for his present militarist policies and if legal channels don't prove to be effective, people are willing to use civil disobedience and extra-legal means to halt those injustices," Spaulding said.

"People that are doing civil disobedience know they are putting themselves into a rough situation," he said. "They want to put their bodies on the line and confront the injustices directly."

Peacemakers plan to sell bus tickets to Washington from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. today on the Campus Center concourse.

and polyethylene fibers stronger than steel, he said.

Low technology polymer products require large amounts of petroleum additives and Saudi Arabian countries are working in this area, Stein said. If U.S. research continues on the high technology polymers, this country could get an international edge in this field of work and production, he said.

"By the year 2000, we must be able to compete in the world market," Duffey said. "We've got to be better educated...and we've got to reaffirm the values of caring for future generations and quality."

Polymers will reduce energy consumption and our dependency on alloys from the Soviet Union and South Africa and in doing so will prepare for a stronger and more secure future in this state, Duffey said.

The University has been allocated $6 million for a proposed new polymer facility by the state legislature and is trying to obtain an additional $14 million from private industry funding to construct that facility, Stein said.

The University now has one of the three best polymer departments in the U.S. and one of the five best in the world, he said. With continued effort and funding, UMass could become the best polymer facility in the country, and, perhaps, in the world, Stein said.

BOG rejects red carpet into Coors country

By VICKI SPAGNOLI
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors rejected a motion to send three of its members to the Adolph Coors Co. in Colorado to speak about the board's decision recommending the termination of Coors beer in the Blue Wall last night.

BOG chair, Jane Donohue, who ruled the motion out-of-order, said, "The board has considered the Coors issue twice and we've had lengthy debate. I don't think a trip sponsored by Coors would give people a different perspective than they already have."

Board member Frank McGovern, who made the motion was "disappointed" with the decision. He said the Coors Co. invited the board to send three members to the Coors brewery in Golden, Colo. following the board's decision last week.

McGovern said the Coors company would provide travel expenses and overnight accomodations for the three students. He said the three students would have the opportunity to meet with company representatives and President Peter Coors; and would also tour the Coors' brewery and speak with brewery employees.

"The motion wasn't out of order," McGovern said. "Jane is personally against Coors as a whole, and I feel she brought her personal feelings into the decision. I'm really annoyed with that."

McGovern, who said he is quitting the board, will not appeal the decision.

William Harris, director of the Campus Center administration, reaffirmed the administration's earlier decision to sell out the Coors inventory.

Prof wants less pesticides

By STEVE HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts professor Ronald J. Prokopy last night urged for a more "ecological approach" to pest control in order to avoid unnecessary contamination from pesticide use.

As part of the Chancellor's Lecture Series in the Campus Center, Prokopy said, "We experience so much unwanted death with pesticide use but have as much or more problems with pests as before we used them (pesticides)."

The need for short term profits resulted in farmers using pesticides which quickly eliminated insects and weeds but encouraged development of "superpests" that covered pesticide elements such as nitrogen into nutrients, said Prokopy who received a 1982 Guggenheim fellowship.

But while these pesticides are only temporarily effective, they are contaminating rivers and farmland, Prokopy said, because pesticide manufacturers must produce chemicals which kill more than one pest in order to make a profit.

Advertisers have helped create a "pestaphobia" which has made household insects seem a nuisance and established a standard that fruit be unblemished, Prokopy said.

"Why should an apple that has been blemished from surface feeding of an insect be any less appealing," he said.

The outlook may not be as bad as it would indicate because with a better understanding of technology and insect biology, "we can deal with pests in a more illuminated way," he said.

Professor of entomology Ronald J. Prokopy.

In 1978, Prokopy began on a strategy of minimal pesticide usage which was implement in the state that year and is now used as a model worldwide.

The world is heading "towards a more gentle, ecological approach of controlling pests and thus towards a world of less pesticide," Prokopy said.

A 50 percent use in Massachusetts orchards has resulted from Prokopy's efforts, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said. Duffey presented the Chancellor's Medal to Prokopy, "in recognition of our esteem, gratitude and appreciation."

Faculty guarded from libel lawsuits

Faculty who sit on University committees cannot be easily sued for findings which may go against the best wishes of administrators, the director of Legal Services for the Massachusetts Teachers Association said yesterday.

George Shea told members of the Massachusetts Society of Professors in the Campus Center that faculty asked by some organization of the University to report on a specific topic are protected from possible libel action because of Mass. Gen. Law Chapter 258 Sec. I and II.

The Law states if a person is acting in a role specifically set by the educational institution and asked to submit findings, then those findings, if truthful, cannot be used for the basis of a lawsuit.

Shea said one of the biggest problems in libel and slander cases is "how little people know about libel and slander" when those terms are used all the time.

Libel he defined as a defamatory statement about someone in writing to a third person. Slander is the same, only instead of being in writing it is spoken.

Recent court rulings have called into question when faculty can be sued in such instances as libeling people in letters of recommendation, evaluations, tenure decisions, and reports of committees on which they serve.

A better understanding and knowledge of the definitions of libel and slander can help faculty when faced with difficult decisions.

Knife wielding man robs Amherst gas station

A man wearing a ski mask and wielding a knife robbed an employee of Ed's Power Test gas station on 203 Triangle St. Wednesday night taking between $250 and $275.

Amherst police said the attendant was closing the station around 9 p.m. when the man confronted him, brandished a knife and demanded the money from the cash register. He took the money and fled on foot.

The attendant said he had locked most of the money in the station's safe.

Police described the suspect as a white male, 5 feet 8 inches tall, in his mid 20s. He was wearing a dark ski mask and a nylon blue jacket.

Police said the incident is still under investigation.

In UMass police news:

●A 20-year-old Amherst man told police he was "just playing" after he was stopped Wednesday night for driving to endanger, police said.

The man lost control of his car on North Pleasant St. and then passed three cars in a no-passing zone, police said. He was fined $125 and his license was revoked.

●Three cars were towed from campus parking lots after police recovered three stolen parking stickers Wednesday afternoon.

"Since there is no effective treatment for AIDS, I hope that this is the first step towards identifying the agents that cause AIDS," he said.

Health Services will be taking blood tests until June. Kraft said the Department of Public Health may extend funding for the free service depending on the response.

There are no known cases of students who have AIDS at UMass, Kraft said.

An exhibition of handcrafts from rural Guerrero, Mexico will be held at the Augusta Savage Memorial gallery in New Africa House, U Mass all day Friday, April 19.

The crafts on display will include stone and wood carving, amate bark paintings, and accomplished shell and exotic wood inlay bracelets and earrings. Some inexpensive pieces will be available for sale. A photo display of country craftspeople and village scenes will also be presented.

The exhibition is provided by the Latin American Resource Center of Brattleboro Vermont and Alia, a direct-marketing enterprise on behalf of Third World artisans.

A reception will be held at 6 pm at memorial Gallery. George Godeck a long time resident of rural mexico and recently returned from northern Guerrero state will make himself available to anyone interested in questions of campesino culture, cottage industry handcraft, or developmental economics.

Take back the right

According to the FBI, a woman is beaten every 18 seconds by her husband.

It is established that one out of every three women will be raped in her lifetime.

Sixty-five percent of all women who are raped know their assailant.

One out of five women in a college relationship is abused by her partner.

One out of 20 natural fathers is incestuously involved with his daughter.

The five college area is not exempt from this national epidemic of violence against women and girls. The fear of violence and harassment is an every day occurrence in the lives of women, and this is compounded by racism, classism, homophobia, ableism and anti-Semitism. Furthermore, acts of male violence are condoned by the media and other male-dominated institutions, thus perpetuating women's subordination. We, as women, fear for our safety not only in the streets and public places, but in our own homes. A public response to these acts of violence is long overdue. It is for this reason that women and men in the five college area have organized: "Take Back the Night; Reclaiming Our Lives" a rally and march.

"Take Back the Night" originated in England in the mid 1970s as a public protest against rape. Because the night threatened women's safety, women joined together en masse to "take back the night," to say that we have a right to walk alone, at night in safety. Since then, "take back the night" has grown to encompass many more forms of violence against women and girls such as rape, battering, sexual harassment and incest. "Reclaiming Our Lives" is our own addition to the "Take Back the Night" theme, symbolizing women's strength and energy to empower ourselves and reclaim our lives.

We see this event as an opportunity for women and men to educate themselves and others on the issues of male violence. Please join us in this public protest and celebration tonight at 5:30 p.m. on the south steps of the Student Union Building.

S.E. Chase and Heidi Holland are UMass students.

Our short-term assignment

Patrick J. Sullivan

We say "no" to the contras not because it is pragmatic or sensible to stop further militarization of Central America, although these are good reasons for acting against the latest hoax. We say "no" because we must act on our belief in justice, equality, and peace.

The war for the minds and hearts of you and me has taken a dramatic new turn. To fund the contras in 1985 is for this administration what the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution was for the war in Vietnam.

At this historical moment, a moment framed in part by Holocaust Memorial Week, we can realize that the genocide of the Jews in the '40s was the result of laws and regulations widely publicized in the '30s which denied to Jews basic human rights of citizenship, of economic security, of dignity and well-being. The policy of genocide was built by laws and institutions supposedly healthy, through a step by step perversion of due process and with the consent of the governed.

Today once you and I face what is happening in Central America, the atrocities of the contras against civilians trying to rebuild Nicaragua, how our government wants to restore military aid to the "stinking torture state" of Guatemala, how our government's policy is that of a bully determined to control its holdings, we can then look at the basic plantation politics at work here. This politics of fear and intimidation tells us we are threatened, but the might is right signal does primarily to U.S. client regimes in Central America and to countries like Chile, South Korea and the Philippines.

We cannot afford to be good Germans in the face of the administration's defiant position on contra funding. To stop the war against the country of Nicaragua is to affirm its right to self-determination and our right to a responsible government in the United States. Our government dehumanizes both the people of Central America and you and me by lying to us and seeking our support for supplying repression of basic human rights.

I am deeply convinced that if each of us met and listened to the story of a refugee from El Salvador or Guatemala, or listened to a Nicaraguan who had a relative killed by contra mercenaries, we would mark that event as a turning point and find the means to join the struggle for peace and justice in Central America. We are not talking here about headlines or arguments in words, we are talking about being touched by another human being and, by being touched, finding the energy for action. Undertake your activism where you are now, do not resist by claiming lack of time, and do not expect too much of yourself acting alone. Join others in the cause. Think of this as a terrible crash, many are suffering, and you are indeed nearby and can help.

We have our short-term assignment. Stop the funding of the contras, our government's mercenaries. But such is only the first step in changing course to a more humane foreign and domestic policy, because we understand the arrogance, racism and false security on which the present course is based. We can do better, we have in the past, although fitfully. We are at the historic moment together because of what happened in Vietnam and Iran and Afghanistan and, yes, what happened in Nicaragua in 1979. The South Korean dissident leader Kim Dae Jung said last February: "America has failed. I believe I am a candid friend of your country, even though I criticize mistaken policies, because I love your country. So I don't want to see your country fail any more."

'Other beverages' will be allowed at event

The following is in response to the Collegian article yesterday on the "Senior Picnic" or "Chancellor's Reception for Seniors."

The event will take place from 1 to 5 p.m. May 23 by the Campus Pond. Seniors and guests will be entertained by Barrence Whitfield and the Savages, Bill "Wildcat" O'Halloren and WMUA DJs. In addition seniors will receive a formal invitation from the chancellor. This invitation will also double as their ticket to the barbecue meal. The meal will consist of chicken, spare ribs, potato salad, etc.

Following the policy set by the University and in line with other spring events, only soda will be provided. Other "beverages" will be allowed on the pond lawn with the exception of kegs and bottles.

I hope this letter will clarify any misunderstanding caused by yesterday's Collegian article.

Interpretation of lecture 'missed the point'

The reporter's interpretation of Jonathan Katz's recent talk on the "Creation of Heterosexuality" in the Collegian on April 11 missed the point. First of all, Katz pointed out that the actual title of his talk was the "Invention of Heterosexuality." I emphasize this because Katz was attempting to historicize "heterosexual" and "homosexual" and hence get away from assumptions of biological or natural origins of these categories.

In fact, the first use of "heterosexual" in this country located these people as deviants or perverts. Their crime was to engage in sexual acts for pleasure rather than procreative purposes. What is remarkable about Katz's history of homosexuality is the relatively short time (90 years) that this category changed from being a pejorative one to normalized one only to be called into question by changing social conditions, i.e. the women's liberation movement and the lesbian and gay movement to name a few. With regard to Katz's "utopian dream" he was not arguing for a "distancing between" hetero- and homosexuals, rather he was suggesting that these categories are historically specific, which means at some point they might be irrelevant.

A student newspaper should help scholars

The reason why the Dean's List will not be printed in the Collegian this semester is because this paper wants to charge the Dean of Students office $2,000 to print last semester's outstanding students' names. That office can not afford to spend that much so therefore those students will go unnoted by their peers. If the student directory and the Collegian cannot print last semester's Dean's List, who can? These superb students cannot even get recognized for their efforts in a listing in the student newspaper, a paper supposedly for the students. It would be nice to see a semester's good grades and hard work be applauded by somebody. The new idea of the pamphlet is great, but will not help last fall's scholars.

Editors Note: Because the Collegian is financially independent from the University, it must charge all groups and organizations for all advertising. The Dean of Students office is no exception.

Mistake in the cinema mislead reviewer

This letter is in response to a mistake in the review of Paris, Texas in the 10 April issue. The mistake is not the fault of the writer; she wrote a fine review. The sentence stated, "As Jane rambles on about her life, Wenders focuses on her, to the point where the top half of the screen is blacked out."

I saw that same screening on Friday night at the Academy of Music. The top half of the screen was not blacked out, it was the bottom half. Wenders did not create this effect, the projectionist up in that dark, lonely booth did.

This is one of the greatest evils in society. When an artist creates, his work is always up for ridicule and destruction. When a commercial theater or art house fails to show the film in its correct format, it dements the proper intention of the filmmaker. I don't have to prove this; just see the film at a different theater.

To try and correct this mistake after four minutes screen time, the projector was lowered making it look like the camera was tilted up. This is crude.

Robby Muller is one of the best contemporary cinematographers and would not resort to device found in a high school video class. If Wenders (the director) did intend this effect, he would have used an anamorphic lens system and centered the frame during post-production, with a shadow darkening the edge of the frame similar to an iris.

In the real version, Wenders has one actor recite the monologue, while the other is seen in the same shot giving the proper response. This is different from the primitive reaction shot technique used widely in television and taught in many film courses.

The worst thing that can happen to a film next to a video cassette reproduction or television (cable or not) is a mistake in the film's home: the cinema.

Non-alcoholic dances offered as viable drinking alternative

By SIOBHAN MASTERSON
Collegian Staff

If getting drunk on the weekends just isn't for you and you're seeking an alternative to bars and crowded discos, an event that will take place tonight and every Friday may be what you're looking for.

The Southwest Residential Education Committee has developed a program to alleviate some of the problems undergraduates have in finding things to do on weekend nights. The committee has begun sponsoring a non-alcoholic dance on Friday nights, providing munchies and music for all UMass students.

The committee, which includes staff members within Southwest, "has become interested in solving the problem of boredom and drunkenness on weekends," Bruce Frauman, head of residence for Mackimmie House, said. The dance is an alternative to getting drunk and rowdy or having nothing to do, he said.

The committee held its second dance last Friday night, offering free admission and munchies to the students. "I felt good about the turnout," Jan Curtis, co-director of the program, said.

The committee has been meeting with the Southwest Area Government to try and pool resources, she said. Bill Collins, SWAG co-president, said "over 85 percent of South residents are under age," and that there needs to be more things for students to do.

SWAG, he said, is purchasing "an audio-visual system to put on dances, movies, programming, anything." The system will be located in Hampden's southside room in Southwest and it will provide free entertainment, Collins said.

The Southwest government will pay $4280 and the Student Government Association will pay for the other half of the system, he said.

The Southwest house councils and area government will participate in the organization of the dances. The committee welcomes "all input," Frauman said. Students are asked to offer advice, help, or just come to party, he said.

The dances are held free each Friday night in the Southside Room at Hampden Dining Commons between 10 p.m. and 2 a.m.

Jazz ensemble wins major title

The University of Massachusetts student jazz ensemble was recognized as one of the most outstanding college big bands in the country at the 27th annual national Collegiate Jazz Festival last week at Notre Dame University.

"We went there just feeling great that we were chosen to go. Most of the bands there have won countless awards. We were hoping to win, but you can never tell," said Jeff Holmes conductor and music department faculty member.

Holmes recalled that he played at the Notre Dame festival as a student eight years ago.

"To come back with your own ensemble eight years later and win - it's pretty wild," he said. He noted that this is the first time the UMass ensemble entered the Notre Dame competition.

There were two other awards in different categories given out. A total of 15 bands auditioned, sending in tapes of their music Holmes said. On the basis of these tapes, finalists were invited to the festival.

"It's a big honor. These kids are high," said Linda Faulkingham public relations coordinator for the music department.

UMass student Geof Mattoon was given a judge's citation for a distinguished performance on the tenor saxophone.

The jazz ensemble's final concert will take place on May 7 in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. It is free and open to the public.

American youths are the heirs to struggle for human dignity

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

"American youths are the heirs to a struggle for human dignity that is being played out in this country," Bladina Ramirez, a member of the Civil Rights Commission and director of a training program for the Intercultural Development Research Association if San Antonio, said last night at Amherst College.

"You are the heirs to something far greater than wealth. You are the heirs to the struggle of the United States to become a more perfect democracy, a more perfect union," she said.

The struggle for civil rights has taken lives in the physical sense and in the sense of unfulfilled dreams and shattered families. Ramirez sees a tragic repeat of this beginning to happen in this country.

"Over a hundred years ago, this nation took extreme measures of rending itself apart in order that the ideal of civil rights might be furthered. The 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments are as vital today as they were 100 years ago," she said.

According to Ramirez, the nation began to turn around in 1954. Twenty years ago, the nation knew where its soul was. People of all colors were taking tremendous risks saying "This is now the nation we want to be." A white woman was killed in the South because she took part in a civil rights demonstration."

The Civil Rights Commission was created in 1957 to be a watchdog for the nation on civil rights policies. No president has ever tampered with the commission because it was independent and above politics. However, Reagan set about to remove all the commissioners and put people who share his views on civil rights in, Ramirez said.

"On Oct. 23, 1983, I received a call form White House personnel telling me that I was fired. The president had exceeded his authority. By the time his decision was overturned he had placed five people who were loyal and vocally suportive of his views, one is undecided, and two are against him," Ramirez said.

The commission has launched an aggressive attack on affirmative action, comparable worth, and racial policies. "Affirmative action is the most difficult and trying issue in America. I hate to deal with it. However, if it wasn't there, issues wouldn't have been looked at," she said.

Ramirez says the rhetoric against comparable worth "sounds like the rhetoric against the abolition of slavery. Sometimes I fell like a rat in a maze and every time I turn around, someone says, 'your didn't say mother may I.' "

She said it is the responsibility of today's youth to come up with something that will work for civil rights. "To do nothing is simply unacceptable," she said.

Conference salutes Afro-Latino music

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

A jazz-all star concert with Tito Puente, Mongo Santamaria and Max Roach at 8 p.m. Sunday in the Fine Arts Center will kick off the 14th annual black Musicians Conference at the University of Massachusetts.

The conference recognizes the contributions of black Americans to national and international music, and the impact of these contributions on contemporary American life and thought.

This year's theme is "A Tribute to Afro-Latin Music." Frederick Tillis, director of the Fine Arts Center, said the event is "trying to show a particular and unique cultural perspective in American music," not just of the continental U.S., but "Pan-American."

Santamaria and Puente will be honored with a "Distinguished Achievement Award" at the concert. Tillis said the award is a gesture of appreciation for their participation in the benefits concert for the Fletcher Henderson Memorial Scholarship Fund. The scholarship is given to UMass students who want to pursue a career in jazz.

The awards will be given to the performers "for their outstanding contribution as artist and musicians," Tillis said.

While Santamaria is known as "master of the Conga drum," with an international reputation as one of the world's foremost Latin Percussionists, Puente is the "king of Latin music" and a pioneer of Latin Jazz.

In addition, he is credited with over 120 recordings with his orchestra and was the recipient of two Grammy awards in 1978 and in 1983.

Tillis said Latin music has been an integral part of black music with its roots "as early as the B-bop era (of the 1940s). It has never stopped."

He said Dizzie Gillepsie was one of the early pioneers of fusion. Gillepsie brought Conga drums from the Caribbean and incorporated them into his music.

Tillis, who is a musician and composer, said, the Latin influence today "is firmly a part of many jazz ensembles. Most bands, particularly in colleges, high schools, universities and recording companies, have incorporated in their rhythm session a percussionist" in addition to the drummer.

Luis Melendez, producer of "Tertulia," a Spanish program aired on WFCR said the conference "is an excellent way of promoting the togetherness" between people of African descents.

Despite language barriers among Caribbean people, "there is a deep and very important tradition in common: the African tradition," that overcomes that difference "with music and arts in general."

Other conference events include a workshop with Tito Puente at 11:15 Monday in room 44 of the Music department, and a group exhibit entitled, "The Movement of Music: A collective Experience," at 3 p.m. in the Augusta Savage Gallery.

A panel discussion with Tito Puente, John Storm Roberts, Marta Moreno Borrell and Enriquez Fernandez on "Afro-Latin Music: Four Perspectives" will be held at 7:30 p.m. on Tuesday in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union Building.

The conference will conclude with a free concert featuring Pablo Landrum and Theresa Folksplair at 8 p.m. Friday in the Cape Cod Lounge.

Art is a vehicle

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

While the history of Nigerian art is as old as the country itself, a batik artist said he would like to see it used as an instructive means of communications.

Tunde Odunlade, who visited the University of Massachusetss last week said many African art pieces have a political or a social message behind them, and because of this, "it can be recognized culturally and resourcefully and used as an instructive means of communications."

"Politics in art is interesting in itself. It can't be taken away," he said adding, "I remember one piece of art which I did. It was a batik titled, "Fingers Are Not Equal." In the background, I put a large question mark and had a truck pusher on one side and a rich man driving a car on the other side. The truck pusher wonders why he must push a truck (cart) for a living and the rich man drives a car. The social message of the batik says there is inequality in day to day life," he said.

The ideas for his art comes from different sources. "I open my eyes and I see, I open my ears and I hear, I communicate with people. The ideas come and I put them down," he said.

Odunlade became interested in art at an early age. "I didn't have the opportunity to follow it up. However, by luck, I met a man named Yinka Ade Yemi who put me through school and I was able to develop the talent that I was born with," he said.

He said art is an inborn characteristic of Nigerians, "Every Nigerian is creative. We can make music from clapping our hands and tell folk tales."

According to Oduntade, the role of African artists today is to "project the image of African art as not only being rich but resourceful. They should let the world value our art in a way that our messages can be put across."

Tunde Ondulade, Nigerian batik artist.

ARTS

CINEMASCOOP
by Count Ramin Zahed

A purple rose by any other name is still a rose, and Woody Allen's latest masterpiece The Purple Rose of Cairo is a great achievement by any other standard. Not only is Allen's film full of charming moments, it is also an excellent study of the magic of the medium. Allen's leading lady Mia Farrow plays a mistreated housewife in the thirties who seeks shelter in the arms of a fictious screen idol (Jeff Daniels). I simply can not praise this film enough. Purple Rose which makes its area debut today at the Hampshire Mall is vintage Woody Allen; the mark of a master director who has matured with the passage of time without losing his comic touch.

I tried to see Desperately Seeking Susan last weekend. Yet there was this beast in the theatre (BethAnn Moskov) who continually vomitted on me. It became increasingly difficult to concentrate on Madonna's performance while I was being bombarded with undesireable liquids. I caught LadyHawke the next day though. Matthew Broderick was his whimsical, wise guyish self. However, the music composed by Alan Parsons was a real negative element. Disco beat simply doesn't mix with a classical Medieval fantasy.

For those of your who enjoyed watching Poltergeist on the tube last Sunday, a sequel is currently being made called Poltergeist II, The Other Side. JoBeth Williams, Craig T. Nelson and Zelda Rubinstein have been signed to encore their original roles.

Weekend Winners: Bill Forsythe's Comfort and Joy makes its first appearance in the valley at the Academy of Music. Forsythe who charmed audiences with his smooth Scottish humor in Gregory's Girl and Local Hero seems to be one of the best new directors around, and Comfort and Joy could soothe many a tense soul this weekend. For all you English majors out there, Amherst cinema is showing Jane Eyre with Great Expectations; two definite classics. Think, you don't even need to read the Monarch Notes and you get to see Elizabeth Taylor as a young girl in Jane Eyre.

Killer Question: My many thanks to Marcie Moscowitz, Nancy Bukar (Nottajap), and to Loren Demerath who correctly identified the group singing about Rosanna Arquette as Toto. This week two free passes to the Hampshire Mall will be given to the soul who can tell me a) the name of Mia Farrow's first husband (hint he did it his way) and b) Zelig's first name. Until next week, watch out for those monsters who vomit in the dark corners of film theatres.

Daniels plays the hero who walks offscreen to woo Mia Farrow in Purple Rose.

Rossini's The Barber of Seville
Performed by the Texas Opera Theater
At the Rand Theater
Wednesday, March 17

As a child of the TV generation, when I think of Texas I think of six-shooters, sheriffs and slap leather or crawl, not comic operas. Notwithstanding, the Texas Opera Theater (TOT) did an amusing rendition in English of Rossini's famous opus, The Barber of Seville.

The Barber of Seville has a plot typical of most comic operas: Boy meets Girl; after much trickery Boy gets Girl. The Texas Opera Theater's production portrayed this well. Although the libretto was originally in Italian, the TOT did the English version by Ruth and Thomas Martin. Thus the nuances and intricacies of the argument were made clearer.

The fact that the opera was done in English did have some serious drawbacks, however. Certainly it lost some of its charm, its air of mystery, of passion, of sophistication. The focus is often transferred from the music to the words which are frequently facile and foolish.

On occasion some of the less adept performers would simply recite the lines rather than singing them. This would be acceptable if the words were not so dated: Much of the libretto's appeal has been lost over the years, and now seems only charmingly quaint.

Very quaint was the pantomine during the overture. It was, perhaps, the fastest paced action of the whole opera, and set the background for the story very effectively.

Less well staged was Count Almaviva's (Kurt Streit) first aria: Rather than serenading his sweetie's window, he paced the stage, addressing the audience. Streit's gentle tenor was usually very nice-- his aria "Dawn of the Day" was done beautifully-- but he had a serious problem with projection and was unable to sing the faster parts effectively.

This problem was common to most of the players. Figaro (Eugene Perry) in particular faltered during the more difficult sections. Perry looked more like Prince than a barber. I'm not sure why.

Christine Meadows, who played Rosina, must be singled out for particular praise. Her voice was always beautiful and clear, and her acting was subtle, not overly melodramatic like the other performers. Her arias were always a joy to hear.

Also excellent was Karen Noteboorn, who played the supporting role of Berta the maid. Her voice was strong and sweet, and her dramatic ability was singularly effective.

James Ramlet as Basilio was rich and playful. His "Art of Slander" aria was one of the opera's high points. Thom King as Doctor Bartolo was far from perfect, but he did do a very adequate job with his difficult role.

Eduardo Sicango, who worked on Coppola's film The Cotton Club, designed the elaborately rococco set and costumes.

Daniel Lipton led the Texas Opera Theater Orchestra faultlessly, however the music did occasionally swell to obscure the singers. Alan Juza was wonderful on the oboe.

The Texas Opera Theater has some fine talent, although not all of which was appropriate for this opera (Perry, for instance). Their production was good, but needed some changes.

WE'LL PAY BACK YOUR LOAN, BUT THERE'S A HITCH.

You'll like it, though.

Because every year you serve with us, we reduce your college debt by one-third or $1,500, whichever is greater. Greater still, after three years your loan's repaid in full.

You'll also like the satisfaction and pride you'll feel as you learn a valuable skill. One you use to serve yourself as well as your country.

It's all a part of the Loan Repayment Program. To qualify, you ust have taken out a National Direct, Guaranteed or Federally Insured Student Loan after October 1, 1975. And your loan can't be in default.

So if you'd like Uncle Sam to pay off your college loan, pay your local Army Recruiter a visit today. Or call.

were still invited to the NCAA tournament where UMass took fourth.

"They are very good, probably the strongest team in New England and they'll be our toughest opponent so far," coach Pam Hixon said.

"They are big, strong, and fast but they haven't played a tough game all season."

"We have and I think that will be to our advantage," she said. UMass beat Yale 7-3 and rival Harvard 6-3 and the Gazelles are now 6-0 on the year.

"We're not going to change our game plan," Hixon said. "We'll match our strengths against theirs."

Two of those strengths are senior All--American Pam Moryl and junior Bunny Forbes. Moryl leads the team in scoring with 20 goals and four assists, 24 points. Forbes dishes them out and scores with 12 goals and 11 assists, 23 points.

Senior goalie Debbie DeJesus, on the average, gives up three goals a game while UMass scores an average of 11.6 goals a game.

"They'll try to go out and play a slowdown game," Hixon said. "We're going to have to be patient and poised and go after them like we go after every opponent."

The men's golf team is sporting a 9-1 record and faces some tough competition from Amherst College, who the Minutemen narrowly defeated last week.

"Amherst is considered the team to beat," coach Jack Leaman said.

Baseball maims BU

Two games: 33-runs

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

What can be said about a doubleheader when your outscore the opposition 33-3, hit .472 as team (34-of-72) and your pitching allows a total of four hits?

"If nothing else it was a good workout and maybe it will help us going into the weekend's games," UMass secondbaseman Jack Bloise said yesterday after the Minutemen pummelled Boston University 20-0 and 13-3.

UMass coach Dick Bergquist had his team run sprints in the outfield after the two mashings to remind the players that the rest of the schedule isn't as easy. The Terriers, now 4-16, were once a New England power before dropping down to the club sport level. They are back in Division One this season and have been paying a heavy dues.

Two pitchers, Cameron Routh and Brian Babcock, started and finished the two games for BU, getting pounded around for nine extra-base hits, but only one homer, Bloise's wind blown solo shot in the opener.

The gory details went like this: UMass scored at least one run in every inning of the first while starter Matt Subocz was firing a two-hitter and striking out four in his first win. The Minutemen, now 15-10 and third in New England, scored eight in the fourth inning as 13 batters went to the plate.

The offensive stars included Todd Comeau (five for eight on the day with five runs batted in a four extra-base hits) and Jay Zerner (three hits and two RBIs). Thirdbaseman Doug Wright had three hits and two RBI. Matt Sheran added three hits as every Minutemen that played scored in the rout.

The second game saw UMass actually fall behind 1-0 as BU scored in the top of the first. The Minutemen went ahead as Sean Flint drove in two with a double. They scored three more in the third, four in the fourth, one in the fifth and three in the sixth.

UMass Leftfielder Bruce Kingman rips a double in the second of yesterday's doubleheader rout of Boston University. UMass won 20-0 and 13-3.

Comeau had three hits, Tom Fabian, Fling, and Steve Allen added two hits and two RBI each. Starter Tom Pia had no control in walking 11, but threw a two-hitter over five innings to get the win. Jeff Jensen and Allen mopped up with an inning each.

BU helped the cause with 12 errors in the two games.

The Minutemen travel to Rhode Island to face the Rams in Atlantic 10 action. UM, 5-1 in the league, can win two-of-three in Kingston and come close to clinching the Eastern Division and a berth in the league playoffs.

Jim Knopf (3-1) will start the first of two Saturday with Bobby Kostro (1-0) starting the second. Steve Allard (2-1) is scheduled for the third unless he works in relief on Saturday.

Defense is solid, but softball splits a double header

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Through 14 innings, over two games, the University of Massachusetts softball team's defense was superb.

Defense and the one-hit pitching of junior Lynn Stockley propelled UMass to a 1-0 opening game with over the 19-3 Connecticut Huskies.

In the second game, the Minutewomen defense was again superb for seven innings as junior hurler Cathy Reed made her first start since March 30.

However, the nightcap of yesterday's doubleheader at NOPE lasted eight innings and Connecticut broke open a scoreless deadlock with five runs, helped along by three UMass errors, to earn the split, 5-0.

Three errors by third baseman Debbie Cole, second baseman Tina Morello and centerfielder Sally Maher helped UConn blast open the game and put a sour note on what was otherwise a superb defensive performance.

"Those are the type of innings that have been killing us through 16 losses," coach Elaine Sortino said of UMass' 15-16-1 record. "One mistake led to a series of others. I really think we can better than that."

UMass didn't hit well yesterday but they didn't have to. Defense and Stockley (9-6, three strikeouts) kept UConn at bay in game one. Carol Martin ruined Stockley's bid for a no-hitter with a leadoff single in the seventh.

UMass scored in the third. Chris Ciepiela and Aliss Fila hit back-to-back singles and Maher loaded the bases on a Huskie error.

Carol Frattaroli, who had the best grab of the game when she jumped and just caught a line drive at short in game two, drove in Ciepiela on a sacrifice fly.

"Carol had an outstanding day," Sortino said. The sophomore also had UMass' only extra-base hit all day with a double in the first inning of game one.

In the second game, UConn hurler Denise Hannon started slow but as the rainy weather cleared, Hannon got better. UMass got only four hits and their only threat came in the sixth but Ilene Freeman flied out with runners on second and third.

Reed, who got hammered in her last start against URI, kept UConn, now 20-4, off balance the whole game and looked good.

"She was ready," Sortino said. "She knows UConn. All we had to do was get her a run."

Next up for the Minutewomen is Adelphi, ranked 20th in the country in the pre-season polls. Game time is 2 p.m. Sunday at Adelphi.

Gorillas meet rugged Yale, look for .500

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian STaff

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team will be looking to reach the .500 mark tomorrow when they take on 10th-ranked Yale in New Haven.

The Elis, 8-2, are coming off of a 14-3 loss to the Army on Wednesday. UMass, 3-4, beat Hofstra 13-8 also on Wednesday.

The Gorillas, with a defeat of Yale, would regain a lot of pride lost after a rough start.

"Yale is a tough team, they're big and strong and one of the best, if not the best, teams we'll play this season," UM coach Dick Garber said. "Beating them would really help us."

The Elis are led by junior attackman Ted Moran (20 goals-19 assists-39 points) and feature a defense that includes former offensive guard Paul Wimer, all 6-4, 250 pounds of him, and All-America Tom Resch. Goalie Brian Reilly leads the NCAA in save percentage at .713.

The Gorillas have senior goalie Gerry Moreau back between the pipes after a shoulder injury. Moreau is 2-1 in his starts this season. UMass will probably be without sophomore attackman Tom Carmean (the leading scorer at 11-18-29) who bruised a shoulder against New Hampshire last Saturday during a 16-14 loss.

Senior attackman/midfielder Tom Lukacovic had an eight point night at Hofstra (four and four) and is second on the team with 16 points. He, along with middies Greg Fisk and Karl Hatton, will have to play will for a UMass victory.

Attackmen Mike Fiorini and Ken Freeman have also come on as of late. Freshman Kelley Carr is also contributing to the offense.

Keys for the Gorillas include the offense's ability to get good shots on Reilly and for the defense to contain Yale's offense.

"The defense played well against Hofstra and I think they can shut down Yale," Garber said. "If we play up to our potential we can get the win."

Women's lacrosse in showdown at 'tough' UNH

The fifth-ranked and undefeated University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will face their toughest task to date when they travel to Durham, N.H. and take on the sixth ranked University of New Hampshire, tomorrow at 1 p.m.

In other UMass action, the men's and women's track squads visit Boston College, the men's golf team travels to the state championships, the men's tennis team travels to the Atlantic 10 championships at Rutgers and the women's tennis team faces Rhode Island at Kingston.

The Wildcat women's lax team stopped UMass last year in the ECAC championships game winning 6-4. But both teams

2,000 protest violence against women

'Take back the night' event ends with candlelight vigil

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

Chanting "Abusing women is a crime, stop the violence and join the line," 2,000 University of Massachusetts and area women marched in a candlelight procession through Amherst Friday night to protest violence against women.

The march, which included some men, followed a rally and ended in a candlelit vigil on the common as part of the first "Take Back The Night" event to be held at UMass since 1979.

The event served as "a night of women's resistance against violence" and as a focus on "women's power," said Hiedi Holland, one of the coordinators and members of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA).

The event kicked off at 5:30 p.m. on the Student Union Building steps with Professor of Political Science at Mount Holyoke College, Jean Grossholtz, speaking to a crowd holding "Stop Rape" banners and wearing "You Can't Beat A Woman" T-shirts.

Grossholtz spoke about the battered women's shelter movement, suggesting it emerged because "the institutions presumed to do something about violence against women did nothing."

As a result, she said, women began to open their homes to one another, the shelter movement being born when it was realized more room was needed to accommodate women who had been victims of abuse.

Grossholtz said the whole structure of the shelter movement is being threatened because "suddenly the institutions are interested in violence against women again."

She said shelters were created by women and for women in order to "empower them to take back their lives," but the revived interest of institutions has led to the imposition of social workers, the banning of lesbians from working within the movement, and the suggestion "we worry about the batterer not the battered," she said.

"They're trying to get us to change our position," Grossholtz said, but she added that "we will not be silenced; not tonight, not tomorrow, not ever."

Next to speak was a woman, who recounted her own personal experience as a battered wife.

"For nine-years I was hit, punched and threatened," she recalled, adding that even when she left the abuse did not stop.

"He kidnapped my children, he abused them and he made threatening calls saying he was 'coming to kill me,'" she said.

I spent three months not sleeping, crying and worrying," she said, adding that although she has since been awarded custody of her children, she still sits all day outside their school for fear they will be kidnapped again.

She remarked that Necessities/Necesidades, a battered women's shelter in Northampton, gave her support to cope. "At Necessities I found myself and what I wanted from life," she said.

After this account, which moved many of the crowd to tears, Chong Amy Yu, coordinator of the Third World Women's Program at the Everywoman's Center, spoke on the U.S. institutionalization of violence against South Korean women.

She remarked that with 40,000 U.S. troops in South Korea, prostitution is viewed by the U.S. government as a "recreation that helps maintain morale," she said.

"Support for the troops means support for the purchasing of women's bodies," she said, adding an appeal to "work together to end this violence against women."

"We want to reclaim our lives," she said, from rapists, batterers, child abusers, pornographers and the "sexist, racist, homophobic, anti-semitic institutions that keep misogyny alive," she said.

For women to reclaim their lives, Alexander said what is required is the strengthing of shelters and rape crisis centers, more women's studies programs, greater emphasis on preventive education and the encouragement of women to learn self defense.

After a demonstration by Valley Women's Martial Arts, the crowd began its march from UMass to Amherst Common.

With candles and banners in hand, chanting and singing, the crowd marched along North Pleasant and East Pleasant Streets, distributing candles to bystanders on the way.

Upon reaching the common, the crowd gathered to listen to Julie Meyer, a UMass student, talk about "Women Resisting Violence," and to hold a two-minute silence for all the women who have been victims of violence.

After the event, Holland described it as "incredible and fantastic," and added that she felt "empowered."

Earth Day debuts Awareness Week

Peace, hunger also explored

Learning how to take responsibility of one's environment, remembering the sanctuary movement and liberation theology in Latin America, and helping to fight world hunger highlight this week's awareness activities for Earth Day, Latin American Week and Hunger Week at the University of Massachusetts.

The 15th annual Earth Day, a celebration of the beauty of the earth as well as a reminder of the subordinate place of humankind in the earth's ecosystem, began last night, but early this morning students wove a woolen web of earth healing energies," said Joyce Greenberg of the Coalition for Environmental Quality.

The web will remain strewn over a willow tree by the campus pond until tomorrow night, when it will be buried near that area, restoring its healing energies to the earth, Greenberg said. At this time, the Earth Day observation will end.

Greenberg said that Earth Day is to remind people of the threats that humans pose to the environment from toxic waste, hazardous wastes caused by the nuclear energy industry and acid rain caused by automobile and industrial emissions.

The coalition will offer activities such as a puppet show, kite making, nature journal making, canoeing on the campus pond, and "new games" (or games that are non-competitive and encourage competition). Also a "ribbon project" will be featured where one can learn to make fabric and there will

Students describe campus cheating

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the first in a four-part series on cheating at the University of Massachusetts. Due to the sensitive nature of this subject, the names of all students have been changed. Today's story focuses on student views concerning the how and why aspect of the issue.

Using crib notes, copying tests, homework and computer programs; falsifying data, looking over someone's shoulder, getting someone to take your exam, or using a friend's term paper. It's been called cheating and it probably occurs in every school in the country, including the University of Massachusetts.

Eric, junior engineering student, says he noticed cheating during his first year here. He recalls a group of students who trafficked in term papers while living in the dormitories.

"I used to see people who would call for different papers, mostly rhetoric, he said," and there were people who would distribute them and keep track of where they were."

Eric said that as far as he knew, no one ever was caught or questioned about this impromptu library. This was probably because of the size of the University and the number of students and teachers, he said.

In the school of Engineering, he said, he has seen teaching assistants and students write programs for other students. Sometimes this work was "just a favor," he said, sometimes the rewards were money or alcohol.

Eric admitted he had once taken a mathematics exam for another student, "for a favor" The exam was held in a large lecture hall with more than 200 students. He took the exam, handed it to his friend, and simply walked out the back exit door, he said.

Bill, a junior engineering and computer science student, said he has also witnessed a fair amount of cheating while at the University.

"I used to help people write programs. I would tutor them step-by-step through the programs," he said. "But there were people who would write programs and then say 'give me 20 bucks'"

In one particularly difficult programming course, "everyone used to copy programs " from each other. Some students did it in teams, dividing specific work among eachother, while other individual students would steal finished programs or search through waste baskets for whatever they could find, he said.

Bill estimated that half of all computer programs may have been copied.

"Some of the older students did what I did, and some wrote out programs for people," he said. "For them, it's very

Two U.S. Senators say Ortega is willing to negotiate for peace in Nicaragua

WASHINGTON (AP) - Two Democratic senators said yesterday that Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega is willing to restore civil liberties and negotiate with the United States to achieve peace in Central America.

Sens. Tom Harkin of Iowa and John Kerry of Massachusetts said Ortega expressed a willingness to negotiate an end to the presence of Soviet military personnel in the region and to cease efforts to export the Sandinista revolution to neighboring nations.

The freshmen senators who met with Ortega in the Nicaraguan capital of Managua presented the offer to members of the Senate Democratic leadership yesterday in the Capitol.

The senators said Ortega also told them he would restore civil liberties in Nicaragua if the United States agreed to resume bilateral negotiations and end its suport for the guerrillas known as Contras.

Ortega also said Nicaragua would be willing to work with international relief agencies to resettle or relocate Contras.

At a Capitol Hill news conference, Harkin and Kerry said the Sandinista government is offering a "window of opportunity" that gives the United States the chance to resolve its own concerns about peace and stability in the region.

"The real question,"Kerry said, "is does this administration want to pursue negotiations or is it committed to force."

The latest Nicaraguan peace plan came as Congress prepares this week to vote on President Reagan's request to continue military aid to the anti-Sandinista rebels.

Kerry said Ortega wants to open talks with the Reagan administration and wants a team of congressional observers to be present.

"They are willing to have rigid verification" of both relocation efforts and of the cessation of attempts to support guerilla efforts in other countries, he said.

At the State Department, the reaction to Ortega's proposal was cool.

Spokeswoman Kathleen Lang said the primary channels for peace proposals are the Contadora mediation process and Nicaraguan opposition groups.

Poet to speak at graduation

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

In a year where anti-apartheid demonstrations flourish throughout the country, an exiled South African poet and critic of South Africa's apartheid policy, Dennis Brutus, will give the main address at commencement on May 25.

The six honorary degree recipients and the student speaker will be announced May 1.

Director of Community Relations, Dan Melley, said he estimates the turnout for commencement to be close to 30,000 people. "We've had larger turnout in the past few years because people are psyched about the economy and jobs."

Melley said the event, which begins at 10 a.m., and will be held rain or shine at Alumni Stadium, is "an incredible logistics problem" because of the number of people involved.

"We've got an army of people setting up chairs, marshalling people into line, getting graduates into gowns, it's one big mill scene," he said.

Dennis Brutus, the president of the South African Non-Racial Olympic Committee which led the movement to exclude South Africa from the Olympic games because of that nation's discriminatory policies, will give the main address. Brutus was exiled from South Africa in 1964.

In 1962, the South African government banned Brutus from attending political and social meetings and from writing anything that could be published. In 1963 he was arrested for attending a political meeting and escaped while on bail. He was later captured and again attempted escape, butwas shot in the back. On recovery he was sentenced to 18 months hard labor. When he finished his term in prison he was permitted to leave South Africa on an "exit permit" which makes it illegal for him to return.

In 1983, United States federal authorities failed in their attempt to deport Brutus on an expired visa. Brutus argued that he would be a target for assassination.

Brutus is an English professor at Northwestern University in Chicago, and spent 1983 teaching at Amherst College.

Acid rain rally draws 200

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

Awards, speeches and fishing lessons were part of the second annual Rally 'Round the Quabbin reservoir which marked the end of Massachusetts' Acid Rain Awareness Week.

About 200 people attended the rally including state Environmental Affairs Secretary James S. Hoyte, Canadian Consul-General Barrett Dansen and Boston WBZ-TV's weatherman Bruce Schwoegler.

"We are here because acid rain is a serious national and state problem which requires a national solution, yet we are told that 'more studies' are needed," Hoyte said. "We are not waiting."

Among those who received awards was Dr. Paul Godfrey, director of the Water Resources Research Center at the University of Massachusetts. The center is responsible for the Acid Rain Monitoring Project, which, when coupleted, will make Massachusetts the only state to have tested 100 percent of its surface waters for acid rain damage.

According to a recent report by the project, of 40 percent of the state's waters tested, 5 percent are acidified and cannot neutralize any further acid deposits. Another 14 percent of the water bodies tested were in critical condition.

Sulfur emissions from coal burning power plants of the Midwest mix with moisture in the atmosphere and later fall to the earth as acid pollutants.

According to the monitoring project's report, 18 percent of Hampshire County's waters are acidified, while 78 percent are listed as critical.

The rally, which also opened the reservour's fishing season, included walking tours of the area and and a walking tour of the McLaughlin Trout Hatchery in Belchertown. Awards for a children's poster contest were given by Massachusetts Sportsmen's Council President Thomas Berube.

simple, basic programming compared to what they're doing now. I can write any beginning COINS program in 20 minutes."

Obviously, cheating at the University is not limited to writing courses on the School of Engineering. Many people interviewed for this story mentioned the School of Management as a "hot spot."

"The business courses are worse. People use crib notes all the time," Bill said. "It's a hot spot. A lot of what they do is memorization, so if you need to remember something (for an exam), you use crib notes or an open book at your feet."

Jim, a sophomore SOM student, agrees. He said cheating occurs frequently and that there are different methods for different courses.

"It's amazing how many students cheat on multiple choice exams. The professors say they know it's going on, but they can only do so much," he said.

Crib sheets, writing information on desks, switching exams, and copying work from others are the most common methods in SOM, he said. There is "not much" in the way of paying others to do their work, Jim said.

Bob, another SOM sophomore, agreed, saying "Ususally it's a team effort." He said cheating decreases after the first year level, largely because smaller classes and essay exams make it more difficult.

In first year mathematics and programming courses, which use multiple choice exams, up to 50 percent of the students are cheating on each exam, he said. Bob recalled a first year math course he was enrolled in, saying "cheating in that was rampant."

Students interviewed for this story also offered explanations of why students cheat.

"People are lazy, they don't put forth the effort, they procrastinate,"Bill said. "I cheat because it's easier."

Bill admitted he is worried about the consequences of cheating, but said he usually tries to avoid it (cheating).

"There's a demand of achievement in professional career and hard scientific studies," Eric said, "so students have that pressure of performing, getting good grades, and remaining in the mainstream of professional education."

Several students said cheating often occurs in courses that students don't believe are useful to their studies or careers, and cheaters try to compensate by concentrating on material they see as more relevant and understandable.

"There's always people who don't study, there's a pressure to achieve good grades, and sometimes you have too much other work to do in a week and you can't study for an exam," Bob said.

Students interviewed said they supported measures to prevent cheating and offered their own suggestions. Requiring identification for exams, having more proctors supervise exams, using different copies of exams, requiring professors to explain exactly what they consider as cheating and the full range of negative consequences, and "making examples" of cheaters who are caught are all ideas offered by these students.

Tomorrow: Faculty and administrators offer their opinions about how and why students cheat, respond to student opinions, and explain what is being done to prevent cheating at the University.

also be story telling. These events will take place between 1 and 2 p.m today and tomorrow by the campus pond.

Between today and tomorrow, 30 workshops on such issues as radioactive wastes, environmentally caused health problems, renewable energy sources, permaculture and household toxic wastes, among others will be offered.

A series of films and lectures about U.S. intervention in Latin America that will highlight the sancturary movement and liberation theology will be featured in the Latin American Week Celebration beginning today at UMass.

Kathie Lasay, member of the Western Massachusetts Latin American Solidarity Committee, co-sponsors of the event, said it is "necessary to educate people about Latin America because right now it's an important part of our foreign policy and important political events."

Lasay said it is also important to understand the culture of Latin American people because they are an integral part of the U.S. and as they share the American culture, Americans should understand their background.

Mortar Board

Mortar Board is a national honor society of college seniors. The society recognizes the qualities of superior ability, outstanding and continued leadership and dedicated service to the college , university or community.

Founded by The Ohio State University, Swathmore College, The University of Michigan, and Cornell University in 1918, the Mortar Board now has 183 active chapters across the country.

The Isogan Chapter of the Mortar Board was installed at the University of Massachusetts in 1955. Those students who have shown qualities of academic excellence, leadership, and service are honored with membership. This year the selection committee reviewed approximately 250 information sheets from those students who merited eligibility.

The Mortar Board is please to announce the newly tapped members for 1985 - 1986:

Julie Archer
Bonnie Ballato
Christopher Bergsten
Robert Coulter
Amy DeRoode
Linda Greces
Richard Health
Ronald Homes
Patricia Hunt
Michael Jackman
Margaret Kelleher

We thank all who expressed interest in the Mortar Board Honor Society. This year, a great number of qualified Juniors made the competition most keen, and the decision quite difficult. To each applicant; you have every reason to be proud of your accomplishments during your college career. Certainly you are a credit to yourself and to the University. We know you will continue to strive for excellence. The Mortar Board extends its best wishes for a successful future.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

Time of reckoning

This week is Latin America Week at the University of Massachusetts. This extra encouragement for students and faculty to raise their awareness of the people and politics from the Rio Grande to Tierra del Fuego could hardly be more timely, coinciding as it does with important events in Washington and the growing popular outcry against the Reagan administration's odious policies toward that region.

Tomorrow, while films and lectures about Latin America take place on campus, both chambers of Congress will be voting on whether to release another $14 million for President Reagan's sordid guerrilla war against the government and people of Nicaragua.

UMass has already heard some debate on the "contra" war, notably between the Western Mass. Latin American Solidarity Committee and the campus Republican Club. The College Republicans swallow whole Reagan's notion of the anti-Sandinista rebels as freedom fighters, "the moral equivalent of our founding fathers."

Those who have visited Nicaragua - legislators, priests and a growing number of concerned citizens - see a very different story. Most Nicaraguans, whatever disagreements they may have with the Sandinista government, do not share Reagan's view that their country is a "totalitarian communist state." In Nicaragua, the contras are seen for what they are: bands of marauders, led mainly by vengeful holdovers from the Somoza dictatorship, and trained by the Central Intelligence Agency in sabotage, kidnaping and slaughter.

The College Republican National Committee made an abortive "grass-roots" attempt to persuade college students otherwise, through a "Save the Contras" poster-child fundraising campaign. Fortunately, we were spared this perverse twist on poverty relief drives: it was discontinued before it could reach UMass.

A "no" vote in the House or Senate on the $14 million package, which the president has dressed up with fraudulent "humanitarian aid" stipulations to woo skeptical legislators, would reject what many call a 1980s version of the 1964 Tonkin Gulf Resolution that gave President Johnson unqualified approval for U.S. military action in Vietnam.

UMass students were among the tens of thousands of people who demonstrated this weekend in Washington, hoping to stop Reagan's tragic adventure in its tracks. Given the president's Red Scare obsession with Nicaragua, citizen awareness is the last line of defense against a Central America policy which, if left unchecked, could lead our generation into a war with our neighbors.

Those neighbors, in Nicaragua and elsewhere, feel no animosity toward the U.S. population. As any yanqui visitor to Latin America discovers, they warmly welcome U.S. citizens who have decided to see what is happening for themselves.

This is one of the points the sponsors of Latin America Week will stress to the University community. One hopes that from a heightened sense of kinship with the rest of the Americas will proceed a heightened concern for what is being done there in our name.

The Senate at its worst

John Yonce

At last Wednesday's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting, perhaps the only intelligent motion made was the one which received the least consideration. That motion was to censure Paul "Kaz," senator from the Commuter Area.

Who's Paul "Kaz"? How about a memory refresher. "Kaz" is better known to the University (on all official records, anyway) as Paul Kasman. Ah yes. The same Paul Kasman who:

- assaulted a woman at the Geraldine Ferraro rally last fall and told her she "ought to be screwed up against a wall."
- assaulted the Executive Editor of the Collegian and numerous female staff members after a column was published relating the incident at the rally.
- told that same Executive Editor in the Hatch Cafeteria he'd "like to get it on with" her. (She then wasted her soft drink by pouring it over his head.)
- was elected to the senate in March as Paul "Kaz." The senate then approved of his election, along with all the others, although a column in the Collegian revealed he had campaigned under a false name.

Perhaps the senate deserves what it has gotten in Kasman as a senator. In his very first senate meeting, Kasman ignored repeated requests by Speaker John Ruddock put out his pipe. (The senate has prohibited smoking on the senate floor, except toward the rear of the hall.)

At Wednesday's meeting, not having his pipe handy, Kasman made use of his hands to disrupt the meeting by clapping while other people were trying to speak. He continued this even after Ruddock asked for the disturbances to stop. Apparently, Kasman was not content with just disrupting the meeting and wasting people's time, he decided to make offensive comments to some of the senators.

The senate did not pass a motion to censure Kasman, and after a motion asking Kasman to apologize was passed, he refused. Although censuring a senator is virtually a symbolic gesture, the senate should at least have done that much.

Kasman's behavior as a senator typifies all that is wrong in the senate. The senate has enough trouble trying to get things done without being interrupted by senators who don't make an effort to contribute anything positive. I'm not attacking Kasman because I disagree with his political views, because it is impossible to tell what they are. The only clue to where he stands on any issue is whom he interrupts at senate meetings. When a reporter from the Collegian attempted to ask him a question about an issue, he said "I don't talk to the Collegian, it's a liberal rag."

Some questions that should be asked; how can a senator represent his constituency if he is not registered as a student (try looking up Paul Kaz at the Bursars Office), if he won't say anything remotely constructive at a senate meeting, and if he won't talk to the main medium for communications at a senate meeting, and if he won't talk to the main medium for communications with his constituency.

More importantly, when Kasman was elected, why didn't one senator question the validity of his election? Why didn't the senate do more than request an apology from Kasman on Wednesday night?

The final question is for you, our readers. Did you know that "Kaz" is running for Commuter Area Government spokesperson, the presiding office of the area? Sure I guess he should be allowed to run, but maybe he should be made to run under his own name this time. After all, the senate seems to have been fooled by the name switch.

Blood Simple directed by Joel Coen at the Pleasant St. Theater

by CHRISTINE MARINI
Collegian Staff

The thing about living in a small town, somebody once said, is that you have to make your own fun. When the town is set in the dusty highway-seamed Texas plains, the "fun" tends to run into the classics--adultery, betrayal, and revenge. This explosive combination is rich clay in the hands of first-time director Joel Coen, whose film Blood Simple makes murder hilarious and gore sublime.

Coen, along with his younger brother (and producer) Ethan, cranked out a low-budget thriller that is a refreshing surprise. The plot is a twisted extravaganza born of almost banal wickedness. It concerns Julian Marty (played by Dan Hedaya), a sleasy saloon-owner, whose young wife, Abby (Frances McDormand) is fooling around with one of her husband's bartenders, Ray (John Getz). Outraged, Marty hires a private investigator cum-scumbag, Visser, (played by M. Emmet Walsh) to bump them off.

The fun begins after the above foundation has been laid. The characters get caught up in an outrageously macabre scenario, apparently, committing murder is not at all "simple."

The characters are all competently played. In especial, M.Emmet Walsh is brilliant as the sweaty, avid Visser, a cackling insect making his living off others' petty venality. Visser, who single-handedly carries the banana-colored polyester leisure suit to unprecedented depths of almost obscene tackiness, is, despite his utter sliminess, the only character with even a glimmer of intelligence. Mind you, it's only a glimmer. Blood Simple could be retitled Blood Stupid; the characters are comically dense. Their repellent idiocy prevents the viewer from forming any deep sympathy with any of them. Far from being a flaw, this alienation from the characters allows the focus to remain, as it should, on Coen's masterful manipulation of plot and scene. He pulls bizzare camera angles and visual leitmotifs out of a sophisticated bag of tricks. Try not to blink for the film's 96 minute running time, you won't want to miss any of the clever details.

Blood Simple is consistently surprising and entertaining, filled with moments that are already being called "classics in the genre." One shudders to attach such academic claptrap to Blood Simple, but it's unavoidable. It is a tight little film, simultaneously original and derivative. It manages, none the less, on a low budget and with no "stars", to hold entire audiences captive. Blood Simple, hopefully not just "beginner's luck", is above all a fun movie, and should not be missed.

A backstage chat with Joan;
Deborah Ross interviews Joan Armatrading

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

Ask Joan Armatrading to recall the greatest moment of her life, and she will ignore her string of best-selling albums, her phenomenal success in England and her cult status in America, and instead mention that she recently featured in "The Beano," an English comic book.

"They wrote me into their Tom, Dick and Sally page," she said in a telephone interview last week, adding excitedly "(that's one of the best things that has ever happened to me."

Armatrading, an avid comic book collector who readily admits to buying between eight to 12 comics a week, was "overjoyed" when she was sent the framed page which now hangs proudly on her study wall.

Her addiction to comics slots in well with her own attitude to life and music; that neither should be taken too seriously.

Joan Armatrading at the Fine Arts Center Thursday night.

The lyrics on her new album Secret, Secrets: "Everything I want/I keep it private/Don't let anybody know/It's my secret/And I won't go," expresses best her need for privacy.

But Armatrading also remarks that she has little interest in the sorts of activities that tend to "get splashed across the newspapers."

"I don't go clubbing or drinking; that's not my life-style," she said, adding that her own interests were the "ordinary ones" of "getting to the movies, going to concerts and driving around."

Speaking of her own songs, she denies that they contain any deep philosophical or political messages and says she would hate her audience to feel they were "in school or at a lesson."

But although Armatrading protests against being taken too seriously, her critics and admirers find it difficult to resist. Ever since she first came to acclaim in 1976 with her unique brand of moody folk jazz, she has managed to resist becoming packaged by the media and the public, and has instead maintained an image of being a very private person.

Armatrading, who came to England from the West Indies when she was seven, recalled that she first started to write music "as songs for someone else to sing" when she was fourteen.

"It was only after my second album that I thought it could be a career for myself," recollected Armatrading who now has 11 highly acclaimed albums behind her.

Asked whether she felt her West Indian background had influenced her music, she replied that although her father played the guitar in a band in the West Indies, she received no specific family encouragement although "they never discourage me," she said.

Quizzed as to whether her songs had any overall theme or common links, Armatrading admits that they are mainly centered around "relationships."

But she is quick to deny any autobiographical content. "I write them 'as if' it's me but it's not necessarily my own experience," she said, adding "if people think it's me then I've written a good song."

She views her own music, as many of her critics do, as "independent," saying "when I go home I put on other people's music I admire, but no one sort has a heavy influence on me."

It is probably Armatrading's independent voice that has led many to identify her with the feminist movement, an assumption she greets coolly.

"I just do what I want to do," she said, commenting that her music is "written for anyone and everyone who wants to listen."

Remember Claudette Colbert in "It Happened One Night"? In one famous scene, she wore Clark Gable's pajama top, its huge proportions emphasizing her tiny ones. This year we can all imitate Miss Colbert, because a major trend of 1985 is The Big Shirt.

Originated by Italian designers, the big shirt was instantly picked up by fashion leaders all over the world. Here in the states, oversized-shirts appear in the collections of every designer from Clavin Klein to Norma Kamali.

Fabrics range from linen to chiffon to stiff, brightly printed cotton. Smock-like shirts can be worn to the office, and gossamer ones after dark. The style covers up every figure flaw because it covers every figure.

Big shirts have other virtues, too. They highlight a graceful head and pretty hands. And they span two recent fashion directions — the "forward" trend toward androgynous dressings and the "backward" trend to femininity.

Softball drops third consecutive game

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

GARDEN CITY, LONG ISLAND--Adelphi University's pitching stymied the University of Massachusetts softball team's offense and the Panthers swept two from UMass, 2-0 and 4-0, sending the Minutewomen to their third straight loss Sunday.

Adelphi freshman Kris Peterson got UMass, now 14-17-1, to ground out 13 times in the opener and sophomore Julie Bolduc struck out 15 in a one-hitter in the nightcap. UMass has not scored a run in its last three games.

"It was just a matter of hitting the ball," coach Elaine Sortino said. "In the first game we couldn't string anything together. In the second we were just trying to hit the ball."

Lynn Stockley tossed a two-hitter in the opener, her second two-hitter of the year. Stockey, 9-7, has given up two or less hits in ten games this year.

Adelphi took advantage of Stockley and Martha Jamieson throwing errors in the bottom of the first inning to take a 2-0 lead. It was the only errors UMass would commit all day, but it was enough.

"There can't be any exceptions at this level. You just can't do that (errors) against a good team," Sortino said.

In the second game, Bolduc fanned 15 and had a perfect game going before Sally Maher laid down a bunt for the team's only hit to lead off the seventh inning.

The Panthers, 12-10, took a 3-0 lead in the bottom of the third inning on a walk and three straight singles off Lisa Rever, 5-5-1. Adelphi added another run in the sixth. Rever gave up five hits while striking out two.

"I think we're a much better team than we showed today. I'm looking forward to May 11," Sortino said. The two teams meet in a rematch on May 11 in Amherst.

The UMass men's varsity eight slices through the Connecticut River yesterday morning. The men whipped the Coast Guard by six seconds. While the Women's varsity eight, both J.V. eights, and both novice eights also posted victories.

Women's lax loses its first

Women lose in overtime

The University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team lost its first game of the season as the University of New Hampshire upset the Gazelles 10-9 in two overtimes in Durham on Saturday. The Gazelles, now 6-1, went into the game ranked fifth in the nation. The Wildcats came in sixth and were considered one of New England's strongest teams.

"We're not upset, we played a pretty good game, there's just a few things we could've done better," assistant coach Polly Keener said of the game, speaking for head coach Pam Hixon who was away recruiting.

Led by All-America Pam Moryl's flurry of goals, UMass took a 2-0 lead and led for most of the game by one or two goals before the Wildcats tied the game in the final minutes of regulation.

The teams played a six minute overtime period. UMass controlled the first three minutes but were unable to get the lead. The teams exchanged possessions in the second three minutes before going into a four minute sudden-death overtime stanza.

There, New Hampshire won the game as an outside shot was tipped by several UMass sticks but evaded goalie Debbie DeJesus.

The ten goals represents the most given up by the Gazelles this season, only Boston College's seven goals interrupted a string during which UMass hadn't let more than three goals a game.

The Gazelles now face the number one-ranked team in the nation, Temple University on Saturday at home on NOPE Field. The game is scheduled for a 1 p.m. start.

Minutemen falter in RI, lose two A-10 games

Conference race tightens as errors cost UMass

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The race in the Eastern division of the Atlantic 10 tightened up as the University of Massachusetts baseball team dropped two games to the University of Rhode Island over the weekend.

The Minutemen, 16-12 overall and 6-3 in the conference, split a doubleheader on Saturday, losing 5-4 before winning 7-3. They lost 9-6 yesterday.

In the first game on Saturday, designated hitter Mike Cassidy ripped an 0-2 pitch from UMass's John Martin in the bottom of the seventh into the right-centerfield gap to drive in three runs and give URI 11-11 and 5-4, the victory.

UMass led 4-2 before starter Jim Knopf (3-2) loaded the bases on a single and two walks. Martin came on and got ahead of Cassidy before allowing the winning hit.

The Minutemen scored one in the first on Matt Sheran's solo homer, two in the fifth as Sean Flint's homer to center drove in Jack Bloise after a single and Jay Zerner doubled in Bruce Kingman.

URI's Joe Ward got the win to climb to 5-1. He allowed seven hits, two by Flint.

In the second game, Bobby Kostro got relief help from Jeff Jensen to win his second game of the season as UMass stroked two homers.

In the first, Steve Messina doubled in a pair to give UMass a quick lead. The Rams tied it with two in the fourth before Tom Fahan led off the fifth with a solo shot.

Kingman then singled and stole second before Todd Comeau walked. Angelo Salustri singled in a run to put UMass up 4-2. The Rams picked up an unearned run in the fifth before Kostro ran into trouble in the sixth.

The junior righthander walked the leadoff batter who was sacrificed to second with Cassidy coming up. UM manager Dick Bergquist took no chances with the hero of the Game one, sending the hard-throwing Jensen to the mound.

The junior struck out Cassidy and got Ted White to ground weakly to second to kill the threat.

UMass then put the game away in the seventh as Matt Sheran singled, Comeau walked and Salustri ripped a three-run homer to center. Jensen K'd two in the seventh to close the door.

Sunday saw URI score five unearned runs in the seventh inning to pull out a heartbreaker.

UMass took a 6-4 lead into the seventh with reliever Steve Allen on the mound. Salustri had trouble with a ground ball before a walk and a hit batter loaded the bases. Allen struck out Joe Gallager before White singled in a run with a line drive to center. Doug Wright then bare-handed a grounder and got the force at the plate.

URI's leading-hitter Tony Hill stapped to the plate, riding a poor 1-for-10 series. He shed those bad memories with a grand-slam to centerfield.

UMass left the bases loaded in the seventh and didn't threaten in the eighth or ninth.

The Minutemen scored all sixth of its runs on homers. Bloise had a solo shot in the third, Messina hit a three run dinger in the fourth before Bloise doubled and Flint plated him with a homer to right-center. Steve Allard started and went five for UMass. Pete Parente picked up the win in relief for URI.

Little mistakes add up as Gorillas edged at Yale

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

NEW HAVEN, CT - Against a nationally ranked team you can afford maybe one mistake, two if you're lucky. But when mistakes, no matter how little they seem to be at the time, happen in bunches, a good team will take advantage of them.

"We played as well as we have all season. The offense looked good and the defense I thought was tremendous, but the little things killed us," University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse coach Dick Garber said Saturday after his team lost 11-10 in overtime in 10th-ranked Yale.

The Gorillas, 3-5, fought back from a 5-1 deficit to take a 9-8 lead before Yale (9-2) fought back to go up 10-9 with 1:48 to go in the game.

UM attackman Tom Lukacovic sent the game into overtime, taking Kelley Carr's pass, wheeling around the net and driving his third goal past Yale goalie Brian Reilly with 29 seconds to go.

In overtime, UMass won the faceoff and had several good shots at winning the game before Adam Puritz came out of a pile in front of the UMass goal and beat Gerry Moreau 1:52 into the extra period.

The Gorillas, while playing up to their potential for the first time this season, lost the game by making too many small mistakes.

Yale's Doug Gansler (three goals) scored with one second to go in the first half, defenseman Bill Dixon intercepted an errant pass by Moreau on a clear and scored from 35 feet out as the UM goalie scrambled to get back in the net, and it was a Moreau pass that Yale picked off to set up the eventual game-winner.

UMass struggled clearing the ball as the Elis successfully rode the Gorillas off the ball nine times. The UMass close defense was tremendous, holding leading scorer Ted Moran without a point and letting up only two goals by attackmen. The UMass defensive midfielders were chewed up by the Elis: eight goals came from Yale middies.

For the Gorillas, Kelley Carr had two goals and Karl Hatton, Ken Freeman, Doug Musco, Matt O'Reilly and Mike Fiorini had single tallies. Lukacovic and Fiorini had three assists and O'Reilly one. Moreau made 13 saves.

Cheating breeds differing viewpoints

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the second in a four-part series on cheating at the University of Massachusetts. Today's story focuses on faculty and administrative views concerning how students cheat, how great the problem is, and how they feel about students' opinion on cheating.

While most people on campus at the University of Massachusetts believe cheating occurs on many levels and in all departments, there is a discrepancy as to the extent of the problem.

"It does not look like a significant problem to me, but that's a jaundiced viewpoint," said Nelson Pion, assistant School of Management dean.

Pion, who serves as chairperson of the SOM academic honesty committee to which SOM faculty are encouraged to report incidences of cheating, is the director of undergraduate counseling for SOM.

Responding to a student estimate that up to 50 percent of first year students in math and programming courses geared to an SOM major may be cheating on multiple choice exams, Pion said "I hope that that's not true. It's difficult for me to state."

Pion said he and other SOM administrators try to make faculty members aware that it is their responsibility to inform students about what they feel is responsible and appropriate behavior for their work.

The SOM academic honesty committee sees less than 10 cases of students caught cheating each semester, he said. If cheating is rampant, Pion said, then that is unfair to the students who play it straight.

Stanley Kulikowski professor of computer information science who teaches COINS 121, a first year programming course, estimated that 5 to 10 percent of his students may be involved in cheating at least once in a semester.

"We see about 40 cases of cheating out of a class of 500 in a semester," he said, "but four semesters ago we had a group of about 30 students involved in almost 150 cases of cheating."

At that time, the COINS department contacted University administrators about the situation. Administrators said that cheating campus-wide was almost four times greater that semester than previously, Kulikowski said.

He said a student estimate that half of all computer programs may have been copied or inappropriately completed was "probably a little high, but not out of range. I would estimate it's about one-third."

As for students, consultants, and teaching assistants selling programs, Kulikowski said he had heard that the going rate was about $50. Last semester a consultant was caught selling programs for $20 each.

"In our course, we're really more worried about students having a mastery of the material at the end of the semester," he said.

The problem of buying and selling programs is a difficult one, Pion said, and it is also hard to determine a cut-off point for students who engage the help of tutors.

"That's a problem we really don't have a handle on," he said. "There 's no way to police students who are being tutored."

Kulikowski emphasized that incidences of cheating are very draining on the COINS staff who must handle these cases.

English department chairman and professor Vincent J. DiMarco said he knows of no more than three or four cheating cases in his department each semester. He said it does not occur often with the essay papers he sees.

"I would have to think that because of the size of this department and the overall number of students here, cheating goes on," he said. "But in general, I think students are studious and responsible in their behavior."

DiMarco said it is not easy to cheat or use others' essay papers because these assignments are designed to utilize the individual student's own creativity. "Some students will always cheat, however," he said.

Student education of what constitutes plagarism helps reduce cheating on essays, DiMarco said. "I know some of my colleagues describe in a written handout given to each student exactly what plagarism is."

Dean of Students William F. Field said improper use of source material is a major problem and noted the dishonesty involved in improper use of library and other public resource materials.

Cheating will always affect a large percentage of students because course work is often scaled, he said. "A few trendsetters at the top of the scale who may have cheated will drop other students' grades," he said.

"If a class structure is sloppy, and you know people who cheat—it's tempting," he said. Field estimated six to eight cases of cheating are brought to his attention each semester and these cases are the ones which have not been resolved at a lower level.

Tomorrow: Big Brother, the consequences of cheating, the options of students caught cheating, and what is being done to prevent it.

Writer lectures on revolutions

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS

People in the Caribbean and Latin America are not going to stop rebelling and revolting because it's not a question of principle, it's a question of life and death, a Haitian writer said last night.

Jean Claude Martineau, a member of the Grenada Solidarity Center in Boston, said in a lecture attended by about 25 people that capitalism and democracy perceived by Latin Americans is different from what the Americans perceive. In the Caribbean and Latin America, he said, "We are the workers, we have no say in it (economic system)."

Martineau said this different view of capitalism and democracy leads to internal rebellion in these countries because the political and economic structure leads to poverty.

He said those who rebel are asking that "our resources be used for us," and said the economic system "put forth by the U.S. has failed," because the "U.S. doesn't encourage development or capitalism."

Martineau said when a revolt occurs in a Latin American country, the U.S. or any other outside country should not interfere.

"When something happens inside a country, you have to let people solve their own problems," he said.

Referring to assassinations in these same countries, he said, "When Abraham Lincoln and John F. Kennedy were assassinated, nobody came into the country to change order."

Citing Haiti, the Dominican Republic and Grenada as examples, Martineau said these countries are not asking for anything else but to be sovereign on the islands themselves.

"Democracy," he said, will be built "according to our (Haitians') needs and beliefs." Martineau argued further when he said that the industry in Haiti, as in many Caribbean and Latin American countries, is not geared at what the citizens use themselves. "They (Western nations) are using the cheap labor."

He said the different perception of democracy is what caused America to invade Grenada. To the Grenadians, he said, democracy is "not something they do every four years to use their ballot." He said it's where everything is done by everyone—participatory democracy."

"The U.S. was in a position where it had to show it still had power," he said. However, he added, "If you put Muhammad Ali in the ring with a two-year-old, I don't think it's a glorious victory."

High demand for classes is expected

By DANIELA WATERMAN
Collegain Correspondent

This is pre-registration week and if you're like most students at the University of Massachusetts you have faced the dismal reality of an oversubscribed course.

Courses are oversubscribed for several reasons, administrators said. Those courses which satisfy a core or major requirement are most frequently oversubscribed. Often there are simply not enough sections of a particularly popular course to satisfy the demand. Sometimes students pre-register for courses and don't show-up. Depending on the professor, they are dropped after two missed classes, but, until then, they are taking up space in a class they have no intention of taking.

Oversubscribed courses can present students with big problems.

Rick Meisser, a senior economics student, said he had to change his intended major because he couldn't get the business courses he needed to get into the School of Management.

"It's really frustrating. One oversubscribed course can mess up your whole schedule," Meisser said.

School of Management courses are frequently oversubscribed, and are difficult for non-business majors to get, administrators said. Art, journalism, economic, and communication courses are also frequently oversubscribed.

Reagan, senators work on package

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Reagan and about a dozen senators met yesterday in a late-hour effort to reach a compromise on the type of aid the United States should provide to Contra guerrillas fighting the leftist government in Nicaragua.

With showdown votes scheduled in the House and Senate for today, a small group of Senate Democrats reached agreement on a proposed compromise, then traveled to the White House to seek the president's concurrence.

Shortly before the White House discussion, Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd Jr., D-W. Va., said the Democrats "are willing to compromise and we hope the president is willing, too."

Reagan attended the meeting initially, and then turned the negotiations over to senior aides for what became an all-day bargaining session, according to White House spokesman Larry Speakes.

At issue in the Congress is whether the United States should provide direct or indirect help to rightist rebels seeking to oust a government with which the United States has continuing trade and diplomatic relations.

For the moment, the initiative on finding an alternative to the president's proposal was in the hands of the politically diverse group of Senate Democrats led by Byrd and Bennett Johnston of Louisiana. Others at the White House were Patrick Leahy of Vermont, Christopher Dodd of Connecticut, Daniel Inouye of Hawaii, John Kerry of Massachusetts and David Boren of Oklahoma.

State could lose $157 million in compromise

WASHINGTON (AP) — A budget compromise to be debated in the Senate this week would cost Massachusetts $157.25 million next federal fiscal year, far less than the more than $500 million the state would have lost under President Reagan's initial proposal, a study says.

The study by the Federal Funds Information for States, a joint research venture of the National Governors' Association and the National Conference of State Legislatures, also estimates Massachusetts would lose $997.43 million over the next three federal bookkeeping years.

Quincy teachers back in the classrooms

QUINCY (AP) - Public school teachers returned to their classes yesterday, hours after last-ditch negotiations with a state mediator produced tentative agreement on a three-year contract with a 12.8 percent pay hike.

"We're very gratified that it was able to be resolved," said Mary Curtin, president of the Quincy Teachers Association. She said members voted unanimously at a pre-school meeting to return to work.

"Everyone was very pleased," said School Superintendent John Osterman. The teachers "are glad to have it behind them, particularly to have a three-year contract."

Negotiators for the teachers, who have worked without a contract since August 1984, dug into the bargaining session with the Quincy School Committee at 10:30 a.m. Sunday at the Saltonstall State Office Building. But it wasn't until midnight Sunday that weary negotiators wrapped up terms of the tentative agreement.

Heart recipient on dialysis

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) - Doctors placed artificial heart recipient Jack Burcham on dialysis yesterday, after initially deciding the machine's use would be unnecessary, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Burcham, 62, was to remain connected to the machine for four to six hours and implant surgeon William C. DeVries would decide later whether further treatment would be needed, said Donna Hazle, a spokeswoman for Humana Hospital Audubon.

Pre-registration mobilizes counselors, programs

Sign-up to last two weeks

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

The counseling period for pre-registration has begun and so has the race for courses, faculty signatures, schedule books and pre-registration forms.

Students who have not declared a major can pick up their pre-registration form from the College of Arts and Sciences Information and Advising Center (CASIAC) in E20 Machmer.

"Faculty advisor signatures aren't needed for undeclared students," Alisa Rosen, CASIAC coordinator said.

Pre-registration forms must be returned by May 3 to the Registrar's Office in 213 Whitmore. If they are turned in late, $5 must accompany them for late processing.

Students who have declared a major can pick up their pre-registration forms from their department. Several departments require faculty advisor signatures before submitting the forms to Whitmore. These departments are listed on an information sheet that comes with the pre-registration form.

There may also be a wait for advising all over campus.

"There's about an hour wait for advising during pre-registration," Rosen said. "It's usually helpful if students make up some sort of program before coming in to save time."

Approximately three faculty advisors and five student counselors will be in the CASIAC office this week between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.

Counseling line saves time

Instead of waiting an hour in line for academic counseling, an evening hotline has been set up to answer students' questions about pre-registration and course selection.

The new hotline is set up for this week only and is staffed by student counselors from the College of Arts and Sciences Information and Advising Center (CASIAC).

"Students can ask questions about course selection, how to fulfill core requirements and pre-requisites for certain majors," Beth Elam, CASIAC student counselor said.

"It's amazing how many students don't know how to read the course catalogue," Elam said. "The hotline just makes it easier to get answers without waiting."

The hotline will supplement the counseling services at CASIAC this week.

Two students will staff the hotline telephones from 7 to 10 p.m. tonight until Thursday. Students can call 545-2191 for advising.

"If we have good response, we might expand the hotline in the future during add-drop periods," Elam said.

"Most management courses are tough to get, especially Management 314 (Personnel Management) and Management 330 (Managerial Behavior), which are required for the major," said a spokeswoman for the department, who asked not to be identified.

Art courses are also tough to get.

"Basic drawing courses are always the first to fill up because they fulfill a "C" core requirement. Besides, everyone has a secret urge to learn to draw," secretary Carol Lee of the art department said.

Journalism courses are also difficult to get.

"Last semester, all of our courses had long waiting lists," Jim Baptiste of the journalism department said.

"Next fall we have three or four professors on sabbatical, so it will probably be very tough to get classes again next semester," he said.

The economics department has many oversubscribed courses but "if students are persistent, they can usually get into any economics class they want," Kathy Johnson of the economics department said.

"There are generally enough sections of the lower level courses to satisfy demand. Some upper-level courses, like "Money and Banking" and "Marxian Economics" are a bit harder to get, but students who keep trying are usually sucessful," she said.

"People who are leaning towards a specific major should come in and get advice," Rosen said. "They should come in before the end of their sophomore year. Some majors require a lot of classes and it may be hard to graduate in eight semesters if you wait until your junior year."

BDIC offers alternatives

By STEVE HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

For the self-directed student who finds during pre-registration that his academic goals depart from the 96 majors offered at the University of Massachusetts, the Bachelors Degree with Individual Concentration (BDIC) program offers a practical alternative.

Currently supervising 150 student-designed concentrations ranging from architectural studies, vertebrate paleontology to professional story telling and eating disorders, the BDIC program facilitates the student who has "definite career or personal goals," BDIC Assistant Director Thelma Canale-Parola said.

A student with at least four semesters left at the University and is interested in designing a BDIC major should contact the BDIC office before pre-registration ends May 3. Applicants who submit a curriculum proposal including at least 12 three-credit courses related to their concentration endorsed by a faculty member and approved by a BDIC supervisor will be admitted to the program.

According to BDIC alumni survey, 80 percent of BDIC graduates are in careers or graduate study related to their individual concentrations.

"It's a type of major which is very marketable," Mary Ann Quinn, a BDIC corporate public relations major said.

"When employers look at someone who has designed a major for themself, they recognize the motivation and enthusiasm that indicates," she said.

From the development of the proposal to graduation, BDIC students are offered advising by the program staff.

"Because it's such a small program, we can offer more advising," Susan Machala, BDIC coordinator said.

In addition to the advising services provided by the BDIC staff, students can receive counseling from graduates of the program through an alumni network which was established last year.

Rip-off victims to air grievances this week

By DAVID BURGESS
Collegian Staff

There is a place on campus this week for people who have been ripped off by mail order scams or other dishonest business practices to voice their complaints and possibly get satisfaction for their troubles.

During National Consumers Week, the Consumer Protection Division of the Hampshire and Franklin County Public Protection Bureau will hold free seminars on consumer protection and consumer rights. The consumer division staff will distribute pamphlets, complaint forms, and information from 1-5 p.m. tomorrow on the Campus Center Concourse. A similar seminar will be held at the Hampshire Mall on Thursday and Friday in Hadley.

The Public Protection Bureau is part of the Hampshire County District Attorney's office.

Susan Grant, director of the consumer division, said this is a local consumer agency. "It is the first rung of the ladder for people who wish to complain about consumer problems or to receive answers about consumer rights," she said.

Consumer transactions cover a broad range from auto and other retail sales to mail order, credit and debt collection, housing and product safety, Grant said.

These are only a few of the areas the division can help with, she said, and people can also be referred to higher agencies to handle problems.

Grant said the consumer division will listen to people's complaints and answer as many questions as possible. Usually the division advises people to seek personal legal representation but on three occassions within the last year the division has helped to arbitrate cases where criminal violations were involved.

The consumer division also works with public interest groups such as MassPIRG. Representatives of the UMass chapter of MassPIRG will also run the booths at the seminars.

The Public Rights Division is also a part of the protection bureau and people can be referred to it for answers concerning illegal discrimination, violation of open meeting laws and violation of environmental laws.

Men caught with paraphernalia

Two men were caught with what was believed to be cocaine crystals in a parked car Saturday night and were given trespass notices from University of Massachusetts police.

A man on leave from the Coast Guard and a Springfield machinist were observed cutting a substance by security guards outside Grayson House. Police found a mirror and a razor blade on the car floor and warned the two men. They were told they would be arrested on sight if they returned to campus.

In other police news:

- A sun roof and a car stereo system were reported stolen from a Trans-Am parked in lot 32 Friday night. Police said the car received minor damages and the theft appeared to be very professional. The total value of the loss was reported at $2,000.
- A male student claimed he was punched in the mouth when he walked by two unidentified men near Kennedy Tower Friday night, police said. He told police that one of the men swung around and punched him in the mouth even though there were no words exchanged in the incident.
- A 19-year-old student was arrested for stealing a fire extinguisher from the Campus Center Friday night, police said. He was picked up walking on North Pleasant Street. He was charged with larceny and will be arraigned in Hampshire District Court.

In Amherst police news:

- $950 worth of stereo equipment was reported stolen from a Kellogg Ave. apartment over the weekend. There are no suspects.
- In a Riverglade apartment, two televisions, worth $725 and a Minolta camera, valued at $150 were stolen late Friday or early Saturday. Police said forced entry was made through a glass sliding door.
- $710 worth of stereo equipment was reported stolen from Justin Ryan's Friday night. A worker said he left the stereo in the vestibule while he was closing and it was gone when he returned.
- Police recovered a torched, stolen vehicle off Route 9 in Belchertown Sunday.

The 1980 Ford Mustang, owned by a Hadley man, was stolen from the Holyoke Mall Sunday and was later found, burning by the side of the road, police said. The fire department was called to the scene and put out the fire.

Run for Ritter raises $8,100

The sixth annual Run for Ritter road race won by Bill Slocombe 32:48.8, raised $8,100 in pledges last Saturday at the Alumni Stadium track.

The 10 kilometer (6.2 mile) race was sponsored by the Newman Center. Proceeds went to Covenant House, a shelter for runaways in New York City.

Jeff Teeters and Ed Carreo, both University of Massachusetts students, finished second and third respectively.

Rita Doherty won the women's division title clocking in at 40:28.4. Monica Johansson took second and Yana St. John finished third in the women's division.

Race director Bob Coulter said all 450 participants finished the race and said the sun or heat caused no problems.

The youngest runner was 10-year-old Luke Higgins. The race's oldest participant was Newman Center director, the Rev. Joseph Quigley, racing in the walking competition.

Levenson new editor-in-chief

The Collegian staff yesterday elected the Board of Editors for the 1985-86 academic year and voted to change its constitution.

Current co-production manager Dode Levenson will be next year's editor-in-chief. "There will be some tremendous changes in the day-to-day operation of the paper which I'm really excited about," he said after news of his victory.

Anne McCrory, current managing editor will retain her position as well as Peter Soderberg, who will remain production manager.

Larry Bouchie and William Spain tied 61-61 for the executive editor's position. A runoff election will be held Wednesday.

Tom Middleton was elected news editor for the upcoming year. Middleton said he is looking foward to his role on what is "not only the largest but the best college daily in New England."

Peter Abraham retained his position as sports editor while Derek Roberts was elected photo editor, Elizabeth Luciano was elected arts editor, Susan Eaton will move into the women's issues position and Kimberly Burge was elected as Black Affairs editor.

The staff also voted to restructure the voting procedure for the board of editors. With the change, the board of editors would be restructured to the board of directors, which would be comprised of the editor-in-chief, members of the board of editors, members of the business board and members of the production board, along with an executive council.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Divestment semantics

When students meet with members of the board of trustees this week to discuss University investment, they should recommend that the trustee policy that governs the University's investments in South Africa be rewritten, so that the University follows the true intent of the policy of divestment and no longer invests in corporations that profit from trading in apartheid South Africa.

The amendment, 2a, to Trustees Document T73-093 now reads: "The University will not invest in corporations or businesses that operate in (emphasis added) South Africa or in countries that have similar apartheid racial policies."

Student groups claim the University violates the amendment because of its holdings in three corporations, Thomas & Betts Intl. Inc., Foxboro Co. and Proctor & Gamble Co. These groups should be aware that none of the three violates the amendment as it is now written.

Thomas & Betts owned a subsidiary in South Africa, T & B (S.A.) (Proprietary) Limited, but it is no longer in operation and, according to the company, "exists in name only."

Foxboro Co. does business with an international representative in South Africa. Richard Sherman of their Public Relations Dept., said, "Yes, we do business there, a small percentage." Foxboro Co. does not violate the amendment because it does not operate in South Africa; it does business with a company that does.

Proctor & Gamble has in the past been mistakenly listed among corporations that do business in South Africa according to the Investors Responsibility Research Center, a non-profit group. P & G does, however, "license the manufacture and distribution of a limited number of our pharmaceutical products by another American company — this done largely for humanitarian reasons," according to the company.

UMass Treasurer Robert H. Brand, interviewed by mail because he refuses to answer questions in person, said he feels Foxboro Co. is an acceptable investment because it does not operate in South Africa. UMass Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, interviewed by phone, said he personally does not support the policy of divestment, but understands it to be the policy of the University and is committed to upholding it.

David C. Knapp, president of the University, sounded more amenable to change. Interviewed by phone, he said that "if there is a need for clarification in the wording [of the amendment] the trustees will consider it."

We believe the wording of amendment 2a should be changed from, "...companies that operate in," to, "...companies that derive profits from business transacted in South Africa..."

The University was at the forefront of this issue eight years ago when it supported divestment as a policy, to show its repugnance toward the racist government of South Africa. The trustees should not keep the University from the fore, now, by stumbling over their own semantic arguments.

Give them what they need

Peter Dow

This past weekend a large protest concerning U.S. nuclear policy and U.S. policies in Central America and South Africa took place in Washington, D.C. No doubt much work and energy went into planning such a gathering; however, it is disturbing that not nearly the same amount of energy was devoted to investigating the purposes of such American policies.

The protest closely coincided with the upcoming vote in Congress on $14 million in aid to the pro-U.S. rebels in Nicaragua, and, no doubt, will have an adverse influence on this crucial American security vote. Do these people realize what they are promoting when they advocate the ending of U.S. funds to the democratic forces in Nicaragua? Contrary to what they have been led to believe, peace will only come to Central America when the people of Nicaragua triumph over the Sandinista junta, and true democrats (such as Arturo Cruz or Mario Rappaccioli) are given a fair opportunity to gain power. But such possibilities will only be realized if the Nicaraguan rebels are given adequate funding. Chanting silly slogans like "U.S. Out of Nicaragua" certainly does not constructively contribute to any peace process, and, if nothing else, only serves to strengthen the communist resolve in Central America.

It would be a challenge for the American left (typified by those protesters) to prove Nicaragua is a sovereign, independent state, governed by an indigenous military junta. The Sandinistas have consolidated their power within Nicaragua under the direction of Cuban advisors (who number in the thousands and dominate the Nicaraguan Interior Ministry); they have forced the country's Jewish community into exile, by formally connecting themselves with the PLO and duplicating their terrorist activities; they have instituted Sandinista Defense Committees (CDS), which carry out Gestapo-type raids against those who are judged to be "counter-revolutionary;" and they have murdered thousands of native Indians in raids carried out using the "defensive" Mi-24 Hind helicopters, kindly provided by the Soviet Union.

The actions of the Sandinistas are frightening, not only because they are inflicting pain on the Nicaraguan people, but because such violence is related to a grander enterprise of a "revolution without frontiers." The Sandinistas are actively involved in assisting the FMLN communists in El Salvador. The armaments, of course, are not produced in Nicaragua; they are imported from Bulgaria, the Soviet Union, Vietnam, and other Eastern Bloc countries. Nor will the Sandinistas stop in El Salvador; they will gladly supply arms to any anti-American group in Central America, thus attempting to spread communist tyranny to Honduras, Guatemala, and even to Mexico. It is too bad the Washington protesters and their counterparts here at UMass have chosen to ignore this fact. They have assumed the role of advocating a "no more Vietnams" policy as they try to avoid U.S. military involvement in Central America.

Such a belief is dangerously mistaken for by following their leftist policies of appeasement and "friendship" with the Sandinistas, the U.S. would surely be committing itself to a future war with the communists. The Reagan administration is correct in arguing for support of the Nicaraguan rebels. By assisting the Nicaraguan people in their own fight against the Sandinistas, America would be avoiding a future military commitment in our backyard.

This point is so relevant, and the $14 million funding is so important, that President Reagan has been lobbying hard for its passage; he has even asked for a cease-fire in Nicaragua and church-mediated negotiations between the FSLN and the rebels.

Still the opposition continues, as leftists and even some congressmen mock Reagan's reference to the rebels as "freedom fighters." By ridiculing the freedom fighters, pro-Sandinista Americans have slapped many Nicaraguan people in the face; they have ignored the grave commitment made by each Nicaraguan who is fighting totalitarianism; namely, the dedication to maintain one's sovereignty, freedom and individuality. It is infuriating to note that so many of the same people who loudly supported and admired the freedom fighters in Nicaragua who armed themselves against Somoza should be so condescending against those who seek to do the same thing against the Sandinistas.

Hopefully those protesters and their leftist allies throughout America and particularly here in the Happy Valley will wake up and realize what is really at stake in Central America before it's too late. For the only way to truly avoid "another Vietnam" is to support the democratic, pro-American forces in Nicaragua; and the first step in this direction is congressional approval of $14 million in aid to those fighters.

Genocide anniversary target of vandalism

The Armenian Students Club of UMass is commemorating the 70th anniversary of the Armenian Genocide. This hideous crime to humanity was committed by the Turkish government in 1915. While trying to increase the student population's awareness of the Genocide, we have encountered the following obstacles:

1) Our posters have selectively been torn down.

2) On the Holocaust Memorial Posters, the film The Armenian Case has been penciled out.

3)On the posters that have remained up, the word Turkish has been penciled out.

4) A three-yard banner that was hanging in the Student Union has been stolen.

We don't know who is performing these acts of vandalism, but it is no doubt a person or persons who wish to hide Turkey's blood-stained past, and the Turkish government's unquestionable guilt. Turkey still holds the highest number of political prisoners of any country in the world. Amnesty International has repeatedly accused the government of denying human rights and "widespread and systematic torture." Yet Turkey is spending millions of dollars in public relations to brainwash the American public into believing that they are "nice guys." This propaganda is coming from a country whose government, to this day denies killing two million people, and names libraries and streets after the "man" who issued the orders to do so.

Minority enrollment down from last year

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Despite an increase enrollment of Third World students at the University of Massachusetts over the last three years, minority applicants for next fall have dropped 10 percent from 1984.

According to Juan Caban, associate director of freshman admissions, 1,145 minority high school students have applied to UMass. In 1984, there were 1,317 applicants.

On the other hand, Tim Rinehart, acting director of undergraduate admissions said the total number of applications for the fall of 1985 is 18,200, an increase of 1,000 over 1984. The University accepts about 12,000 with a final freshmen enrollment of 4,000.

Out of the pool of minority applicants, approximately 1,972 will attend the University through the Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP), while 351 will come through the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Blacks and Other Minorities (CCEBMS). One hundred and fifty-one minority students will enter the University through no support program, he said.

However, Caban added the figures will not be final until September when students decide whether to attend the University or not. Then, "the yield will go up if they come," he said.

The average number of minority applicants who finally attend is 40 percent, Caban said.

Caban and other officials predict a number of factors have contributed in the low number of applicants. These include the Yvette Henry case, the rising cost of a college education and the financial aid cutbacks. In addition, the high drop-out rate among minority leaves the University with a limited number of prospective students.

Caban said community colleges are "affecting us more and more," as students opt for them instead of attending a state university. The colleges' enforcement of Affirmative Action policies also attracts students by offering scholarships and special programs.

However, Caban feels the low number of applicants is only "periodic." Rinehart agrees. He said he feels 1985-86 will be "a good year in general."

Paul Barrows, director of CCEBMS said he's optimistic that we will get a high percentage of applicants that actually commit themselves to attend in the fall."

He added, that even if the University gets the same number of students or less (CCEBMS) will be "strapped" in terms of staff. "We can't accommodate the students we have now. We need additional resources in tutorial, advising and administrative duties," he said.

Gloria de Guevera, director of Educational Access and Outreach, an office overseeing programs such as CCEBMS, BCP and Handicap Student Affairs, said it is difficult to allocate new staff because in addition to working with a steady budget, the people "are not in the boundary of the University."

She said that for the University it is also a "system of setting priorities and competing (among support programs) for resources that are really scarce."

Benjamin Rodriguez, director of BCP said, "The important thing to do is make a major effort in bringing the students who have been accepted and are doubtful about attending come."

Award to recognize services

By KIMBERLY BURGE
Collegian Staff

Third World students who have performed services for the University of Massachusetts and the Amherst community have a opportunity to be elected by their fellow students to receive the Shirley Graham Du Bois Community Service Award.

Rick Townes, director of academic services for the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Blacks and Other Minorities (CCEBMS) said, "Every year we try to recognize a student who has put forth a lot of hard work and effort in the community."

The award will be given as a part of CCEBMS Family Day to be held May 18.

The award, first given in 1977, is named after Shirley Graham Du Bois, an author, composer, professor and philanthropist. She served on staff at UMass from 1974-75.

Co-recipients of last year's award were Sylvia Kinn and Michael Nauls. Kinn was president of Afrik-Am and a member of the Third World Caucus. Nauls was also a member of the Third World Caucus and co-coordinator of the Malcolm X Center.

Only CCEBMS students are eligible for the award and allowed to vote. Students can nominate their peers and he or she will be judged on the greatest contribution to the community, he said.

Voting will be held from April 22 to April 26 and ballots are available from CCEBMS advisers or from CCEBMS secretary, Carol Cox.

CLINIQUE'S BASIC EYE EMPHASIZER

Clinique's Basic Eye Emphasizer is the unique powder makeup for eyes that does it all.
Used dry, it's a shadow that shapes and perfects the whole eye area, adding depth to other eye makeups.
Used wet, it's a subtle eyeliner that also fills out lashes.
You'll find it in its own mirrored case at our Clinique counter. In natural-shadow colors, of course.
Along with the Clinique Computer, and a free skin analysis.

UMass tennis awaits budget ax

Despite cutbacks, teams press on

By STUART GOTTLIEB
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's tennis teams are in their second to last year of existence. After next season they are, as said by Al Rufe, Assistant Director of Athletics, "Scheduled to change to a non-varsity status."

Tennis is only one of the several teams being demoted from the varsity level. Among the other victims are golf, skiing, and wrestling.

At the men's tennis front, the netmen are having a good season. They are currently 4-3 in the tough Atlantic 10 division.

The squad picked up its fourth win over the weekend when they finished a rain-delayed match with Rhode Island at the Atlantic 10 tournament at Rutgers. The Minutemen had led 4-0 back on April 8th when rain stopped play with UMass needing one point for the victory.

Coach Manny Roberts feels very satisfied with the team's play thus far and gives special credit to a few players in particular.

"A big help this year were the addition of Jeff Brady, Rich Lingren, and David Singer. I feel they brought us back to a level of respectability not seen in the recent past," Roberts said.

Brady is a transfer student from Tennesee-Martin and is currently in the number one singles slot. Lingren and Singer are both back after taking a year off and are playing third and sixth singles respectively.

Roberts also feels that his teams' competitiveness this season is due in part to the play of "doubles specialists" Jon Deklerk and Paul Zaretsky.

One of the major surprises this season was an 8-1 pounding of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

"Last season they beat us 7-2," said Roberts, "And coming back this season and playing virtually the same lineup (there was only one graduate from M.I.T.) shows me the improvement and maturity of my players."

At the league tournament, UMass took a respectable fifth, beating Rhode Island, St. Bonaventure, Duquesne and St. Joseph's. The Minutemen were two points behind fourth place George Washington. Penn State won the meet followed by Temple and West Virginia.

On the conference schedule, Roberts is realistic.

"We don't expect to beat the West Virginias or the Penn States mostly due to the fact that they have 90 percent scholarship players to our none."

"I like the looks of the upcoming freshmen," said Norris, "They all show a great deal of talent and enthusiasm."

On the women's scene, UMass is not faring as well. They are in the midst of what coach Ned Norris called "A season of rebuilding."

His team is currently 0-4 and are just trying to last out the season in hopes of some good young prospects for next year.

"All I can say is I want to go as far as we can in the tournament (Atlantic 10's, April 26), and finish the season with as many wins as possible, then we can see what we can do with the new prospects."

The only problem is that after next season, he won't be able to say "Wait till next year" anymore.

What is being done for tennis? Not enough to save it apparently.

The captain of the men's team, senior John Summerstein, sits on the Athletic Council, an advisory board to the Faculty Senate.

"I tried to have the council reverse the decision to cut tennis back, it's a sport that you can play for life and the school does pretty well considering we have no scholarships. They refused to listen to me, I feel I was brushed off. It's a shame," he said.

Sommerstein said he is trying to start a grass roots campaign to reinstate the sport though the help of parents, alumni and others but doesn't hold much hope.

"Tennis deserves a chance," he said. "I hope something can be done."

Men's soccer shuts out field in tourney

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team registered four shutouts to win the first annual UMass spring tournament over the weekend.

The Minutemen are playing "the best soccer in three years," according to head coach Jeff Gettler, who has seen his team win a host of indoor tournaments and meet with success since going outside.

"Since I've been here this is the best we're playing. The team really looks sharp," Gettler said. "This is an optimistic sign for the fall. I think we'll be strong."

UMass beat a combined team from Williams and Amherst Colleges dubbed "Wilherst" 2-0 in the tourney opener. They then went on to beat Vermont 2-0 before pinning a 5-0 decision on Eastern Connecticut State.

In the finals, UMass whipped Clark University 4-0 to come away with the championship.

Don Donahue was perfect in goal for UMass, not allowing a goal. Sweeper Matt Cushing was strong defensively as Donahue was rarely tested.

Nick Marciano had three goals along with Tom Giordano. Tom Uschock, Kurt Manal and Andy Bing each had a pair of tallies while Mike Bellino added a single goal.

Gettler, who is losing only two seniors while seeing his funding increase, said that his recruiting year was a good one with several incoming forwards and goalies expected to battle for positions.

News Item: The University of Massachusetts basketball team announced the signing of Duane Chase, an all-Baltimore forward, to a letter-of-intent.

News Item. The $2.5 million renovations to the Curry Hicks Cage are nearing completion and should be ready for basketball games next winter.

News Item. The UMass football team, with three junior-college tranfers and au aiting a crop of highly-sought freshmen recruits, is in the midst of spring practice and anxiously looking to the fall season.

As the final groans from the seven varsity teams reduced to club status begin to die down, new sounds are being heard at UMass.

They are the sounds of winning. The major, revenue producing sports at UMass (football and men's basketball) are in the process of building what, in two or three years, should be major forces in their respective divisions.

The signing of Chase and David Brown, another Baltimore star, are the results of intensive recruiting by first-year assistant coach Dennis Jackson.

UMass has rarely, if ever, had the services of Baltimore area players, considered some of the nation's best prep players. Jackson, a well-known instructor at the renowned Five Star camp, has succeeded in landing players that previously eluded UMass. Others, including a top Baltimore-area point guard prospect, may be signing soon.

On the football front, second year head coach Bob Stull had his breaking-in year with the team and has begun putting his stamp on the team.

The new recruits, while not expected to reverse a 3-8 season, will be given chances to play while some veterans are being switched to different positions to better utilize their talents. These are the moves of good programs. The junior-college players and freshmen, as well as veterans tired of losing, could make UMass a Yankee Conference power.

These moves, viewed separately as just another announcement and blurb in the sports pages, blend together to form hope for two UMass sports that had been lacking in that quality for all too long.

No student at UMass today has seen a winning football or basketball team since the football team in 1981. The time, it seems, has come. And not a moment too soon.

A TRIBUTE TO A LEADER

by Marilyn G. Bou
Nummo Staff

The prinicipal leader of the Non-Violent Civil Rights Movement in America was honored in a re-dedication ceremony of the center named after him in Orchard Hill at the University of Massachusetts/Amherst.

Ernest Allen, professor of Afro-American studies said although he praises King for developing the world-wide respect gained through the non violence, Allen said, "to be a true believer you must be able to withstand someone sticking a lit cigarette in your neck and not reating violenlty."

Allen pointed out that during the period of when the Civil Rights Movement was most active, the U.S. was trying to demostrate to the world what a democratic nation it was, Allen said. Yet, he continued, the media world-wide was showing people getting bitten by dogs, hosed down by firemen and clubbed while being carried away by police.

"Students played a vital role in the Civil Rights Movement. Youths by nature is impetous. Too many people from my generation Allen said, "have mellowed out, perhaps as you get older you mellow out."

Students made and recieved great strides as members of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee(SNCC) and the Southern Christian Leadership Conferecne (SCLC), as they engaged in sit-ins and other non-violent acts.

"How could you go into a segregated restaurant before had a job good enough to pay for it," Allen said.

Allen in finishing his speech said, "Let us honor King not only by reading his works, but by practicing the kind of life he attempted to live, in keeping with the struggle."

The program also included a film of the March on Washington. It featured footage of crowds of people gathered peacefully in protest of the segra-gationist laws still practiced around the country during the sixties. It highlighted King's "I Have a Dream" speech.

Consequently, the march was influential in the passage of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. "One would like to say Dr. King's work is over, but in fact we have gone to before the sixties. Our work is not done," said Allen.

A discussion was held in which the audience expressed their reactions to the film. Alberto Valdes, a crescent for the fraternity of Phi Beta Sigma, said, "We should study people who made history, study those around us. We tend to segregate ourselves; By our majors, our languages, and our skin colors. King made history by making people go past that and it is our responsibility to keep the lines of communication open between our peoples. UNITY! Look into it!"

A portrait was dedicated to the Martin Luther King Jr. Center painted by Robert Lynch. Lynch, an art major is the first black recepient of a four year scholarship at UMass.

"I wanted to do this (the portrait) a long time ago. It was an honor for me to do it," Lynch said.

Rudolph F. Miller, a legal studies major, and Roscoe F. Robinson, president of Phi Beta Sigma, Inc., UMass/Amherst chapter said "We feel we have something to do here and a positive force with which to do it with. Between us, we can move a mountain."

"Unification is a problem here with the students of color," they continued, "a goal of ours is to unify primarily students of color."

The Afro-Latin Musical Experience

by Dan Lewis
Nummo Staff

The annual Jazz All Stars concert was held in the Fine Arts Center concert hall last Sunday. The concert opened the Fourteenth Annual Black Musicians Conference which will run throughout the year. The conference will feature several concerts, workshops and recitals including, "The Bright Moments Festival" and Jazz in July" workshops.

The Jazz All Stars performance featured percussionists Mongo Santamaria, Max Roach and Tito Puente. Tito Puente, referred to as the King of Latin music, is a pioneer of Latin Jazz. He is credited with over 120 recordings with his orchestra and was the recipient of two Grammy Awards in 1978 and 1983.

Max Roach is considered by many to be one of the greatest drummers of jazz history. Roach is a member of the University's Department of Music and Dance faculty. Roach came to prominence as a Bebop drummer for Charlie Parker. He later made award winning recordings with Thelonius Monk, Dizzy Gillespie, Bud Powell and many others. Roach's style has influenced several jazz percussionists.

Mongo Santamaria has maintianed an international reputation as one of the worlds foremost innovators in Latin percussion. A native of Cuba, Santamaria has recieved international reviews and prominent recognition for his appearances at New York's Lincoln Center, Town Hall and Madison Square Garden, to name a few. Santamaria's major instruments are the conga drums.

The concert was just the beginning of a week of Afro-Latin entertainment and cultural activities. On Monday Tito Puente held a workshop in the Fine Arts Center and the Augusta Savage Gallery in the New Africa House featured the opening of "The Movement of Music: A Collective Experience". the opening included a reception and concert by Samba Space. The ensemble featured Joe Platz, Rich Downs, Liz Tiley, John Weeks and Geseles L'Italien.

Tonight the Hampden Gallery features the opening of "Children of Darkness" by Rafael Morales. Also tonight in the Cape Cod Lounge, Student Union, four perspectives of Afro-Latin music can be heard at a panel discussion. The panel includes Tito Puente, John Storm Roberts, Marta Moreno Bornell and Enrique Fernandez. The concert will begin at 7:00pm, admission is free.

On Wednesday and Thursday two films will be presented on campus free of charge. Wednesday "Sugar Cane Alley" will be shown at 7:00pm in Thompson Hall room 104. "When the Mountain Trembles" will be shown, in cooperation with Ahora Caribbean week, on Thursday at the Campus Center, room 164. The film will be shown at 6:00 and 9:00 pm.

On Friday Pablo Landrum will hold a vocal and percussion workshop at the Fine Arts Center in the music wing, room 44. The workshop will begin at 11:15 am. The week's activities will end on Friday night with the 8th annual Solos and Duos concert. Pablo Landrum and Theresa Folks-Pliar will perform in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union at 8:00 pm.

kEach of the Art exhibihits will remain open through the week. Here are the galleries opening and closing times:

Augusta Savage Memorial Gallery, first floor of New Africa House - Mon. thru Fri., 10am to 4pm.
Hampden Gallery, Hampden Commons, Southwest - Mon. thru Fri., 8am to 4pm.

The Annual Black Musicians Conference is a project of the Fine Arts Center, along with many other campus wide organizations the FAC has worked very hard to bring both Latin and African cultural events to the University. Your attendance will be appreciated at all these events.

Eddie Murphy Hits Mass.

He's funny but controversial

by Christopher Allen
Nummo Staff

In the first of two shows at Brandeis University on Wednesday night, comedian Eddie Murphy proved that he is really two people. One is a man whose schizophrenic closet of personalities is so extraordinarily varied and well-timed as to defy comparison.

The second is a schoolboy who thinks bodily functions and things you do in the bathroom are just about the funniest thing going. The combo provided enough to entertain and offend everyone.

Murphy has never avoided contrversy and he dealt with the picket line of students outside the school's Shapiro Gymnasium who were protesting his jokes about AIDS and homosexuality.

"I was in another state when I read this controversy," Murphy told a crowd of about 2,000 people. "I expected to come here and be surrounded by 2,000 faggots."

Protesters posters read 'Eddie Murphy: Reagan Court Jester,' 'Eddies Ignorance and Insensitivity Harm Everybody,' and 'Say No to Sexism.'

Murphy strode confidently on stage and declared,"People don't understand my comedy. I make jokes at everybody. I'm not anti-anything. I'm just pro-humor. I never say anything bad about faggots, I just think they,re funny people."

Murphy laughed at comments from members of a Brandeis University Lesbian and Gay Coalition who asked him to turn over his $60,000 fee to the Boston Aids Action Committee.

EDDIE MURPHY
Actor and Comedian

"Ha," the 24 year old comedian taunted, besides, it's 50,000."

After Murphy explained to the audience about his personality, the show was a wild impressionistic roller-coaster ride of humorous attacks on anything from personal hygiene to famous personalities, such as Mr. T.("The man does not look stable. Anybody who would cut his hair like that would cut your hair like that.") and boxer Leon Spinks advertising candy ("Peppermint Patties is the most goodiest.") were sidesplitters.

Even when he attacked the tougher subjects of venereal disease, oral sex and masturbation ("It's natural, free, American and here for you.") his wild irreverence and schoolboy fervor made the jokes seem to be taken no more seriously than locker room kidding.

Members of the school's programming board, who arranged for Murphy's visit, said in a statement released prior to his appearance , that the University is "an open community, and certainly anyone within the community is free to make a personal statement."

There's no question about it. Eddie Murphy can be offensive. But, if truth be told, life is offensive and anyone who can make you laugh and rid your mind of disease, hunger and strife for even just a few minutes, we can,t do without.

Murphy also appeared at the Springfield Civic Center on Thursday night.

Jamacians Skeptical Elections Near

by Christopher Allen
Nummo Staff

Five years after the last of three bitter national elections ripped through the slums, spewing gang warfare and gunfire between militant followers of socialist Prime Minister Michael Manley and conservative challenger Edward Seaga these rival communities are still fiercely loyal to their respective heroes.

As the prospect of a new electoral contest looms again, with Manley promising a summer challenge to now Prime Minister Edward Seaga, some Jamaicans worry that the urban violence could flare again in these gritty party strongholds.

From the Jamaica Labor Party (JLP), Hyacinth Bloyd, a community worker in Tivoli Gardens, a section of western Kingston, asserted, 'We are all united here because of Mr Eddie. He turned this area from a slum to a monument. The other party tried to break our spirit, but people here rejected them totally, and we always will.'

Tivoli Gardens, the low income development, was built 20 years ago with the help of Edwward Seaga who has ever since represented this area in Parliament.

Portia Simpson, one of Manley's top aides said,"until our party comes back in power, we will do everything in our power to keep that spirit alive. Our people are being victimized by the present government, and they know Michael would never let them suffer like this."

In many ways the two communities exemplify the powerful patronage system that has dominated Jamaican politics since the island's two major parties were founded in the 1940s. While Manley is seen as an idealistic social reformer and Seaga as a business like elitist, both men have built equally strong followings among Kingston's poor residents.

In the past several years, the rivalry between these two communities has been largely confined to verbal inuendo and snipping: "Manley is a communist," "Seaga rewards certain neighborhoods with jobs and garbage collection, a person isn't safe if he wanders into the opposition's turf."

In middle class communities analysts say Jamaicans disillusioned with extremist and personality cult politics are turning away from the two traditional parties in record numbers: a recent poll showed 35 percent of the voters 'undecided' in a hypothetical contest between Manley and Seaga.

Professor Michael Thelwell of the Afro-American Studies Department does not think ther will be an election before 1988 because of the Prime Minister Seaga's determination to remain in power.

In 1980, Jamaica turned to Mr. Seaga a Harvard educated sociologist to restore calm and economic vitality. Mr. Seaga's Jamaican Labor Party won 51 of the 60 seats in Parliament. As one of the first official acts Mr. Seaga broke diplomatic relations with Cuba. He has become one of the Reagan Administration's closest allies.

But inside the ghettos old hostilities are quickly rekindled. After a snap election was called b Seaga in 1983 while at a peak in popularity after his strong support for the United States-led invasion of Grenada, "Bogus Government" slogans appeared instantly throughout the west side. With deep personal and party loyalties dividing most poor voters the two leaders, few people believed Jamaica will soon see a return to it's traditional quiet transfer of electoral power.

Each year the CCEBMS Program sponsors, as part of the Family Day activity, the honoring of a student who has made the greatest service contribution to the Third World community. This award, the Shirley Graham DuBois Service to Community Award, is one in which students nominate and elect candidates. This is an important award, as the recipient is chosen by his/her peers.

All CCEBMS students are eligible. The winner will recieve an engraved plaque to be presented at CCEBMS Family Day.

Ballots can be picked up in room 214 New Africa House. Return completed forms to the same place by Friday April 26, 1985.

Letters to the Editor

I am white. Today, April 8, 1985, I read Nummo News for the first time. I was tired of seeing it in the trash and hearing racist jokes about it and not knowing exactly what it was. I wanted to be a little more aware of what is going on. I was surprised because an article directly related to me. I was also disgusted when I read it. It was the article with the headline "The Whitmore Sit-in: Two Pierspectives." I would like to address both views.

I assume the first student was Black. The first statement was that "The sit-in...was not our battle." To put it simply, it was every students battle against the administration totally disregarding student input. You could have come to the sit-in and stated how you felt. Was staying away your revenge? If you want "liberal" white students to work with you, then why don't you make an effort to work with them? Why don't you educate us about what needs to be changed and how to do it? Afterall, like you stated, you are the ones "who vitally understand the concept and the need for change." I invite you to educate me, to give me your input, to help me work with you for a change for the better.

I also, in turn, must assume the second view was written by a white student. You were just as bad! I don't think the Third World was letting me do their work for them. We must all do our work together. Why must it be known that they "blew it?" According to them WE "blew it!" We are both working, why can't we work together?

I think both letters were a big mistake. They just pointed fingers at the other group. Let's learn from these letters and past mistakes, no matter whose fault, that is not important. What is important, that we work together. Everyone should ask not only themselves but of others,"What can I do to help?" That is what I am doing with this letter, taking the first step. Will someone tell me what I can do to help?

Learning Civil Rights Firsthand

Students in two Afro-Am classes, studying political science and the Civil Rights Movement with professors Strickland and Thelwell respectively, met together to hear firsthand about the experiences of one white volunteer in the 1964 Mississippi Freedom Summer. That year, when most of the students in the classes were less than five years old, Alan Schiffman and approximately 800 other Black and white volunteers went to Mississippi to work for the council of Federated Organizations (COFO). They worked on voter registration, organizing the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party, providing health care (often the first that people had had), and teaching in Freedom Schools.

Schiffman arrived in Nashoba County, Mississippi in August, just after the bodies of Schwerner, Chaney, and Goodman, murdered by the local Sheriff, were found after having been missing for six weeks. On that note began what Schiffman describes as "the most incredible and intense learning experience of my life." He was at the time a graduate student in philosophy at Princeton, "a highly educated product of America." And yet, he knew nothing of Black culture or history, because, in America these are systematically and intentionally not taught.

While in Nashoba County, Schiffman spent most of his time talking with people, trying to get them attempt to register to vote and to be active in the MFDP, and teaching math and French in the Freedom School. Ath same time, Schiffman was exposed to a wholly new framework for understanding the world. Schiffman and many other volunteers were learning about the importance of the church, of music, and of collectivity in the Black community. And they were learning that dirt poor, often illiterate rural Blacks had sophisticated techniques of social organization, political analysis, decision making, and communication, to which they had never before been exposed. It was in Mississippi that they were firsrt exposed to "radically democratic" organizing. While the volunteers brought and taught certain skills useful in dealing with the white Mississippi power-structure, they learned by experience that "ordinary people carry within there own traditions that which is needed to free thenselves, and to develop a better life for themselves." Because of this, Professor Thelwell emphasized, the goal of volunteers was, "to organize ourselves out of a job."

When asked about the results of Freedom Summer 64, Schiffman cited four main areas of accomplishment: (1) empowerment of local Black leaders and power structure, (2) media attention temporarily reduced white violence, (3) emotional and intellectual impact on the volunteers themselves, and (4) connections were made and networks established which are still in use today in the protracted struggle for a truely democratic society.

Many volunteers had gone to Mississippi thinking of problems there as isolated, as not representative of America in general. But there they came to see that the "struggle for social justice...would ultimately direct itself to the forms of power in the United States." Although he has maintained contact with some of his comrades from those days, including professors Strickland and Thelwell, Schiffman has not visited Nashoba County in many years. However, "Bloody Nashoba" as it was nicknamed during Movement days, remains in the news. In 1980, it was chosen as the sight for Ronald Reagan's Presidential campaign kick-off. Reagan has clearly learned something about the importance of "Bloody Nashoba", and so should we.

Laboratory goes up in flames

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Staff

A section of insulation, overheated by a blowtorch, caused a two-alarm fire yesterday that destroyed Fisher Laboratory and injured one firefighter near Orchard Hill.

A physical plant welder using a torch to cut through a refrigeration pipe apparently ignited the insulation behind a wall and started the fire in the 73-year-old building, according to an Environmental Health and Safety employee.

The blaze, which broke out on the first floor shortly before 11 a.m., caused about $50,000 in damage, according to Art Clifford, director of the Office of Public Information.

"I left the building for 10 minutes to get mail and when I came back the whole place was full of smoke," Roger Choinard, the EHS employee, said. "By that time, the welder had already called the fire department."

"There was no flame, but a large volume of smoke pouring from the east side," said Amherst Fire Department Capt. Tim Atteridge, the first to enter the burning building. "We knew we had something when we got there. The fire was on the second floor by the time we arrived."

Atteridge said he had difficulty seeing once inside the building. "I couldn't see, my vision was completely obscured."

Amherst firefighter Don Moran suffered a leg injury when the ladder he and another firefighter were grappling with fell on top of him.

Moran was taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton, where he was treated and released, according to a hospital spokeswoman.

The building formerly a cold storage warehouse, currently housed the fire extinguisher shop as well as tree crew equipment, the ground department and UMass Outing Club kayaks.

Professor has final say on cases of cheating

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the third in a four-part series on cheating at the University of Massachusetts. Today's story focuses on the consequences, where students and faculty can go with unresolved problems, recommendations on prevention, and Big Brother.

As cheating at the University of Massachusetts continues, several student, faculty, and administrative committees are working on a comprehensive program to handle cases campus-wide and report incidences to a central office.

Incidences of cheating are now reported only to the department dean when the student and faculty member involved cannot reach an amicable solution, said Assistant Dean of Students Robert N. Brooks.

"There are virtually no statistics on academic dishonesty because it's usually between faculty and students," he said.

"Ultimately, the final arbiter of grading in a classroom must and should belong to the faculty," Brooks said. "That's a faculty prerogative."

Cheating cases are not usually brought to the Dean of Students Office unless a student decides a cheating penalty is too severe or when faculty inquire about academic honests guidelines and procedure, he said.

Occasionally we have a student come in, not to inform on others (who may have cheated), but to say this situation is unfair and to ask 'What should I do?'" he said.

Howard Gadlin, director of the University Ombuds Office, said there are several places a student or faculty member can turn to if cheating incidents are unresolved.

The Ombuds Office, the Mediation Project, the Dean of Students Office, the department chair or dean, and a department academic honesty committee are all places where disputed complaints may be brought, Gadlin said.

He said his office deals with about a dozen cases of dishonesty each year. Students can use Ombuds services as a first or last resort or anywhere in between, Gadlin said.

"Some students feel they're innocent, some will admit it but don't like the penalty – they feel it's too harsh," he said. "But ultimately no one has the power to make a faculty member change a grade."

Gadlin said complaints of faculty being

Neves' death: 'loss of hope'

By IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Staff

The death this week of Brazil's first civilian president elect in 21 years has dampened, though not dashed, Brazilians' hopes for better economic conditions and an end to military domination, say some members of the UMass community with knowledge of that country.

One UMass student from Brazil says she shares "many people's suspicion that the lame-duck Brazilian military government may have helped bring on Tancredo Neves' death.

Neves, 75, underwent emergency intestinal surgery March 14, the day before he was scheduled to be sworn in as president. Government spokesmen said complications affecting his lungs, kidneys and circulation forced him to have six more operations between that date and this past Sunday, when his death was announced in Sao Paolo.

In London Monday, Shirley Williams, the president of Britain's Social Democratic Party, said "There was widespread belief in Brazil that Tancredo Neves had not died of natural causes," and called for an investigation, wire services reported yesterday.

"Why wasn't he (Neves) transported to another country where the medical technology is more advanced?" asked Veronica Calvonconti, 25, who came to the United State from Brazil five years ago. "Many people share the opinion tha he was very subtly helped to die."

Calvonconti, now in her first semester studying communications at UMass, pointed out that when Gen. Joao

Spring: filling the great outdoor tune void

By LAURA KOESTER

Spring brings to mind many things – sun, flowers, scant clothing – but at the University of Massachusetts, spring also means concerts, the first of three upcoming outdoor shows will take place Sunday.

● Southwest Residential Area Concert will be held on Sunday, May 5th at 12:30 p.m., featuring Otis Day and the Knights, Girls' Night Out, Nexus and Boston comedian Steve Sweeney, who will perform three 15 minute shows between sets.

● Spring Concert by the Campus Pond will be held on Sunday, May 12th. Union Program Council announced at their meeting that the line-up for the show is: Johnny Copeland, the S.O.S. band, and Eliot Easton from the Cars.

According to Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson, this year's concert involved an unprecedented level of cooperation between students and staff. New planning procedures and guidelines were devised to prevent the vandalism and destructiveness of past concerts, particularly last year's show in Southwest where more than 40 complaints and 10 arrests were made over the weekend.

Gorbachev expands Politburo

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev yesterday added three men, including the head of the KGB secret police, to the ruling Politburo in a move seen as tightening the new Soviet leader's hold on the communist Party hierarchy.

The appointments were made public at the regular spring meeting of the party's Central Committee, which also announced that the 27th Communist Party congress will be held on Feb. 25, 1986.

Gorbachev, 54, became party general secretary on March 11 after the death of 73-year-old Konstantin U. Chernenko. Yesterday's meeting of the Central Committee was the first since Gorbachev assumed party leadership.

In an address to the 300-plus members of the policy-setting body, Gorbachev said the United States had demonstrated in the first round of the Geneva arms talks that it does not want an agreement. He accused the Reagan administration of reneging on a pledge to discuss a weapons ban in space.

The Politburo, which at 10 voting members following Chernenko's death was at its smallest size in years, was enlarged to 13.

Throughout the 13 months of Chernenko's rule, no changes were made on the Politburo or on the central Committee's powerful Secretariat.

The three new full Politburo members are:

—KGB chief Viktor Chebrikov, 61, promoted from alternate membership.

—Nikolai Ryzhkov, 55, who has a background in heavy industry and is chief of the Central Committee's economic department.

—Yegor Ligachev, 64, head of the party department that exercises control over membership and appointments.

The three new men have been closely identified with Chernenko's predecessor, Yuri V. Andropov, who was considered to be Gorbachev's mentor.

Andropov named Chebrikov to the post he had once occupied, that of KGB chief. Ligachev and Gorbachev helped organize party and parliamentary elections in 1983-84.

The new Politburo members have been at nearly all major party and government meeting on the economy and ideology that Gorbachev has attended in recent months.

Senate says yes, but House says no

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Democratic-controlled House last night rejected 248-180 President Reagan's proposal for $14 million in direct military aid to Contra insurgents seeking to overthrow the leftist government of Nicaragua. The same resolution was approved 53-46 by the Republican-led Senate only a few hours earlier.

Combined, the two votes set up a continuing congressional debate over whether to allow Reagan to provide non-lethal assistance to the rebels.

In both houses, Reagan won some additional support with a last-minute pledge to reopen direct negotiations between the United States and the Sandinista government, a key issue in Democratic opposition to Reagan's policy toward Central America.

Reagan also promised not to use the money for military aid until the end of the current fiscal year on Sept. 30.

The House vote was the first of three on aid to the Contras, and the two remaining alternatives were expected to be much closer when votes are taken today.

Once choice sponsored by House Democrats would require that the $14 million be spent through the United Nations or the International Red Cross for Nicaraguan refugees and to enforce any peace negotiated by countries in the Central American region.

The second alternative, proposed by House Republican leader Robert Michel of Illinois and supported by the president, would give recognition to the Contras by distributing non-lethal aid to them through the United States Agency for International Development.

In the Senate, 11 Republicans and 10 Democrats voted for the contra aid proposal. 37 Democrats and nine Republican voted against.

Goldwater says senators acted illegally on trip

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., accused Sens. John F. Kerry, D-Mass., and Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, yesterday of violating federal law and of crossing constitutional boundaries by bringing back a peace proposal from Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega.

But Kerry said the trip he and Harkin took to Nicaragua over the weekend was no different than the trips other members of Congress had made to Central America.

"I honestly feel two members of this body violated the code when they chose to negotiate," Goldwater said on the Senate floor. "It's troubled me very, very deeply."

Goldwater, chairman of the Armed Services Committee, said the two men also usurped "a provision of the Constitution that provides for the president to make up his mind on foreign policy."

"I hope the day will come when we clean up our act," Goldwater said during Senate debate on President Reagn's request to free up $14 million in aid to Contra rebels fighting Ortega's leftist government.

Federal law prohibits private citizens from negotiating with foreign governments on behalf of the United States.

But Kerry, in his speech, quoted from an April 16 letter from Secretary of State George Shultz to House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill in which Shultz urged members of Congress to visit Central America.

USA Today spoof not appreciated

WORCESTER — A Clark University student newspaper spoof of a national publication has stirred controversy because of its jokes about starving Ethiopians, Jews and blacks.

The parody of USA Today was called JEW. S.A. Today and was written by the staff of The Scarlet, Clark's student newspaper. It was distributed last Wednesday during the university's "Spree Day."

"Spree Day" is a traditional spring event at Clark, when classes are canceled and students participate in jokesand gags, university spokeswoman Annette S. Kahn said Tuesday.

"It's clear that the students went out of bounds this year," Ms. Kahn said. But she said no disciplinary action would be taken against the students at the newspaper.

Editor Claire Bloom defended the issue as satire, adding: "As far as the charge of anti-Semitism is concerned, 90 percent of the people involved are Jewish."

Flynn, students remember Holocaust

BOSTON — Students from public and parochial schools joined Mayor Raymond Flynn and survivors of German World War II concentration camps yesterday in a memorial observance of the Holocaust.

"The evil that led to the deaths of 6 million European Jews and millions of other innocent people at the hands of the Third reich is compounded further when we realize that it occurred in the middle of the 20th century within so-called civilized societies, while for a long period, other civilized societies stood by and watched," Flynn told the City Hall gathering.

The mayor said young people are the hope of the future and urged the students to heed the lessons from accounts of survivors of camps like Auschwitz and Buchenwald.

"You must not fail to choose good over evil, even when our leaders fail to make that choice," he added.

Ted Jr. in Congress? Carter likes the idea

BOSTON — Former President Jimmy Carter and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy may not be political chums, but Carter thinks his former political foe's youngest son would make a fine congressman for Massachusetts.

"I think it would be an excellent decision...," Carter said Monday in response to reports that Edward M. Kennedy Jr. may seek to succeed House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, who retires at the end of this term.

"I think if one of the Kennedy sons should decide to run for Congress in that 8th district, they would do well with voters and would do an excellent job in Washington, D.C.," Carter said.

A total of $10,400 was raised in The Run for Ritter Race, not $8,100 as reported in yesterday's Collegian. Also, a seminar on consumer protection rights will be held from 1 to 5 p.m. in Campus Center room 805, not on the concourse.

The night staff regrets any problems with the appearance of today's Collegian. Technical difficulties delayed the finishing of type-setting and paste-up until after 6 a.m.

Commuters to elect spokesperson

For the first time the student body, not the governing board members, will vote for the Commuter Area Government spokesperson. Any student not living in the dormitory residential system can vote today outside The Hatch from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

In the first contested race, Dave Martin and Paul Kasman- who is running under the name "Paul Kaz," are vying for the position, which represents more than 7,000 students.

Cynthia Bloom is running uncontested for treasurer.

According to Commuter Area Government program coordinator Jose Tolson, the spokesperson acts as liaison to the administration and other student groups as a representative of the Commuter Office, and works with the director to meet all major goals of the office, sharing responsibility in financial matters, programming, advocacy, outreach and publicity.

"It's important to vote because the spokesperson is the one who directs discussion about what we should do, what priorities we need to set for ourselves," Tolson said.

Many of the issues Tolson expects the commuter area government to face are ones of additional lighting on campus, financial aid cuts, and student rights. "The spokesperson can make or break an issue by attending or not attending a meeting," he added.

If elected, Martin, a commuter area senator and student coordinator of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, said he will "organize around the issues" of extended bus service, advocating more late night service and "lobbying and organizing against federal cuts in funding to the PVTA."

Martin also said he would continue support of South African Divestment, University Child Care, the Tenants Organizing Project and make the Commuter Area Government "a stronger voice" in combating attacks on student rights.

Kasman, a commuter area senator elected in March, refused to comment.

Campus may vote on Coors sales

The Undergraduate Student Senate will vote tonight whether to allow the issue of Coors beer sales in the Campus Center to be decided by campus-wide referendum.

The motion is in response to a March 28 Board of Governors decision that due to the Coors firm's alleged union-busting and discriminatory practices, the University should halt the sale of Coors.

If the motion is passed, the referendum will take place on May 7 and 8, following a public forum held by the BOG on the issue.

The senate will also vote on whether to endorse a resolution that the body "commend the (April 1st) coalition (the group which occupied the Whitmore Administration Building) for taking the initiative to fight for student rights and that they endorse the contractual agreements made between the students and administration."

In other business, the Budget Committee will present its budget for the fiscal year 1985 to the senate. Senators will have one week to make amendments to the act. The final vote on the budget will take place on May 1.

SWAG president wins third term

The Southwest Area Government held elections yesterday. Bill Collins was re-elected SWAG president, capturing 66 percent of the votes.

For his third term, Collins said his highest priority is "bringing about an alcohol policy that is reasonable and fair to everyone."

Collins, who said he will continue negotiations with administrators, added, "No unfair alcohol policy will take place without the forceful opposition of Southwest."

On a referendum question which asked if students would be "willing to fight against an overly restrictive alcohol and party policy," 77 percent of the voters said yes and 23 percent answered no.

Another referendum question asking, "Has the Campus Center Board of Governors overstepped its bounds by banning the sale of Coors beer in the Campus Center and Student Union Building?" received 77 percent yes votes 23 percent no.

Eric Ericson and Tom Talucci, in an uncontested race, will be co-vice presidents. Stacey Weber, also uncontested, won the office of SWAG treasurer.

An invasion is 20 years old

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

As United States citizens battle with the bitter memories of the American role in the Vietnam War, it is often overlooked that 20 years ago today American troops invaded the Dominican Republic.

Although President Lyndon B. Johnson used the pretext of saving American lives to invade the Caribbean country, two professors of political science at the University of Massachusetts do not agree that this was Johnson's reason.

Professor Harvey Kline said the intervention was "typical" of the U.S.

"If the United States government has any doubt of (a government) leading to socialism, they are very quickly to end it."

The key reason behind the invasion, Kline said, was to prevent Juan Bosch, an alleged communist leader, from taking power in the Dominican Republic.

Bosch was elected president in the first Dominican elections after the assasination of Rafael L. Trujillo, Dominican dictator for 31 years.

After only nine months in office, Bosch was overthrown by a miltary coup.

Kline feels Bosch was not a Marxist but "a nationalist and a radical talking about agrarian reform." He said Bosch was following the plans of the Alliance for Progress, President Kennedy's development plan for Latin America.

"There was nothing suggesting his desire to nationalize the multinational corporations or to socialize the economy."

Kline considers Bosch to belong to the "democratic left" group of leaders in Latin America like Romulo Betancourt of Venezuela.

A civilian and military movement in the Dominican capital of Santo Domingo exploded into a revolt to restore the 1963 constitution and the elected Bosch government.

As the constitutionalists were nearing victory over the rightist forces, Johnson ordered 48,000 troops to land in the country occupying the eastern two-thirds of the island of Hispaniola.

2,000 to 4,000 Dominicans, mostly civilians died in the resulting warfare, and an estimated two thousand Americans were killed.

The troops stayed in the country for over a year and Joaquin Balaguer was elected president in June of 1966. He was in office until 1978.

Howard Wiarda, also a UMass political science professor, said the U.S. used the invasion to prove to Vietnam that they would not tolerate a Communist government in a Third World country.

He said the invasion was "far less successful as Americans strategic thinkers consider it. The basic end result was a fucky one."

Wiarda added that the Dominican invasion was also the model used in the (1983) invasion of Grenada where the U.S. government acted quickly, accomplished their purpose and got out.

Ricardo Santos, a graduate student in food engineering, said the Dominican people saw the United States as an ally thanks to president Franklin D. Roosevelt's "good neighbor" policy and Kennedy's Alliance for Progress. "With the invasion, many no longer relied on the so-called good neighbor," he said.

Santos said Dominicans "still have a great feeling against the U.S. government (which is) difficult to get rid of." However, he said, they differentiate between the American people and the government.

Pregnancy booklet writer needs info

Sharon Britt, an educator/advocate at the Everywoman's Center, is preparing a booklet which will be titled Pregnancy: Be Aware Of All Your Choice.

According to Britt, the purpose of the booklet is to provide pregnant women with more information about their choices and to help women feel less isolated and more validated about their choice."

To fulfill this purpose, Britt is asking women to share the thoughts and feelings they have experienced in carrying a pregnancy to term, abortion, adoption and single parenthood.

Britt stresses that all responses will be confidential. She may be contacted at the Everywoman's Center in Wilder Hall.

Figueiredo. Brazil's most recent military president needed open-heart surgery, he was taken promptly to the United States and "came back healthy."

Harvey F. Kline a UMass political science professor who specializes in Latin American studies, said he doubts the military conspired to kill Neves.

Kline, who says many of his students call him a "crime" acknowledged that the possibility of such a conspiracy "crossed my mind for a moment" after he heard Neves was ill.

"But I really don't think so. The best I can tell is that the military, having screwed up the economy royally, really want to get out" of power, he said.

Brazil faces a massive debt crisis and inflation exceeding 230 percent.

To many Brazilians, Tancredo, as he was called by followers who rallied during his campaign and gathered outside the hospital after his death, represented hope for an eventual complete break with the military rule of the past two decades.

"Neves was like an explosion of things that people wanted to happen," said Marcos DeOliveira, 22, also a UMass student from Brazil.

"Him being elected was like opening up new dreams- the destruction of militarism, giving people some space so they could get educated," DeOliveira said, adding that under military rule, "Everything was always hidden from people."

With Neves' death, he said, "The hope won't disappear completely. But he's the one who brought the hope. He was a sparkplug."

Calvonconti put Neves' death in somewhat more pessimistic terms, saying it "represents the loss of hope for democracy. We don't know what's going to happen next."

Jose Sarney, Neves' vice-presidential designate who was sworn in as president Monday, is reputed to have closer ties to the military than Neves did.

"If the military takes over again, I don't think that a person like myself would be able to survive, because I am for democracy," Calvonconti said.

But Kline said he believes the forces demanding civilian rule "are so strong that the military is probably reluctant to step back in."

☆cheating

impowered to give a grade of "F" for cheating have come up, but his office has not seen many complaints. "That doesn't mean there aren't many cases of this," he said.

Nancy B. Hellman, assistant dean of undergraduate affairs in the School of Engineering, said she and several other deans have drafted a new, comprehensive academic honesty policy which they hope will be used and implemented camus-wide.

The draft is being reviewed by the Provost's Office and the Dean of Students Office and she is soliciting information from different departments about how they are handling academic honesty.

"We want to revise existing regualtions and policies to be readable and usable," she said. "Also, we're asking for some commonog procedure within each school that will fit in with the diversification between schools and colleges in their procedures."

Initial recommendations of that draft, Gadlin said, are that students be made more aware of exactly what constitutes cheating and plagarism, that faculty and students be better informed as to procedures and rights, and that all cases of academic dishonesty be reported to one central office.

Meanwhile, professors and deans attempt to prevent cheating by implementing such procedures like requiring student ID's for exams, using more proctors to oversee testing, and, in a unique program, using a computer system tagged "Big Brother" to check for identical computer programs.

Big Brother was first implemented about seven years ago because of a dramatic enrollment increase in the first year COINS courses, said computer and information science professor Stanley F. Kulikowski.

The system tags each completed program with an index number and, after that program is graded, Big Brother checks for similarities between all programs. If a high degree of similarity is detected by Big Brother, those programs are printed and teaching assistants then decide whether programs are too similar to have been done individually, he said.

If the TA's feel this is the case, all programs involved will be assigned a grade of zero, Kulikowski said.

"We set the grade to zero and if (standard) want to find out why, we tell them and then refer them to a TA," he said. "Programs shouldn't be any more similar than an English essay."

Kulikowski said when Big Brother detects copying or inappropriate collaboration, one student involved will usually talk to the TA and deny any wrongdoing. That student generally will then contact the others involved and everyone will come back and admit dishonesty, he said.

This year, Big Brother has only been used for COINS 121, 123, and 287 said 123 course manager Richard Cuti. Students are rarely failed in a course for program cheating, he said.

"It will pick out most cases of cheating," Cuti said. "You have to have some way of checking in a course this big."

Bill, a junior engineering and COINS student who asked that his real name not be used, claims that awith variable name and command sequence changes, students can copy programs and avoid detection by Big Brother.

"Big Brother is a joke, it doens't check for commands in the same sequence, just for the same variable," Bill said, "and the people who get caught are just not smart enough to change the variables."

Kulikowski, however, said that Big Brother is a "fairly accurate" method of detecting cheating and suspicious programs.

Big Brother is not usually used for higher level programming courses, primarily because there is not a tremendous amount of actual programming in the courses, Cuti said.

Another method of preventing cheating being used in COINS courses is to require students to show their student ID's to take an exam and then having students sign the finished exam, Cutti said.

Student dies from fall

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts student died yesterday at Holyoke Hospital after being in a coma since Friday, when he fell off the hood of a moving car.

Judson Walton, 20, a junior accounting major and member of the Phi Mu Delta fraternity, was pronounced dead yesterday at 1:30 p.m. yesterday, said hospital spokeswoman Mary Burgess.

According to police reports, Walton, from Easton, was on the hood of a car driven by Robert Atwater, 21, of Shelburne. Atwater was apparently swerving on Elm Street in Amherst early Friday morning when Walton fell off the car landing on his head. He was taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton and then transported to Holyoke Hospital.

Atwater was cited for driving to endanger, police said.

"We're very shocked and saddened by it," said the Rev. Joseph P. Quigley, who led a memorial Mass for Walton last night in the Newman Center.

Bob White of Greek Affairs said, "It was a freak accident. It seems like horseplay. He slid the wrong way off the car."

Walton was a member of Phi Mu Delta fraternity and was executive vice president of the UMass Inter-Fraternity Council, where he had served for the past two years. He also worked for the University's tour guide service.

He was last year's recipient of the Gamma Gamma award, which recognizes outstanding service to the Greek Area and the University.

Funeral arrangements have not yet been announced.

John Szarkowski, whom the New York Times has called "easily the country's leading expert on photography," will speak at 8 p.m. today in Campus Center room 168 on "The Documentary Delusion."

Szarkowski has been curator of Photography at the Museum of Modern Art in New York City for more than 20 years and is, according to Howard Ziff, director of the journalistic studies program at the University of Massachusetts, "the top photography expert in the world."

Szarkowski has written numerous books on photography and has also "discovered" many unknown photographers, most notably Diane Arbus, a renowned feminist and photographer, Ziff said.

"When (Szarkowski) chooses to run your picture in the Museum of Modern Art, then you're made," Ziff said.

Theft remnants turn up in Brett

A stash of stolen items was recovered from a basement in Brett House early Monday afternoon including wallets, purses and more than 30 identification cards, University of Massachusetts police said.

A cluster office coordinator found the items and reported the incident to police. Police said the wallets, minus the money, were stolen from all over campus at different times. Owners of the stolen identification cards have been notified, police said.

In other police news:

● A female Brett House resident reported early yesterday morning that a man tried to grab her after he followed her into the bathroom, police said. The woman claimed that a man in his late 20's tried to grab her, but she was able to run into her room, lock the door and call police.

● A male resident of Washington tower reported he was attacked by four unidentified men Sunday night. He told police that the attack was unprovoked and he didn't know the reason for the attack. Police said the student was treated for a hernia by University Health Services and may require an operation.

● A 25-year-old man was arrested yesterday morning after he was found hiding in a Campus Center hotel room shower, police said.

The Brookline resident entered the unoccupied $60 night room and told police that he was "visiting and had no place to stay." Police arrested him and charged him with attempting to defraud the Campus Center Hotel and breaking and entering.

blowers and other machinery, in addition to small amounts of gasoline. The outing club equipment, valued at $40,000, remained in the basement throughout the fire but was unharmed, according to Nancy Hagstrom, the club's president.

Atteridge said tehre were also radioactive materials stored in the building, but other fire officials refused to confirm the report.

"Someone came up to me and said, 'We got radioactive materials stored in there. We've got to go in and get them,'" Atteridge said. "I saw two grey barrels with locks on them, and they were taken out."

Power feeding the chancellor's residence and Orchard Hill was cut off shortly after the fire beggan. WMUA was also left without transmitter power and remained off the air until 5:15 p.m.

According to officials, there was only one person in the building at the time the blaze broke out.

Late yesterday, workers began demolishing what was left of Fisher Laboratory (left). Below students watch the fire earlier in the day that gutted the building.

That concert was part of a week-long festival intended to fight world hunger. SWAG raised $34,000 from the SGA administration and business sources, but because of a rule that prohibits trust fund money from going to charities, none of the money raised went to that cause.

"We are spending more money on police this year than last year. We're going to have one officer for every 500 people," said Southwest Area Government Treasurer Eric Ericson. Attendance at last year's Southwest concert was estimated at 8,000.

"This year has been one of the best as far as planning and preparation," according to Gerald O'Neil, director of the Department of Public Safety.

The budget for the East Side concert is $14,000. The Southwest concert is going to cost about $16,000, according to Ericson. Spring Concert is currently working with a figure of $18,500, according to UPC treasurer Eric Nitzsche.

Bottles and kegs are not allowed at the concerts, although alcohol in cans or plastic containers will be permitted.

Letters to the Editor

A unified, not divided SWAG is needed

We are writing to express our dismay at the questionable ethics employed by Bill Collins in his campaign literature for the Southwest Area Government presidential election. We are outraged by his accusations that the "administration" (a somewhat vague entity) "asked two Southwest RA's (Resident Assistants)" to run against him in Monday's SWAG election. This, we feel, is an attempt to create a division between Resident Assistants and other Southwest residents; and he neglects to mention that he himself is a Moore House RA and has been one for three semesters. We fail to see how this strategy could enhance residential life in Southwest.

We feel strongly that the role of Resident Assistant is to aid and support students and to encourage a positive living and learning environment; we take seriously our responsibilities to work with and for residents, not against. Furthermore, there is no evidence that any member of the administration approached any candidates in Southwest for recruiting purposes for the SWAG election.

In addition, Collins' campaign literature intimates that he is solely responsible for the successful programming and improved activities in Southwest. We acknowledge Collins' input—and are willing to give credit where credit is due—but we have seen hard work from many individuals, groups, and organizations in Southwest this year. It seems grossly unfair to overlook the efforts of the initiators of these activities and to usurp recognition where responsibility is questionable.

In the future we hope to see leadership that will draw our community together, honestly, sincerely and unselfishly; we hope to see a community unified, not arbitrarily divided.

Jeanne Marie Shaw

Please show them we can act responsibly

Spring is here, and with spring comes the spring concerts. The East Side and Southwest shows are just around the corner. We would like to encourage you to come and enjoy yourselves at these shows. As students working for students on these shows, we are asking you to help us prove to the administration that UMass students can act responsibly at free outdoor concerts.

For the sake of future outdoor shows on this campus, we need your help. Unless we the students follow these guidelines, the future of these events is in jeopardy.

We, the students, have paid for these shows and we should recognize that the shows are for us, not outsiders. Of course, in accordance with University policy, no kegs, beer balls, large volume containers or bottles are allowed. It is essential that the restricted areas are respected, such as the backstage and soundboard areas. Please keep in mind that the police, EMTs, and student security are there for your protection. The student security in particular, are relied upon by the concert planners. They are volunteers.

Please come to the shows. Please have a good time in the sun. What we are asking is that the students of UMass keep in mind that these shows are paid for, produced by, and staffed by students working for students. The future of concerts on this campus is up to us. Let's not let ourselves down.

'Abundance' doesn't justify waste

FRANCES ACOBA

Capitalism is at its peak in the United States. America is experiencing economic prosperity, yet, there is something disquieting about the 20 million Americans who go to bed hungry every night.

This phenomenon of American hunger gained notoriety in 1982 when organizations that service the hungry in this country saw a marked rise in demand for food. Clinical practicians also began to notice that more patients manifested illnesses associated with hunger. These symptoms caused 15 national task forces and hundreds on a statewide level to mobilize to find empirical understanding of the recurrence of hunger in the nation.

They found that 15.5 million Americans living below official poverty line ($10,178 for a family of four) and 7.35 million close to poverty are two groups who are non-recipients of food stamps or food assistance programs, and are unable to eat adequately. The elderly, pregnant women and children are predisposed to higher risk of health deterioration caused by undernutrition. Half a million American children suffer from malnutrition. Parents cannot feed their children and themselves because because of job displacement, chronic unemployment, and without the aid of

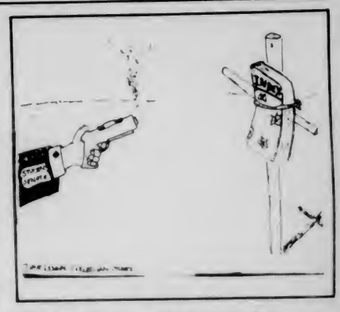
Then there is the family of 13 who lived in a dilapidated three-room house — surviving on food collected from churches while waiting for the local food stamp office to determine if they were eligible for food stamps." These examples dispels the myth that hunger in our nation exists only within the confines of skid row. Some of the ramifications of undernourishment are growth failure, lower birth rates, hypertension, and stroke.

In light of the problem of hunger in the U.S., it is a sad paradox to observe our country's propensity for wasting food. A by-product of American Capitalism is that one-fifth of the food produced in the U.S. goes to waste. This represents 137 million tons of food, worth $31 billion and it could have fed 49 million people. Food waste occurs in at least four areas in our economy: the manufacturer, the wholesaler, retailer and the final consumer.

It would be simplistic to conclude that one element in our society is responsible for all its falsities. We can therefore either indulge in a philosophical discourse condemning those who we feel are "responsible," blow it off with the self defeatist "but what can I do" syndrome — or turn our energies to doing something tangible to help arrest the problem that is blatantly real—hunger in our nation, among our own people.

There are an infinite amount of ways in which we can make a difference. Our affiliation with a University implies our confience that education is a great resource. A few credits invested in a course designed to understand our culture and its treatment of food, among other things could prove to be very enlightening. Involvement with an array of student organizations on campus addressing the issue of hunger in America and abroad such as MassPIRG and the Hunger Task is another option. And, of course, there is the virtue of appreciation, which all of us possess but at times our actions lack its manifestation. Our perception of "abundance" does not justify waste. There is no justification for the breadbasket of the world being unable to feed its own people.

Frances Acoba is coordinator of the UMassPIRG Hunger and Food Waste Reeducation group.



SGA suffers from no communication

Editor's Note: This is the first in a two part series.

Accusations have flown back and forth for months as to where fault lies for the Student Government Association fiscal crisis.

When budget hearings began in February and cuts were made, committee members were constantly under attack for cutting funds although, as committee chairman Jordan Rosner said, "(The budget committee) has no control over how much money we have to allocate."

"The committee was constantly bending over backwards to save these groups," he said, adding, "I don't think anyone in the senate knew just how bad this crisis really was."

Committee member Bob Griffin cited times the committee was termed "racist," "sexist," and "fascist."

Now that members of Registered Student Organizations have been hit with the reality of the fiscal crisis, every group reached; previously complaining, are suddenly willing to pull together and make the best of a bad situation. Isn't it about time?

Budget committee members and some student senators say last year's student government leaders knew about the degree of the crisis but because of personal motives did nothing to suggest a fee increase that according to them, would have avoided a massive depletion in funds.

"The leadership was unaware until February. Until that time I was under the impression the loss would amount to about $88,000," said John Mooradian, former SGA treasurer.

Mooradian said he thought the fund could "squeeze by" with that loss, adding that he "didn't support a fee increase" and that any motion that called for one "never would have passed in the senate."

Mooradian added that since the facts supposedly came to his attention so late, there would not be sufficient time to hold a referendum to assess student support for such an increase.

However, minutes of an October 15 Trust Fund review meeting conducted by Student Activities Business Manager Bob Jenal show realization came earlier.

The minutes read, "It is evident that without any dramatic changes within the SATF's (Student Activities Trust Fund) financial environment there will be approximately $100,000-$120,000, (not $88,000) less available for allocation in fiscal year '86 than was available for fiscal year '85." Minutes of a December 3 (not a February) meeeting read, "The estimated effect of this critical financial situation will be a reduction in SGA allocable funds of well over $100,000."

Given, in December it was too late but Jenal said he had asked to address the senate in the fall to inform them of the coming fiscal crisis, but that both former speaker Chris Sullivan and Mooradian refused him.

SAO Director Randy Donant said in October that his office was pushing the student senate to introduce a fee increase "but had no ears." Jenal said that he had made it "doubly clear" that without some change there would be a severe financial crisis.

Though any student government leader should be applauded for their opposition to a fee increase, if knowledge of impending doom had been communicated to fellow senators, perhaps the childish name-calling and complete catastrophe could have been avoided in part. What harm could an informed student senate really do?

Legacy of America a hoax

Yadira Betances is correct in asserting the obvious grammaticality of the capitalization of "blacks" when used to denote national origin. To ignore the preferred badge of 30 million Americans is to reinforce the institutionalization of derogatory terms historically applied to blacks.

As a black American, I submit that my people be accorded the respect due them in all phases of American life; be it in daily interaction with persons of other cultures or through proper capitalization of the term we use to identify ourselves.

It is unrealistic and disrespectful to lump the diverse cultures which make up American society into one catch-all category, especially when the darker members of the society are being exploited politically, economically, and socially. Even eyes which have been partially blinded by the racial segregation that is the reality of most Americans, cannot fail to see that blacks perpetuate a unique culture that although American, is, as Amiri Baraka would say, "peculiarly black American."

The vitality, beauty, and strength that is black culture has nourished and sustained my people through 400 years of insufferable indignities. I live according to the dictates of the culture in which I was raised. When I use the term "black," I am referring not merely to skin color, but to a life style, a world view, behaviors and cultural expression. Failure to capitalize black becomes, for me, akin to not capitalizing my own name.

Because of the myth of the American melting pot, many Americans have been effectively cut off from their cultural roots and are busy searching for a cultural base from which to gain strength, wisdom and a sense of purpose; one that is older and more venerated than the short history of capitalistic exploitation based on the hoax of white superiority that is the legacy of America. Racial harmony can never be achieved until cultural diversity is respected. After all, America is the world in microcosm. If she does not respect blacks, how can it be thought for a moment that she respects other peoples of the world?

More than just baklava

Whenever someone asks me what my nationality is, I tell them I'm Armenian. The response I always get is "Oh, Armenian...I just adore baklava." I tolerate this response but deep down I feel an unpleasant sensation in the pit of my stomach. Why? I know there is more to being Armenian than our food. My parents, being originally from another country, had problems raising me as an Armenian. They were adjusting to a new country and leaving behind their past which they find too painful to talk about. But my mother, not wanting me to be ignorant of my heritage, sent me to an Armenian language school on Saturdays. It was there that I learned about my people's history and about the holocaust. I was eight; maybe a little too young to be exposed to this horror but it was a subject that had to be learned. We learned about the Armenian Genocide and how we claim April 24th as our memorial day.

What happened to the Armenians? Between the years of 1898 to 1918, the Turkish government systematically killed 1.5 million Armenians, and sent thousands more (women, children, and the elderly) to their doom in the Syrian Desert. Most died, some survived. This was unfortunately the Turkish answer to the Armenian question. Luckily, they did not succeed in their complete extermination, but the damage they did was irrevocable. To this day, they deny their atrocities. The Genocide is all but forgotten by those who don't know and don't care about this people with no homeland. However, I care. As William Saroyan, an American writer, once said:

"I should like to see any power in this world destroy this race, this small tribe of unimportant people whose history is ended, whose wars have been fought and lost, whose structures have crumbled, whose literature is unread, whose music is unheard and whose prayers are no more answered. Go ahead, destroy this race! Destroy Armenia! See if you can do it. Send them from their homes into the desert. Let them have neither bread nor water. Burn their homes and churches. Then, see if they will not laugh again, see if they will not sing and pray again. For, when two of them meet anywhere in the world, see if they will not create a New Armenia!"

Yes...we are more than just baklava. The Armenian poeple live on!

ARTS

Joan "hypnotic"

Joan Armatrading
Thursday April 18
at the Fine Arts Center

By COUNT RAMIN ZAHED
and CHRISTINE MARINI
Collegian Staff

Joan Armatrading, the versatile and dynamic British singer/songwriter who is something of a cult figure in America took to the Fine Arts Center's main stage last Thursday night. Before a capacity crowd of nearly 2,000, Armatrading played a 80 minute set that combined slower songs with lively numbers that had the crowd dancing in the aisles.

Armatrading, fresh and feisty, charmed the audience, opening the show with "Presona Grata" from her Secret Secret album, followed by "Moves" from the same record. Visibly pleased by the crowd's enthusiastic reponse, she sang the popular "I'm Lucky" from Walk Under Ladders "as a reward." Next came a hypnotic rendition of "Love and Affection" from Joan Armatrading. Her rapport with the audience was by this time firmly established. "Heaven" from Track Record, and "When I Get it Right" from Walk Under Ladders were well received, and followed by "Temptation" (from Secret Secret) which featured Dave Pitelli's smooth saxophone.

Next came "Bad Habits" (from Key) and "Talking to the Wall." Armatrading pranced and frolicked in front of a subtle screen-like set, her performance style, like the best of her music, unaffectedly original. "One Night" from Secret Secret, "Love by You," and the very popular "All the Way from America" from Me Myself I, continued on the same high-energy level. "Drop the Pilot" form Key, "Secrets" from Secret Secret, and "Friends" from Me Myself I, were followed by "Show Some Emotion" and "Kissing and Hugging" from the Show Some Emotion album. "Tall in the Saddle," "Can't Lie," and the rowdy "Call Me Names" (from Key) sustained the concert's bright mood.

One of the high points of the evening was the amazing "Willow" (from Show Some Emotion), during which Armatrading invited the audience to join her on the chorus, and somehow made it work, producing a haunting harmony.

The show was excellent; the balance of new and old material, slow and fast songs, made the time go by much too quickly. Once again UPC has managed to bring top quality entertainment to UMass.

Exotic Zydeco

Buckwheat Zydeco with Ils Sont Partis
Thursday April 18
at Pearl Street

By DAVID MORRISH JR.
Collegian Correspondent

Ils sont partis! is Buckwheat's trademark yell, and also the name of his band. Ils sont partis is a shout that marks the start of horse races in Louisiana, meaning "they're off!" And with the energy of a racetrack, Buckwheat and band rocked Pearl Street last Thursday night.

Buckwheat (Stanley Dural) and his band herald from Lafayette, the capital of French Louisiana, west of New Orleans. Southwestern Louisiana is an exotic, wild land of bayous, shrimp gumbo, French culture, not to mention grooving zydeco music. The word zydeco derives from a French waltz about snap beans. Zydeco is an off-shoot of white cajun music. Although many of the lyrics are sung in French, zydeco maintains a cajun base, while projecting soul and blues influences. A typical zydeco band has traditional rock and roll instruments, yet in addition, there is a rubboard player who creates an incredible rhythmic sound by scraping a corregated metal vest with knives or bottle cap openers. Leading the band is the accordianist. Buckwheat proved that there's nothing square about the old squeeze box as he cranked out soul music guaranteed to blow the mind of any Lawrence Welk fan.

Buckwheat and his band are hardworking, talented musicians devoted to spreading their unique brand of music. The group loves to travel, and while based in Lafayette, the Ils Sont Partis Band plays all over the Louisiana-Texas area, branching out to do three or four tours of America and Canada per year. The band has also traveled to France, London, Sweden, and Germany.

Buckwheat originally started playing rock and roll but he got back into roots music with encouragement from Clifton Chenier. Buckwheat Zydeco has found great success in appealing to all ages and tastes because of his stability to mix up the music and achieve a balance between contemporary and traditional styles.

Commenting on the reactions he gets from first time zydeco listeners, Buckwheat said that people tell him "what is that stuff you play...whatever it is it's good." Encouraged about the future popularity of his music, he is excited about the revived interest of French culture in Louisiana. "More and more young people in Louisiana are talking French and finding out about their roots," he said.

And as Buckwheat travels the country, more and more people are finding out what incredible musicians Buckwheat Zydeco and the Ils Sont Partis Band are. Thursday night's show was high energy dance music. It's safe to say that anyone who got to see them will be a return customer the next time the band comes around.

Cesar Rosas of Los Lobos

Los Lobos a musical fusion

Los Lobos
Sunday April 21
at Pearl Street

By JON STRYMISH
Collegian Staff

Los Lobos is a Mexican-American band that comes from East Los Angeles and has recently captured the imagination of the rock and roll world. They were signed to Slash records and their contract was picked up by Warner Brothers, which has given their record How Will the Wolf Survive the promotion it needed to get Los Lobos heard.

Their influences range from Tex-Mex to Elvis Presley, from polka to punk. All of it is distinctly ingrained in their sound. The five men, Conrad Lozano, David Hidalgo, Louie Perez, Cesar Rosas and Steve Berlin, played rock and roll together in bars 15 years ago until they gave up in frustration over their lack of commercial success, 10 years ago. Staying together, the band tried to make a living playing Mexican folk music as a heritage act.

They came to Northampton Sunday night to play Pearl St. When they stepped on stage, turned their 1950's Fender amps as loud as they could go and slammed their guitars into overdrive they won the hearts of the audience. They had cute chubby cheeks and a bass player who stuck to walking basslines always keeping the music moving fast. Starting with "How Will the Wolf Survive," they played straight through, too shy to say very much to the audience. The music got faster until "La Bamba," which has to have been the fastest and most exciting cover version of any song I have ever heard. They came back for two encores, one after their allowed curfew.

Los Lobos brought a menagerie of instruments with them. Besides the Fender Guitars which their sound is based on. The band brought accordians, a weird saxophone, a funny very tall thin keyboard and a guitar from their days playing Mexican weddings.

Los Lobos stripped rock down to its basics and rebuilt it from their own viewpoint, much the same way it evolved the first time around. They built the music into their own identity. The band members have little individual identity on stage so they operate as a unit. Drummer Perez always kept the same simplified beat, while bassist Lozano always played fast. Guitarist Hidalgo played slow simple melodies that were in perfect backing to the lead instruments, which were played fast. At Pearl St., no band member was ever seen stepping on any others' feet. "Los Lobos" is Spanish for the wolves, and like wolves this band travels in a pack.

Opening were the Good Guys, a Clash-like political black Liberation band from Richmond, Virginia. They were very good, but unfortunately more good than fun. They played songs from almost every possible genre of black music, reggae, ska, soul, rap, pop, and rock and roll, and did each with great skill.

University of Massachusetts at Amherst

Commencement 1985

10:00 a.m., Saturday, May 25

All Candidates
There is no Commencement rehearsal for degree candidates. Candidates should assemble by school/college at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium no later than 9 a.m. graduation morning, May 25, 1985. Signs will be posted indicating schools, and Commencement Marshals will issue specific instructions and distribute programs. Upon signal, candidates will follow the Commencement Marshals to the assigned areas and be seated.

Candidates will receive diploma covers from the deans of their school or college. Diplomas will be mailed when all processing has been completed. Please be sure the Registrar has your correct permanent address.

Who is Eligible to Participate?
Undergraduate degree candidates who anticipate completing degree requirements by the end of the calendar year 1985. Questions concerning academic status should be directed to the Records Office, 213 Whitmore, 545-0555.

Master degree candidates who have previously submitted the Degree Application Form by April 30, 1985 to the Office of Degree Requirements stating the intention to complete all requirements. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, 545-0808.

Doctoral degree candidates who have completed all degree requirements by April 30, 1985. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, 545-0808.

Faculty
Faculty and staff should assemble at the SOUTH end of the stadium on the gravel between the Facilities Building and the stadium wall. Faculty will be part of the processional and will be seated immediately in front of the candidates from each school and college.

Parents and Invited Guests/Plan to Arrive Early — Space is Limited
Since the Commencement Exercises are open to the public and guest seating is without reservation, parents and friends should plan to arrive early, to ensure good seating.

Handicapped Seating
Viewing area for the handicapped will be located on both sides of the stadium on the eastern and west ern walkways. Since seating is limited, it is requested that only one person accompany the handicapped guest.

Invitations
There is no limit to the number of guests who may attend the ceremony and tickets are not required. Each student will receive a packet of six formal invitations.

Caps, Gowns, and Hoods
Undergraduate and Master Degree Candidates
Caps, gowns, tassels, and hoods may be rented at the college bookstore on or after April 30. Commencement regalia may be purchased at the bookstore on or after May 1. Caps, gowns, tassels, and hoods may be returned to the bookstore on or before May 14. Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday, 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Telephone information, 545-0520.

On Commencement Day, May 25, caps, gowns, and tassels may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the SOUTHWEST corner of Alumni Stadium.

Doctoral Degree Candidates
Doctoral caps, gowns, tassels, hoods and invitations will be available only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, April 29-May 24, Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. through 5 p.m., upon clearance by the Office of Degree Requirements. On Commencement Day, caps, gowns, tassels, and hoods may be obtained after 9 a.m. at the NORTHWEST end of the stadium (on the gravel area).

Doctoral candidates who plan to participate in the Commencement ceremony must have a hood. Each candidate's name will be announced over the stadium sound system and two officers of the University will drape the hood on the candidate's shoulders. Doctoral hoods can be purchased only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, at a cost of $30. (Five College Doctoral Hoods will be available at $42.95.) Doctoral hoods may be rented through the University Store at a cost of $10.

Rentals
Academic apparel for this year's University Commencement may be rented through the University Store. All faculty members are urged to place their orders as soon as possible. THE LAST DAY TO ORDER IS FRIDAY, MAY 17. Payment must be made at the time of order and every effort will be made to process orders as soon as possible. Orders received after May 17 cannot be guaranteed delivery by May 25. Rental apparel may be returned to the University Store, 545-0838.

Accommodations
Many area motels are already booked for the weekends of May 24 and 25. A limited number of rooms in University dormitories will be available for visitors and their guests for the nights of May 24 and 25. Please contact the Conference Services Office, 418 Campus Center, (413) 545-1801, as soon as possible to request a form to register for dormitory housing. These forms must be returned with full payment to Conference Services no later than May 1, to guarantee your dormitory room reservations.

Food Services
Coffee, soft drinks, and donuts will be available at refreshment stands on both sides of the stadium, toward the North.

Commencement Ceremony Schedule

9 a.m.	Robing for Commencement. Appropriate signs will be displayed. Graduates should line up according to their school or college.
9:30 a.m.	Seating of Graduates
10 a.m.	Procession starts
12 noon	Ceremony ends

Parking
Parking at the stadium is extremely limited. Vehicles will be directed to several parking lots located nearby and shuttle buses will provide transportation to the stadium. Buses will return to the lots immediately following the ceremony.

Traffic Assistance
To aid the traffic flow at Commencement, radio station WTTT-AM (1430) will broadcast traffic reports throughout the morning. Please tune in as you approach Amherst for the best route to the ceremony.

General Information
Medical facilities will be located in the Facilities Building at the south end of the stadium.

Public telephones will be located on the west side of the Facilities Building.

Restrooms are located at both ends of the Facilities Building at the south end of the stadium.

Viewing areas for those confined to wheelchairs will be located on both sides of the stadium, on eastern and western walkways.

For additional information, contact the Office of University Relations, 390 Whitmore, 545-2560.

Please remember alcohol is not permitted in the stadium.

Schedule of Events	Date	Time	Place

Recap: Commencement '85 is on Saturday, May 25, 10 a.m., Rain or Shine

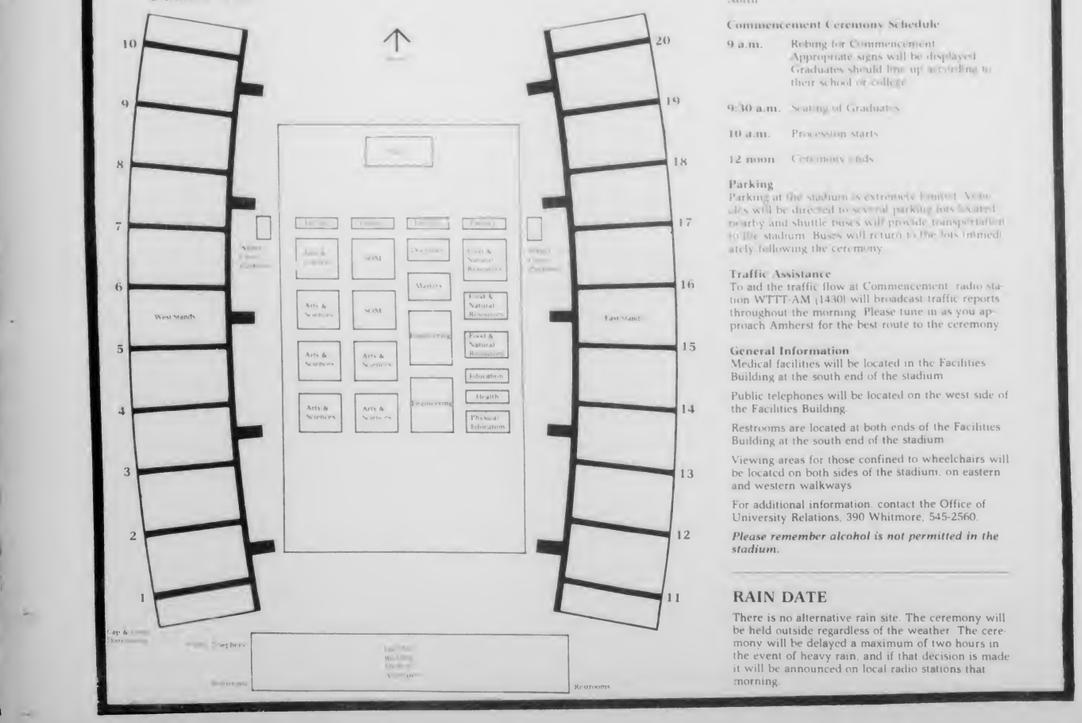
Stadium Plan



RAIN DATE

There is no alternative rain site. The ceremony will be held outside regardless of the weather. The ceremony will be delayed a maximum of two hours in the event of heavy rain, and if that decision is made it will be announced on local radio stations that morning.

Gerlufsen in the homestretch

Dunbar's point guard, other stars still considering UMass

By DAN LEBERFELD
Collegian Staff

Kirk Lee, the Baltimore high school player of the year at Dunbar High, and four other talented basketball players have named the University of Massachusetts as a finalist for their services, in these, the waning days of the college recruiting season.

Lee, who is known as "General," averaged 18.3 points and 5.3 assists-a-game in leading Coach Bob Wade's Poets to the Baltimore Championship. Syracuse, South Carolina, Kansas and Seton Hall have been crossed off his prospective school list and he lists UMass and Western Kentucky as the finalists. UMass coach Ron Gerlufsen expects a decision by the weekend.

The other guard the Minutemen are in the running for is 6-2 shooting guard Jeff West. A student at Fork Union Military Academy, the popular breeding ground for UMass basketball players, West has narrowed his list to Virginia Commonwealth, West Virginia, North Carolina-Charlotte, Western Carolina and UMass. He will pay visits to all the schools and his future will be decided afterward.

Another guard who had limited his college choices to Monmouth and UMass, Springfield's Chris Bailey has decided on neither. The Western Massachusetts player of the year has opted to go to St. Thomas Moore Prep School in Colchester, Ct. for a year. UMass will be a finalist when he gets out.

The three frontcourt players UMass is in the thick of it with are 6-6 Joe Fennell, 6-7 Sean Mosby and 6-6 Ben Jones.

Fennell, one of three 6-6 starters for Boy's and Girl's High in New York City, (the two others being Eric Brown heading to Miami of Fla. and Nestor Payne an Iowa recruit), is leaning toward UMass over Rhode Island and Hartford. He should decide by the end of the week.

Mosby, a resident of basketball hotbed Camden, NJ who the UMass coaches liken to former Minuteman star Edwin Green is mulling over Northeastern and UMass. A verdict is do any minute.

Gainesville, Ga junior college star Ben Jones will cast his lot with either UMass or Tennessee State. He is a close friend of UMass freshman guard Lorenzo Sutton and a resident of the same hometown, Albany, Ga.

A few forwards the Minutemen were heavily pursuing until they chose other institutions were Philadelphia's 6-7 Will Bolds, 6-7 George Reid and 6-6 Eric Gathers and Lincroft New Jersey's 6-5 Joe Paterno.

Bolds is off to Hawaii, Reid to Ohio University, Gathers to USC and Paterno to Fordham. All of them had paid UMass a visit and had the Minutemen as one of their final choices.

UMass has already signed two players, both from Baltimore: 6-6 Duane Chase and 6-5 David Brown.

Todd Comeau: cleaning up

Two-sport star designated offense for UMass

By BRYAN QUENZEL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team has tatooed opposing pitchers for a .321 batting average so far this season. That potent offense is centered around senior designated hitter Todd Comeau.

"Todd is our offensive leader," said UMass manager Dick Bergquist. "The team rallies around him."

"He (Comeau) is one of the premier hitters in college baseball," continued Bergquist. "He is an excellent offensive player who hits with power and uses all fields. He is the teams top hitter and has been for three or four years."

Comeau's statistics at UMass back up Bergquist's claims. Coming into this year's campaign, the 6-2, 210 pounder from North Bedford, CT had a .353 career batting average while driving in 76 runs during two-and-one half seasons with the Minutemen.

Last year, Comeau set a UMass record for hits (55) while batting .372 with three homers and 32 runs batted in. For his efforts, Comeau was named to the All-New England team and selected as the Minutemen's most valuable player.

This season, Comeau has not let up from his torrid pace. His 30 RBI lead the team and with a .376 batting average and four home runs, Comeau is a force hitting in the clean up spot.

Going in today's doubleheader at New Hampshire, Comeau needed three hits to tie the UMass career record of 157 set by 1980 graduate Mike McEvilly.

The UMass slugger feels that he has improved since last season. "I'm more relaxed at the plate," said Comeau. "I'm sitting back on the ball better."

As for his role as the designated hitter, it is not the position he prefers, but it is one that he has learned to accept. "It is more fun to play in the field," Comeau said, "but I've been bothered with a bad back and with the cold weather it's better."

"It is different mentally and physically," he continued. "If you strikeout, you can't make it up in the field. But I take it as it comes."

Comeau's talents are not limited to the baseball diamond. He was a four-year starter at outside linebacker for the football team and in 1982 was named second team All-Yankee Conference and honorable mention All-New England.

Because he plays two sports, Comeau's off-season preparation is hindered. "I haven't played (baseball) in summer leagues because I'm lifting and working out for football," said Comeau. "It's tough for football too because I can't lift in the spring."

The Comeau family talent does not end with Todd. His younger brother was heavily recruited out of high school for both football and baseball and will be coming to UMass this fall. Is there any sibling rivalry?

"Not really," Comeau said. "But he'll be looking to do better than I have. He better, or I'll be mad at him."

Is professional sports in Comeau's future? "Professional people should be interested in him," Bergquist said. "He has as much promise as any hitter in the area."

Baseball looking ahead to weekend

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

For three days, the University of Massachusetts baseball team will be looking ahead to the weekend, but they still have some games to play. Today's doubleheader in New Hampshire against UNH and tomorrow's night game in Holyoke against Springfield College are virtually meaningless for the 16-12 Minutemen.

UMass is in the middle of what is basically a mess in the Eastern Division of the Atlantic 10 conference.

UMass and Temple are both 6-3 in the league. Rutgers and Rhode Island are 5-4. UMass hosts Rutgers for three games at home this weekend with Temple facing URI for a trio. Whoever emerges in the top two gets a berth to the conference championship.

"It's tough to have to play three games before the big series," UMass manager Dick Bergquist admitted. "But, hopefully they'll get the pitchers ready and the bats popping for the weekend."

UMass will start junior Bob Kostro (2-0) against UNH in the first game. Matt Subocz, Steve Allen, Matt Sheran, Jeff Jensen and Jon Martin will each get work with one starting the second game.

Designated hitter Todd Comeau is three hits away from tying the career hits record held of 157. Comeau is hitting .376. Outfielder Jay Zerner is at .381 with firstbaseman Jeff Cimini, out with knee troubles and potentially done for the season, leading the team at a .395 clip. Slugging secondbaseman Jack Bloise (.364), who has smashed two towering homers this season, will miss the trip to rest his injured leg.

The men's lacrosse team (3-5) is at Harvard (2-7) for a 3 p.m. game today.

Leading scorer Tom Carmean (29 points) hopes to play after missing two games with a shoulder injury. Senior Tom Lukacovic (22 points) has played well lately with 14 points in two games.

The UMass close defensemen, Tom Aldrich, Mark Stratton and Gerry Byrne, have played well this season and face a slowdown Harvard team today.

The softball team, 15-18-1, travel south to face Central Connecticut today for a doubleheader.

Pitchers Lynn Stockley (9-7) and Lisa Rever (5-5) are expected to start for UMass.

UMass hasn't scored a run in three games, being shutout by Connecticut and by Adelphi (twice).

Men's tennis destroys Clark

The University of Massachusetts men's tennis team raised its record to 6-3 with an 8-1 victory over Clark on the Boyden Courts yesterday.

At singles, Wayne Peterson, Earl Small, Flicka Rodman, David Singer and John Summerstein posted victories for the Minutemen.

The doubles teams of Jeff Brady and Peterson, Rodman and Singer and Paul Zaretsky and John Beklerk all won their matches in straight sets.

Today, at 3 p.m. at Boyden, the team hosts a good Tufts team.

"Everybody played as well as expected. We needed this match to get ready for Tufts," UMass coach Manny Roberts said.

Golf wins Salem State tourney

The University of Massachusetts men's golf team overcame the challenge of 16 other teams and took first place in the Salem State Invitational golf tournament.

It was by no means an easy victory for UMass as Southern Connecticut State gave them a run for the money but the Minutemen prevailed with a score of 312, one better than Southern.

Amherst College finished in third with a 315, just getting by over Central Connecticut and Providence College, each finishing with a 316. Salem State ended up in sixth with a 327.

Top finishers for UMass were sophomores Tim Smith and Jim Ryan. Both tied for sixth overall with a 77. Sophomore Joe Petrin came in eighth, posting a 78.

Senior captain Charlie Ross carded an 80.

Top honors went to Southern's Jim DelGreco, Amherst's Kevin Rorke, and Providence's Brian Murphy. All entered the 19th hole with scores of 72.

"We won it with team balance. We played well up and down the line and that enabled us to pull out the victory," coach Jack Leamon said.

The win at Salem ups the Minutemen's record to 9-1 in match play. Leamon's squad is also fourth ranked in the state.

Rigid policy implemented against cheats

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the last of a four-part series on cheating at the University of Massachusetts. Today's story focuses on the Code of Student Conduct, the academic honesty policy, honor codes and revisions of existing regulations.

Though some colleges and universities use honor codes to handle cases of cheating, the University of Massachusetts utilizes a somewhat more rigid policy prescribed in the Students Code of Conduct and the academic honesty policy.

Both of these policies, however, are currently being reviewed and revised by students, faculty and administrative representatives. The primary reason is because education and course work has changed since these policies were implemented and many people are dissatisfied with existing procedures.

Dean of Students William F. Field, who has been working on Student Code of Conduct revisions, said one of the biggest loopholes in existing policy is the maintenance of records of academic dishonesty.

An example of this loophole, he said, would be a student who has been caught cheating by a professor and who makes a good case in his or her defense to avoid the proper penalty. Conceiveably, this could occur with the same student three or four times and the other professors involved would never be aware of the frequency, he said.

As for honor codes, Field said these exist mostly at military academies and UMass has probably not had one for more than 50 years. "The schools which use them now are beginning to run into problems," he said, "Most have been abandoned because cheating has become more complex."

Mount Holyoke College uses an honor code, which "...relies on the integrity of each student" to abide by the academic rules of that school and encourages others who haven't abided to report their actions.

Most honor codes operate in a similar manner, placing the emphasis of reporting academic dishonesty by oneself or others on that individual, instead of awaiting possible detection by a professor or administrator.

Work on Student Code of Conduct revision began over a year ago, and barring unanticipated problems, the new code may be approved by the University Board of Trustees next winter, Field said. He added that portions of that code may be implemented sooner, if possible.

Simultaneously, a group of academic deans have drafted a new academic honesty policy which is being reviewed by the Provost's Office and Dean Field, Nancy B. Hellman, assistant dean of engineering, said.

Robert N. Brooks, associate dean of students, said he has read that draft and is soliciting recommendations from deans, faculty, students and administrators.

"One of the things I think will come out of the draft is a separate pamphlet of what constitutes academic dishonesty," he said. This pamphlet would provide examples of dishonesty and be made available to both faculty and students, Brooks said.

For a new code of conduct and academic honesty policy to work, it will be important that students and faculty view these documents as credible and fair, he said. Brooks estimated that work on the academic honesty draft would continue for another year.

Former Student Government Association co-President Rick Patrick, who has been working with Field and Brooks on the code of conduct since last summer, said yesterday the Aid will still be sent to Nicaragua

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

Although President Ronald Reagan's efforts to provide $14 million in military aid to the contra rebels in Nicaragua have been thwarted by the House of Representatives, he will probably still find ways to contribute to their cause, campus faculty and students agreed yesterday.

The House voted 248-180 Tuesday night to reject Reagan's aid plan after the Senate approved it 53-46. Members of the University of Massachusetts Peacemakers, Radical Student Union and the Western Massachusetts Latin America Solidarity Committee took part in actions over the weekend at the capitol protesting the proposed aid.

The UMass students were participating in a protest that brought between 30,000 and 40,000 people to Washington, D.C., for the weekend. Activists participated in protests and lobbying exercises and were addressed by the Rev. Jesse Jackson, Alex Guest of the Peacemakers said.

Six UMass students were arrested Monday at the White House, Guest said.

"We feel very strongly that at the time, Ronald Reagan was looking for signs of weakness in Congress," he said. "Aid will eventually go through. We're having one of the very first battles in a very long war."

UMass political science professor Harvey Kline said some people are saying the vote "might be the biggest foreign policy defeat for a recent president."

Although Kline anticipated a compromise on the aid to the contras, the House voted down any contribution to the rebels last night.

"The New York Times says that Democrats don't want to be painted as the ones who 'lost Central America,' so there might be some compromises," he said. "But it appears less and less likely he (Reagan) will be successful...he'll try various end runs."

Kline warned that the vote couldn't be termed a complete defeat for Reagan's desire to aid the contras because funding could come from many sources through a "little bit of slight of hand."

This could occur through the CIA, contributions from private businesses or foreign aid bills to other countries which would then contribute to the contras, he said.

Neil McCabe, a member of the UMass Republican Club, agreed with Kline that some aid will continue to the contras.

"Reagan will continue to fund the contras through Israel, West Germany and Japan," he said. "Conservative organizations will continue to support the contras," he said.

Kline said that funding through third party nations and other agencies would have to be kept "fairly well hidden" from the public and the press.

It's time to appreciate UMass' unsung heroes: secretaries

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

They are the unsung heroes of a huge bureaucracy called the University of Massachusetts. Unheard from and often unseen, you talk to them on the telephone but don't realize that without them, the University would probably come to a grinding halt.

They are the secretaries and clerical workers that are being honored and appreciated this week as part of National Secretaries Week.

There are about 1,000 secretaries and clerical workers employed at the university, working in more than 200 different offices, according to James Coopee, director of personnel.

"They are an extremely integral part" of the university, and without them, "you'd come pretty close to closing down the university," Coopee said.

Ginny Rees, who is secretary to the vice chancellor of University Relations and Development, said her work is, "challenging, interesting and exciting."

Rees' responsibilities include scheduling, correspondence, travel arrangements, typing, attending director's meetings, dealing with staff as well as being a personal secretary. "We have a busy, busy office," Rees said.

Fran Sikorski, a secretary at Housing Services, said she took a typing course during her senior year of high schol and came to UMass three years ago.

About her work, she said, "I love it. I like dealing with people, the pay is adequate and there are good benefits."

Julia Blake is the office manager in the Office of Public Information and the only clerical worker in the office. She said she sometimes feels overworked but likes her responsibility.

"I like the work in the office because I have lots of autonomy," Blake said. But, she said she thinks secretaries in general are underpaid, arguing that janitors start at higher salaries than secretaries do.

According to Coopee, the lowest starting salary for a secretary at UMass is about $11,300 a year. The highest is about $21,000. Of those high-salaried workers, Coopee said, "I can count them on one hand."

Still, it seems that secretaries are invaluable to the daily operation of the university.

"In this office, we could not operate without clerical assistance," said John Findley, assistant director of maintenance and operations in Housing Services.

Dean of Students William F. Field said, "they keep the university operating. What would Field do without clerical assistance? "I'd be in deep, deep trouble, I assure you," he said.

House says no to aid for contras

WASHINGTON (AP) - The House last night killed all U.S. assistance to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua, dramatically rejecting both Republican and Democratic compromises in handing President Reagan a major foreign policy defeat.

Three separate votes on the House floor culminated in a congressional decision to halt the president's three-year campaign to undermine the leftist Sandinista government in Managua.

A Democratic alternative providing aid for Nicaraguan refugees and financial support for a peacekeeping force during a future cease-fire was passed once, then defeated in the final House vote.

Reagan had made significant concessions in his original plan to give the Contras direct military assistance to be funnelled through the Central Intelligence Agency. The Senate on Tuesday had gone along with a Republican proposal to give the Contras $14 million after Reagan pledged to use the money for non-lethal assistnace only and to negotiate directly with the Sandinistas.

Nonetheless, he fell two votes short on the Republican House proposal and thus lost the toughest congressional battle of his second term. That killed any prospect of U.S. aid for the rightist rebels, which was suspended by Congress last year, unless the lawmakers change their mind in the future.

While the final vote on the Nicaraguan issue was decided by a wide margin, 303-123, the critical vote on a Republican alternative was decided by only two votes, 215-213.

As the outcome became clear, there was cheering among Democrats on the floor. And House members who had battled the president's Central American policies openly hugged one another.

Pope appoints 28 new cardinals

VATICAN CITY (AP) - Pope John Paul II appointed 28 new cardinals today, bolstering the Roman Catholic Church in such spiritual battle areas as Marxist Ethiopia, Nicaragua and his native Poland.

Also among the new cardinals are Archbishops John J. O'Connor of New York and Bernard F. Law of Boston. Another American on the list, Archbishop Myroslav Ivan Lubachivsky, is based in Rome and leads the Ukranian Catholic Church of 4.5 million followers worldwide.

John Paul said his list reflects the "universality of the church and the multiplicity of its ministries."

In a move Vatican sources called significant, the pope named the first cardinals ever from Nicaragua and Ethiopia, and a Polish archbishop who is an outspoken supporter of the outlawed Solidarity free trade union. Also included were Rome-based prelates from Poland and Czechoslovakia, as well as Lubachivsky, the strongly anti-communist leader of the Ukranian church.

Part of a group of 50 students at Harvard University stage a sit-in at the offices of the Harvard Corporation yesterday. They are a part of a national campaign to protest U.S. corporate investment in South Africa.

Anti-apartheid sit-ins erupt across campuses nationwide

BOSTON (AP) - Harvard students invaded campus offices yesterday for a sit-in to protest university investments in South Africa as other demonstrations continued throughout the University of California system, including on rally estimated as the biggest at UCLA since the Vietnam war.

About 50 Harvard students forced their way into college offices and set up camp, threatening to stay all day. At Boston College, students planned a sit-in till midnight at the campus library.

A crowd of 2,000 demonstrators at UCLA Tuesday was estimated by rally organizers as the biggest such gathering since the end of the Vietnam War.

The California protesters had called for a "Day of National Solidarity" yesterday at universities nationwide for students to protest campus investments in South Africa, which they say helps support its racist system of apartheid.

At Rutgers University in New Brunswick, N.J., students continued their 13-day-old sit-in yesterday.

Tuesday, the Rev. Jesse Jackson called on Rutgers students not involved in the sit-in to abandon "the selfishness and self-centeredness and materialism of Yuppie-ism."

After speaking at Rutgers, Jackson traveled to Princeton University, where about 80 students have held a sit-in since Friday.

"Princeton must be ashamed about this partnership with South Africa," he told a crowd of about 2,500 there.

At Columbia University in New York, students vowed to continue their fight against investments in South Africa even as they prepared to quit a 4-week-old blockade of a campus building.

Thousands of students from Los Angeles to Berkeley continued their rallies against apartheid yesterday, as University of California regents met with students in Berkeley to discuss ending its investments in South Africa.

Nearly 1,000 students spent their 14th day camped outside Sproul Hall on the Berkeley campus, where last week police arrested 159 demonstrators who ignored orders to disperse. Other demonstrations were held statewide, and some students called for a nationwide boycott of classes.

University of California regents plan to meet in Los Angeles in June to vote on whether the nine-campus university system should divest its money invested in companies doing business with South Africa.

Since 1977, the University of California's investments with South African businesses have increased from $503 million to $1.8 billion, according to university records. The total portfolio has grown in that same period from $1.9 billion to $5 billion.

In Middletown, Conn., about 350 Wesleyan University students and professors rallied to protest the small liberal arts college's $14 million investment in companies that do business in South Africa.

And in Bloomington, Ind., about 20 Indiana University students rallied for the third day yesterday. Twenty-three protesters slept Tuesday night on the steps outside Bryan Hall, the administration building. Several said they would continue the vigil until Saturday.

Elsewhere, about 20 students staged a sit-in yesterday at State University of New York headquarters in Albany, taking over the business office at the central administration building. Students held a protest rally at Syracuse and Colgate University students in Hamilton, N.Y., occupied the administration building.

Pulitzers are announced

NEW YORK (AP) - The Fort Worth Texas Star-Telegram won the 1985 Pulitzer Prize for Public Service Journalism yesterday for reporting which revealed that nearly 250 U.S. servicemen lost their lives as a result of a design problem in Bell helicopters.

The Philadelphia Inquirer and Newsday of Long Island, N.Y., each won two Pulitzers.

Newsday won the award for international reporting for a series of articles on the plight of the hungry in Africa, and the commentary award for columns by Murray Kempton.

The Inquirer was cited for investigative reporting on attacks by police dogs on more than 350 people. The newspaper's Larry Price won a Pulitzer for his series of photographs from wartorn Angola and El Salvador depicting those nations' inhabitants.

The Pulitzer for general news reporting went to the Virginian-Pilot and Ledger-Star of Norfolk, Va., for city hall coverage which exposed an allegedly corrupt local economic development official.

The St. Petersburg Fla. Times shared the Pulitzer for investigative reporting with the Inquirer. It was cited for reporting on alleged corruption in the office of the Pasco County sheriff.

The Pulitzer for explanatory journalism was won by Jon Franklin of the Baltimore Evening Sun for his seven part series about the new science of molecular psychiatry.

In a new category - reporting on specialized subjects - the Pulitzer went to Randall Savage and Jackie Crosby of the Macon Ga. Telegraph and News for their examination of academics and athletics at two Georgia universities.

The Des Moines Register's Thomas Knudson won the award for national affairs for a series on the dangers of farming.

Undergraduate Student Senate speaker John Ruddock addressed the crowd yesterday at the National Student Anti-Apartheid Day rally.

Six 'die' at apartheid protest

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

About 60 students attended a half-hour rally yesterday in front of the Student Union Building to take part in National Student Anti-apartheid Protest day.

As part of the protest, six students fell to the ground to "die" and were covered with sheets stained with red and brown paint. John Ruddock, Student Government Association senate speaker said, "apply yourselves, educate yourselves, activate yourselves."

"If you want to end apartheid, do something now," Ruddock said. "If you don't become part of the solution, you are part of the problem.

"Obviously, there is a mistake. Obviously, there is a problem. Obviously, there is a need to find a new mechanism."

A commission, set up after a three day sit-in at Vice Chancellor Dennis Madson's office, will send a request to the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees to validate its information with regards to companies involved in South African business. The request also will ask the trustees to work on the wording of its policy concerning divestment and to implement a policy to prevent UMass from ever investing in companies earning profits in South Africa.

At Smith College, about 15 students protested for about an hour and were later urged by the school's treasurer to meet with its board of trustees on the matter of divestment, according to college spokeswoman Mary Callahan. About 12 percent of the school's $200 million in investments are with companies involved in South Africa, she said.

Senate passes the buck to students on Coors decision

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted to uphold a motion last night that says the issue of Coors beer sales on campus will be settled by a campus-wide referendum on May 7 and 8.

The motion was a response to a Board of Governors decision to recommend to the Campus Center administration that they halt the sale of Coors beer due to the company's reported union-breaking and discriminatory practices.

"The administration has decided that they will no longer (stock) Coors beer," BOG Chairwoman Jane Donahue said. Donahue noted that any complaints should go to Bill Harris, not the BOG because he is "the ultimate decision-maker in this whole issue."

Bob Griffin, a senator from Grayson who brought the motion to the floor said he did so "because now students can show Bill Harris as well as the BOG what they want and don't want.

In other business, SGA co-president Stacy Roth announced the formal resignation of student attorney general Pia Giammasi, and recommended Brian Baker, formerly Giammasi's assistant, as acting attorney general until a search committee finds someone to fill the seat. Both motions were approved by the senate.

A motion not on the agenda, to expel commuter area senator Paul Kaz did not reach the floor but its proponent, senator Clare Bouzan, said it will be brought up next week.

"In the past he (Kaz) has publicly expressed his disregard for his constituents which goes against the SGA constitution," Bouzan said, adding, "He has intentionally disrupted senate meetings, violating student rights because of his harassment and disruptive behavior.

Who says concrete can't float?

By JOHN MILBIER
Collegian Staff

Most people at the University of Massachusetts know that concrete cannot float, but a group of UMass civil engineers threw the notion overboard yesterday when their 15 foot, 450 pound concrete canoe floated in the campus pond for its maiden voyage.

After its successful trial run, the appropriately dubbed, "UMASS" will travel down to Seneca Park, MD., for a weekend of racing with 10 other universities and colleges that have also defied the laws of gravity.

"We are going down to win and with this tank it won't be hard," said graduate civil engineering student Pete Quigley.

"It's sturdier, thicker, and has a much stronger design than the canoe we used last year," Quigley said.

Quigley said the engineers working on the canoe learned from last year's trip. "Last year the canoe cracked easily because it only weighed 250 pounds and had chicken wires as its main structural support. This year, we've used a smaller wire for more support and have added steel reinforcements to the bow and stern."

John Aveni, a senior civil engineering student said the boat should fair well in the demolition derby at the end of the competition.

"With this bow, I feel sorry for the other boats in the competition. Last year most of the boats were very light (90-150 pounds), this year we expect them to be the same weight," Aveni said.

He said the only criterion for entering the competition was that the canoe had to float when swamped. "To make this possible, we have styrofoam compartments in the bow and stern," Aveni said.

Aveni said the total cost of the materials and trip was $500 and was funded by the University Engineering Alumni Association and the American Society of Civil Engineers.

A photo gives 1000 meanings

By SIOBHAN MASTERSON
Collegian Staff

A photograph has the ability to represent hundreds of separate meanings to each and every person that views it, yet the "true" meaning will always remain elusive and unclear, said a renowned photography expert last night at the university of Massachusetts.

John Szarkowski, director of photography for the Museum of Modern Art, spoke to a capacity crowd in the Campus Center last night about the uniqueness of the art of photography. "Photographs hold a meaning of a special kind," Szarkowski said.

The reasons why photographs are so respected are hard to define, he said. "I used to think that a photograph disclosed its own description," he said. However, pictures can be very ambiguous, representing different situations to each individual interpreting them, he said.

Szarkowski gave a slide presentation, focusing on various photographs that capture human emotions and events that can be interpreted differently through the eyes of the observer. The function of a photograph "is ceremonial and symbolic, not narrative," he said.

Dorothea Lange's famous pictures of a woman and children around her, commonly known as Migrant Mother, were a part of the slide show. "These are probably the most widely reproduced pictures in the world," he said. The pictures could be of an anguished woman and her own children, reminding one of the dustbowls and Steinbeck's Grapes of Wrath, he said. But by observing the photograph, he said, one cannot assume anything about the woman.

Museum of Modern Art's Curator of Photography John Szarkowski

"What is left is a picture that comes close to toal abstraction, that can be used in many different ways."

A photograph is a "cultural artifact," he said. The event pictured is usually forgotten but the human emotions it captures are what remain, he said.

"What is a great photograph is a historical judgement, not a private one," Szarkowski said.

Szarkowski has been at the Museum of Modern Art for over 25 years. According to the New York Times, he is unquestionably one of the greatest critics of photography in the country today.

Industry Day will toast sponsors

The University of Massachusetts is sponsoring Industry Appreciation Day today to recognize the beneficial partnership between the School of Engineering and industrial sponsors.

Duane E. Cromack, associate dean of the School of Engineering, said last week he expects more than 200 industry representatives to attend the event. Most of those representatives are from corporations who have provided fiscal and equipment grants to the University, he said.

A convocation at 4 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall featuring National Science Foundation Director Eric Bloch will be free and open to the public, Cromack said. UMass President David C. Knapp will present an honorary degree to Bloch during that convocation, he said.

Engineering Dean James E. A. John has said this is the University's way of thanking corporations for their support and to recognize the mutual achievements of industry and education.

A fiscal campaign launched five years ago has raised almost $11 million in outside funding, double of the initial goal.

Plans set for sprucing up campus

By MICHELLE SEGALL
Collegian Staff

Bogged down with red tape, spring renovations to the campus landscape have come to a near halt.

With $10,000 to $12,000 to spend on plantings, the Physical Plant has not received bids on the entire package, according to Ron Naylor, chief planner of the Physical Plant.

Although part of the package has been approved, "the bulk of the package needs to be re-bid on," he said.

Areas slated for work this spring include the area from the Whitmore Administration building to the Tower Library, (known as the esplanade), the Faculty Club and the Rhododendron garden (behind the University Health Services). Work on health services, begun last year, will be completed by the end of the semester.

The Physical Plant will begin working on the renovations even though the bidding isn't over. "We'll start with what we have," Naylor said. Bids for trees and some shrubs have been approved.

Although the bidding "delays the implementation of the project," Professor David Booth, chairman of the Campus Physical Planning Committee said he is optimistic about plans to spruce up the campus.

"We really seem to be making some progress on some things that had remained untouched for years," he said.

The committee is "aware of the deficiencies on campus," and is trying to improve them but, "the condition continues to be deplorable. We have a long way to go before we have a campus of which we can all be proud," he said.

"It's amazing the amount of effort it takes to make anything happen on this campus. Amazing," Booth said.

Fisher Laboratory burns out

Amherst firefighters remained on the scene until yesterday morning at the Fisher Laboratory blaze that destroyed more than half the building.

"There are still lots of hot spots around," Amherst Deputy Fire Chief Keith Hoyle said Monday night. "We'll be here looking for small fires still burning inside the wall."

Fifty firefighters fought the blaze, which broke out shortly before 11 a.m., Tuesday. A blow torch caused the fire when, cutting through a pipe, it heated a small portion of saw dust behind a wall. The dust was used as insulation in buildings constructed near the turn of the century. Fisher Laboratory was completed in 1912 and originally housed apples from a nearby orchard.

According to Ed Ryan, chief design construction engineer at the Physical Plant, a small part of the building housing the fire extinguisher shop, ironically survived the flames. The remainder of the charred building will be demolished today.

Child mortality activist to speak at Amherst

Amherst College will host activist Dr. Jon Eliot Rohde, an expert on child mortality in Third World countries, at 8:15 p.m. today in Johnson Chapel.

Rohde believes that 15 million children could be saved each year at the cost of $2 per child, Terry Allen, a spokeswoman for Amherst College, said.

He argues that increased wealth rather than advances in modern medicine are responsible for today's longer life expectancies.

Rohde has worked for OXFAM America, UNICEF, relief organizations and for many individual countries. He is currently Head of Management Sciences for Health in Haiti.

Program encourages minority students to attend college

By JOSEPH McCORMACK
Collegian Staff

Minority students from suburban high schools in the Boston area visited the University of Massachusetts earlier this week for College Awareness Day, a program designed to encourage their enrollment here.

The students are associated with the Metropolitan Council for Educational Opportunity, Inc. (METCO), which places minority students from Boston in suburban high schools to give them greater educational opportunites. The 38 high schools that participate have a total of 380 METCO students. 138 of those came to UMass Tuesday.

Rudolph Jones, assistant director of freshman admissions and coordinator of the activities said, "The program is essential in exposing minority students to the UMass environment."

Although minority applications are down 5 percent, minority enrollment should be 8.5 percent of the freshman class. Last year's figure was 7.1 percent. Jones said that although this will be an increase, the Admissions Office will not just "play the numbers game." Programs like College Awareness Day are important in attracting quality minority students, he said.

Rick Towner, assistant director of academic services and the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and Minority Students, said students had an "extraordinarily positive" reaction to how the program conveyed educational opportunities at UMass, as well as the quality of life for minority students here. He said the New Africa House and CCEBMS were two good examples of such quality life at UMass.

Townes said it is important that minority students feel comfortable here or they will not attend, despite good academic programs.

On the negative side of what UMass has to offer, Townes said, financial aid offered is "not close to the demand for it."

Cathleen Brown, a sophomore from Framingham North High School who wants to major in veterinary science, said she was impressed with UMass but is also considering the University of California.

Tim Finch, a junior from the same school who plans to major in biology, said he may go to UMass because of its relatively low cost and its proximity to his home.

Tracey Alford, a senior at Lynnfield high School who plans to attend UMass in the fall and major in computer science, said she shoce it because, "I heard it was a good school."

"I have a brother here, too" she said. "It's not as expensive as the private colleges and I know a lot of people who go here."

Corporate executives will advise tonight at 7 p.m.

Representatives from four major corporations will advise students at the University of Massachusetts today on how to penetrate the business world.

The event, sponsored by the Investment and Finance Clubs, is an open forum and panel discussion titled, "Opportunities in the 1980's for all Business majors." It will be held at 7 p.m. today in room 116 in the School of Management.

The director of the Financial Development program from Honeywell, the senior vice-president of Bay Banks, the vice-president of personnel from Dairy Mart and a recruiter from Chubb Inc. will discuss the opportunities available to college graduates in the job market.

PIRG forming acid rain group

The University of Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group will kick off its drive to form an Amherst Acid Rain Coalition tonight with a forum at 7 p.m. today in Campus Center room 101.

The coalition will seek to organize local merchants and citizens to push for the passage of an acid rain bill currently in the state legislature, Meredith Anderson, a member of UMassPIRG, said.

The forum will feature the movie Nova: Acid Rain about the effects of acid rain in Sweden and Germany, Anderson said.

The film will be followed by two speakers. Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, will discuss the bill in the state legislature which would put a cap on sulphur dioxide emissions in the state.

revised code will more clearly define academic dishonesty and outlines new procedures.

The proposed new code will enable an accused student to have a hearing before an academic honesty board composed of a new, autonomous University Hearing Officer and an equal number of faculty and students from the school or college where the offense occurred.

"Everybody recognizes the fact there's a lack of continuity throughout the University to deal with cases of academic dishonesty," Patrick said, noting that different departments have different honesty boards or committes to handle academic dishonesty cases.

"Hopefully, the implementation of a University Hearing Officer will provide continuity and interpretation of the academic dishonesty guidelines University-wide," he said.

Patrick said all students should be dealt with in the same manner in each department, regardless of where the infraction occurred.

Because the Dean's Council has made this a priority, the student representatives have been actively pursuing this for some time, and other University agencies and representatives have been consulted, Patrick said he was optimistic that a mutually agreeable universal policy will be adopted soon.

Objectivity 'laid to waste'

Stephen C. Erickson

The political left has deemed this week to be Latin American Week here at the University of Massachusetts. Awareness of the people and politics of Central and South America cannot be realized unless the student body is presented with all sides of the complex issues that surround those nations south of the U.S. border. Since the Republican Club was not asked to participate, the dogma of the radical left will dominate this week's "awareness."

On the menu, no doubt, will be the usual emotional pleas and deceiving rhetoric served by an assortment of left wing activists and a few ivory tower academics. Swallowing their message whole will surely cause the student seeking objectivity indigestion.

With the vote in Congress on funding for the Contras pending, Nicaragua will be a focal point of this week's activities. Many U.S. citizens who have traveled to Nicaragua will give testimony to the benevolence of the Sandinista regime, just as many U.S. citizens traveled to the Soviet Union in the thirties proclaiming that system's virtues only to later discover that Stalin had murdered some twenty to thirty thousand of his own people. Typical of the unquestioning North American tourist is Massachusetts Congressman Ed Markey. Much of the border area population having been forcefully removed to camps within the interior of Nicaragua, Congressman Markey set out to talk with the people living in one of these camps. The Congressman speaks no Spanish, so the Sandinistas cheerfully provided a translator. Through the lips of the friendly Sandinista translator, Markey found these to be some of the most happy and satisfied peasants he had ever seen.

The person seeking to understand the nature of the Sandinista regime would do better to listen to former Sandinistas who now fight the perverted course of the revolution. A founding father of the Sandinista revolution Arturu Cruz writes: "I joined the Revolutionary Government with appreciation and pride. I served it with a loyalty founded on the conviction that the revolution would be good, first and foremost for Nicaragua. My experience has disillusioned me: dogmatism and adventurism seem to have wiped out the democratic and pluralistic ideals, which in 1979, united all Nicaraguan advocates of freedom. My lamentation and criticism is that these ideals have been shattered and the moral defense of the Revolution has well nigh vanished." Indeed, many former Sandinistas now lead the fight against the regime now in power.

Likewise, many of Somoza's associates can be found in high ranking positions within the Sandinista government. They include the Sandinista Foreign Minister Miguel D'Escoto and Junta member Sergio Ramirez, who has written magazine articles praising Somoza, to name only a couple.

We will hear this week that the Sandinistas pose no threat to their neighboring Central American nations. In this case, we would do better by listening to the Sandinistas themselves. When Interior Minister Borge was asked whether the revolution would be exported "to El Salvador, Guatemala, then Honduras and Mexico," he responded by saying "That is the one historical prophecy of Ronald Reagan's that is absolutely true...the Nicaraguan revolutionaries will not be content until the imperialists have been overthrown in all parts of the world." There is no nation in Central America today that is not gravely concerned with the threat the Sandinistas pose, including democratic and unarmed Costa Rica.

Objectivity will be laid to waste to this week. Already the Contra vote has been compared to the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution. Helping people to fight for their own freedom is quite different from massive U.S. military intervention and in fact, may serve to prevent such intervention in the future. The well being of the people of Central America, and ultimately ourselves demands that we examine the conflicts in that vital region carefully, thoroughly and above all, responsibly.

Knowledge can frighten too

Skokie, Illinois.

To those who live in the Chicago area, Skokie isn't known as being much of a town. It's a typical Chicago suburb with a silly name, not really unique. And yet in the late 1970s something happened there which catapulted Skokie into headlines and law books across the country.

You see, Skokie is a town with a high population of Jews with 7,000 of them being survivors of Nazi concentration camps who came to the United States after the war to rebuild a life for themselves. In 1977, a local group of Nazis applied for a permit to march through Skokie and hold a "white supremacy" rally.

I was just a naive eighth grader at the time in another Chicago suburb. But I clearly remember the radio and television broadcasts about the proposed march. Nothing was ever said about it in school, though. We studied history and the concentration camps during World War II, but no one ever suggested the connection between Skokie and Nazi Germany. I was too naive to see that there was one.

It was during that time that I heard the word "anti-Semitism" for the first time. I didn't know what it meant and I didn't make an effort to find out. That word didn't fit into my world or my vocabulary. It never occurred to me that there might be, in this day, an intense hatred of Jews. I thought it was just Hitler who had some screwed up notions about people with different religious beliefs than himself. I just didn't understand.

It wasn't until I came to UMass four years after the uproar in Skokie that I heard the word "anti-Semitism" again. It was then that I began to hear about other attacks on Jews—this time right here on campus—in my world. I started hearing stories about swastikas painted on people's doors and a blood-like solution that was poured under a Jewish woman's door. For the first time I heard comments about "cheap Jews" and "JAPs." And I still didn't understand.

It has always been beyond my understanding how someone's religious or cultural beliefs could be a target of violence or of insults. But something happened last week which began to help me see that this hatred does really exist—even among my peers.

I came home one night to my dorm and found that a large poster which commemorated the Holocaust Memorial Week had been ripped up in 15 different pieces and scattered down the hallway of my floor. I later found out that three similar posters in the dorm were either shredded up or disappeared altogether. Since that night, I've noticed that same poster ripped up in other buildings on campus.

A great deal of anger and hatred went into ripping up those posters. These posters were simply trying to make sure that the six million Jews who were murdered in concentration camps would not be forgotten. The whole week was designed to remind us that this Holocaust happened once before and could very possibly happen again.

Before last week, I didn't believe that. Now I'm not so sure.

I still don't understand the hatred and anger that went into ripping up those posters in my dorm last week. And I'm no more closer to really understanding anti-Semitism now than I was when I first listened to the radio broadcasts about the Nazis in Skokie as an eighth grader or when I came to UMass as a freshman. But now, for the first time in my life, I understand what it means to be frightened by it.

Now that a $179,000 loss has been dealt with in the Budget Act for fiscal year 1986, the question of fault may be moot. In the face of things, all that deserves condemnation are the unfounded accusations coming from all sides.

Until these people realize that a lack of funds is not a partisan issue and that open and accurate communication usually breeds needed cohesion, we are never going to act anywhere.

A budget committee officer contends that Chris Sullivan, former senate speaker didn't want to bring "up any mention" of a fee increase because he would look bad. He charged that Sullivan had told him in a private conversation that he feared any suggestion of a recognizably needed fee increase may cost him his job.

No matter what may have been said, it is clear that Sullivan's seat as speaker was secure as was shown by a 58-24 vote in opposition to a motion brought up in the poll to unseat him.

Moreover, it is highly unlikely that someone involved in student government for over three years would be so ignorant as to make such a self-incriminating statement to a political rival.

According to Sullivan if there was warning of the extent of this year's financial catastrophe, "the budget committee would certainly have had access to the information." So, why didn't they bring up the suggestion of a fee increase?

Sullivan suggested that a fiscal crisis may be a way for the Student Activities Office (SAO) to inhibit student empowerment by gaining as much control over the SATF as possible.

SAO Business manager Bob Jenal said he "has no desire to place blame anywhere" and "his only interest is that the trust fund move forward in a positive manner."

Jenal added that it is important that SAO "work jointly" with the SGA leadership.

In an effort to retain student control over the SATF, Sullivan should be praised for his wariness toward the administration's kind words. To heed Jenal's warning in October however, would have provided more alternatives that the budget committee was given in February.

It's hard for students to be in the position of being financial analysts," Sullivan said.

Bob Jenal, the financial analyst who deals specifically with difficulties and shortcomings within the SATF sits only one door down. Shouldn't we let the man do the job he's being paid for?

So, if some budget committee members would stop the unprofessional and blatantly personal attacks on the more progressive SGA leaders (There's no place for ideology here, kids), and if paranoia of the administration, sometimes justified, was sometimes examined - maybe this year's budget act wouldn't look so dismal.

Give it back

Given the theme of cheating and ripoffs in this week's Collegian I would like to share a recent experience with your readers:

Last Saturday at about 8 p.m. I gave four young men (students?) hitchhikers (three were white and one black) a ride from near the corner of Route 9 and South Pleasant Street to near the Southwest dorms. They were all pleasantly tipsy and I recall the black man saying his name was really Gerald although his buddies called him Jerry. They repaid my kindness by "borrowing" two boxes of homerecorded cassettes from the backseat of my car. Many of these 20 cassettes had my name stamped on them in red ink. If you are or know any of the people that did this, I would appreciate getting my music back and having my faith in the basic honesty of people restored.

The enemy from within?

Last week, we commemorated the passage of time since the Holocaust. It was not so much for the remembrance of one of the darkest moments in the history of mankind, but to recognize how not to let such a tragedy ever occur again. It was not only the grotesque Holocaust in Germany being remembered but all holocausts since time began and those occurring today: Afghanistan, Iran, Africa, Latin America, and the plight of homosexuals, the poor, hungry, homeless and modern women.

Recognition of the tell-tale signs of a holocaust was another factor during the past week. Holocausts originate in countries where nationalism grows to perverse proportions. A seemingly disunited country bands together to fight a common, imaginary enemy in the name of patriotism, with no regard for human rights, decency, or self-acknowledgable error. In America, tell-tale signs of perverse nationalism, and a possible non-violent holocaust are everywhere.

What of the intense, religious-oriented efforts at banning books, thus imposing censorship? What of forced prayer? What of educational budget cuts, especially for the handicapped? What of simultaneous outcries to ban abortion but proliferating nuclear arms? What of denying the existence of the poor, homeless, and hungry? What of sluggish growth rates, small profits, large deficits, and rising inflation? Post World War I Germany? No, 1985 America.

A visible sign of our nationalism is the current trade war with Japan. Is America a truly free enterprise, capitalist society? If it is, any capitalist and consumer is only trying to buy the best-quality product at the lowest cost. Maximization of profits is the fact and the rule. Has America not caught on yet, or have the blinders of arrogant nationalism taken over our objectivity?

It is time to be honest. We are fooling ourselves that America is still the center of the world. We have, by our own choice, isolated ourselves from the rest of the world with our arrogance. We must learn how to live on this globe. Within the country, we cannot faction ourselves off between those who make the rules and those who suffer the consequences of those rules. Banning books and abortions should not be the banner for the "new, great American Revolution." If we don't learn from these idiotic sentiments and change for the better, our archaic morality, our patriotism, our haughty and arrogant nationalism, our denial of our own country's problems, our isolation will destroy us.

What is the enemy we are banded together to fight? Where does it exist? Possibly, it is within ourselves.

Support the ban on Coors

Recently, the Board of Governors voted to discontinue the sale of Coors beer at the Blue Wall after hearing more than three hours of debate on both sides and after reading pages and pages of material. As an alumnus of this University I am proud of the students' decision. When all students have had a chance to find out what Coors is all about I trust they will agree with the board's decision.

All people have a right to know where the money earned by the Coors family goes. The truth is that Coors has a very long history of practices which are racist, which work against women, the supporters of bilingual education, lesbians and gays, working people and many others. Indeed, it is hard to think of anyone who has not in some way been touched by the warped ideas and hurtful practices of Coors. A few examples:

•In 1966, the Coors boycott was started by several Hispanic groups because of discriminatory hiring policies.

•In the late 1970s, Coors founded the Heritage foundation which is widely regarded as Reagan's thinktank and which has urged rolling back bilingual education and Title VII and Title IX protections for women and minorities in education.

•In 1979, Coors' Committee for the Survival of a Free Congress and its director were instrumental in creating the Moral Majority whose spokespersons have called for the death penalty for gay people.

•Coors has destroyed many unions and had consistently opposed workers who file complaints about dangerous working conditions in the Coors' plant.

Coors reserves the right to search its workers whenever it wants. According to its employment practices, workers can be fired for saying anything bad about Coors beer. Workers must take a lie detector test when they apply for a job which among other things, asks them if they have ever been involved in a demonstration. When Joseph Coors was a regent at the University of Colorado he fought against distribution of birth control information to female students and opposed the existence of Hispanic and black campus groups. There are many kinds of beer that students can buy in the Blue Wall. They don't have to buy the one beer that earns money which goes to deprive people of their rights.

The only reason Coors has decided to market its beer in the East is because its sales in the West are down in virtually every state in which it is sold. Why? Because people have chosen not to support a company which turns around and deprives them of their rights. Students at the University of Massachusetts should support the Board of Governors' decision to discontinue the sale of Coors beer at the Blue Wall.

What is a black American?

When talking about blacks and the rights they deserve as human beings and citizens of the United States, many have asked, "Well, what is a black American?"

In any city, U.S.A., peoples of African descent are black Americans. But this status was not conferred on them gratuitously. The blood, sweat and tears of the millions of Africans who were forcefully brought to America built the backbone of what today is America.

From cooking, tending the house and the children, to planting and picking cotton, to clearing the forest and digging canals and laying tracks and fighting to promote "freedom" blacks have been Americans for more than 300 years. They are black Americans, proud of their heritage.

Blacks are Africans by ancestry, Americans by nationality and black Americans because of the rich, unique subculture they have developed in the U.S. Therefore, to be "black" in America is to reaffirm one's culture and negate implications of being anything else but that. Being black also asserts one's sense of identity with no reference to outside labels or names.

In the contemporary world, calling oneself a black American is not so much a matter of skin color, but a state of mind, a realization of one's identity.

But as W.E.B. Du Bois noted in The Souls of Black Folks, "The history of the American Negro is the history of this strife—this longing to attain self-conscious manhood to merge his double self into a better and truer self. In this merging he wishes neither of the older selves to be lost. He would not Africanize America...He would not bleach his negro soul in a flood of white Americanism...he simply wishes to make it possible for a man to be both a Negro and an American without being cursed and spit upon by his fellows, without having the doors of opportunity closed roughly in his face."

A forgotten genocide

Yesterday marked the 70th commemoration of the Armenian Genocide. On April 24, 1915, 243 Armenian political, religious and intellectual leaders were rounded up by Turkish soldiers, tortured, then executed. This was the first step in the systematic extermination of 1.5 million Armenians living in the Ottoman Empire. Those who escaped were never allowed to return to their homeland, which their ancestors had lived in for more than 3,000 years. After Turkey's defeat in World War I by the allies, however, the Turkish government was not held accountable for the great atrocity that had been committed. No "Nuremburg" trials were held, and no reparations for stolen Armenian property was paid. In fact, the entire tragedy was by large ignored by the international community. The Turkish government denied that the genocide ever occurred and undertook a massive campaign (which is still going on today) to distort the events of 1915.

The unheeded Armenian Genocide provided a good example for a rising German politician in the 1920s—Adolph Hitler. When Hitler finally did rise to power in 1933, he started working on his own genocidal plans. On August 22, 1939, at Obersalzburg, a few days before the Nazi invasion of Poland, Hitler cynically remarked to his commanders-in-chief, "Who still talks nowadays of the extermination of the Armenians." The Nazis proceeded to kill more than 12 million people in concentration camps. It is for this reason that the Armenian Genocide should be remembered and outrageous Turkish denials should be fought today. For those blind of history are doomed to repeat it.

Letters to the Editor

The Collegian has done it again: opinion before facts

While I presume that the opinions of the Collegian editors do them credit, Monday's unsigned editorial took a few significant factual liberties concerning the UMass Republican Club.

There appears to be some confusion at the*Collegian* as to our identity. Over the past year or so we have been variously referred to as the Young Republicans (a national organization with which we have no connection), the College Republicans (ditto—Monday's error), and the UMass Republican Club (that's us). As for the age-old question, "What's in a name?" the Collegian's misinformation probably led many readers to believe that our organization takes part in the efforts of the National College Republican Committee which we do not, whatever their merit.

Finally, there's the matter of the positions taken during this semester's two-panel forum on Nicaragua. One of the panels was composed of four members of the Republican Club, none of whom ever said they thought the Nicaraguan freedom fighters to be "the moral equivalent of our founding fathers," as indicated by the Collegian editors. The four did advocate continued U.S. financial aid to the freedom fighters, but there's a considerable difference between their position and what the Collegian editors said. It should also be noted that the club itself never takes a position on an issue, but serves only as a forum for the opinions of individual members.

A newspaper's one indispensable asset is its credibility and reputation for accuracy. As it would have required only minimal inquiry on the part of the Collegian to get the above facts right, I hope that your editors will take greater care in the future.

I told my colleagues here that I was going to take a week or two break from this nonsense, but alas, duty calls. No time for chat. Santana, Tuesday. In case you hadn't heard the Tubes are the headlining act for the spring concert, although I think SOS should be on last. But nobody asked me.

Tonight the Outlaws with God knows how many guitarists will be at the Blue Wall. Remember 'Green Grass and High Tides Forever? With Lynyrd Skynyrd broken up and the Allman Brothers half-dead this is as close to the southern rock phenomenon as you can get. Tickets are only $5.

Also tonight, Thursday that is, Girls Night Out will be at Pearl Street and Johnathan Edwards will be at the Red Balloon.

Minimum wage Rock 'n' rollers the Bus Boys will be at Smith College, for what should be a really fun show. Circle will be at the Rusty Nail. They're really growing, no more Hatch for these guys. Oh yes, the Good Guys will be playing with the Bus Boys.

That's Flat, The Stand, and Scarlet Angelwill be playing at the Rusty Nail on Friday.

There will be a two-day benefit for the Zone Art Center at the Zone in Springfield tomorrow and Saturday nights. The Zone has concerts periodically as well as art exhibits.

Tomorrow night the Sighs, Pajama Slave Dancers, and Square One will play. On Saturday it will be Eighth Route Army, the Mongrel Puppy and the Bamboo Steamers who will be playing.

Also on Saturday night (smooth transition, huh?) The Stompers will be at the Rusty Nail and Marshall Crenshaw and NRBQ will be at Mt. Holyoke College.

The Del Fuegos will play at the East Side concert this week.

The Iron Horse has some interesting things coming up. Tom Paxton will be there Sunday. Harpist Allan Stivel performs on Monday. Chris Williamson on Tuesday. Not to be outdone, Pearl Street will have the Robert Cray Band on Monday and Tower Of Power, who received rave reviews the last time they were up here, on Wednesday.

The other real big deal this week is the East Side area concert which is, of course, free. Hosting will be Lenny Clarke of the famous Lenny Clarke Late show. Then it will be The Fools, First Circle, The Del Fuegos and Roomful Of Blues. Should be good fun and kind of outdoorsy.

Trivia Question: Once again there is a vague prize for the question, a free ticket to the East Side concert maybe? What school did the majority of the Del Fuegos attend? Bring your answer down to the Arts desk with your name and telephone number.

With so much representational art currently being produced at the university, it is refreshing to see paintings which are both abstract and meaningful. Libby Hubbard's exhibit, "Neutopian Images and Future Art," which appeared at the University Gallery last week, was a prime example of such works.

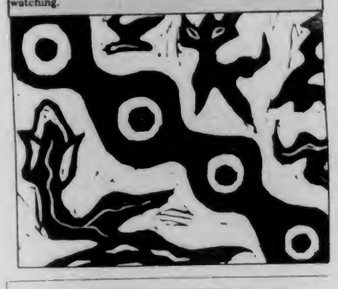
Hubbard's work is unusually vibrant and colorful. Her penchant for unorthodox shapes and squiggled lines evoke recollections of Kandinsky, Ernst and Miro. Paintings such as Organic Composition and Evolution, which appeared in the 1984 Spectrum, particularly display this important influence.

The German expressionists also appear to have made a notable mark on Hubbard. Munch's warped, elliptical heads and Klimt's color clusters figure largely in her work; the latter most obviously in a 1981 composition, Magic Mountain.

Hubbard's paintings, even the most abstract pieces, all have a delightful harmony and balance. There are motifs in shapes and color schemes which unify her works, communicating a sense of the cyclic continuity of the universe she portrays.

Meaning in Hubbard's art is never lacing and always pertinent. There are statements about science, population, peace, life, war, birth, love and pain. One graphic and moving piece, Driving to the Edge, depicts the monotony of commuting and its deleterious effects on the environment.

Hubbard's work, which will be displayed in full in a planned 10 year retrospective to be held in her native Greensboro, is remarkably vigorous and filled with vim. One woodcut creation--amazingly enough her first attempt in the genre--is filled with all the spontaneity and electricity that the event dictates. Hubbard is assuredly an artist worth watching.



Allen's comedy leaves bitter aftertaste

By SUE IZZO
Collegian Corespondent

It's time for Woody Allen's annual movie! Last year it was Broadway Danny Rose, the year before it was Zelig, and now here's his latest, The Purple Rose of Cairo, starring Mia Farrow, Jeff Daniels, and Danny Aiello, which opened Friday at the Hampshire Mall.

Leave it up to Woody Allen to come up with another off-the-wall plot to keep his fans happy. Take one movie-aholic (Mia Farrow), add one screen character-literally (Jeff Daniels) and one low-life husband (Danny Aiello), then blend in one actor (deja vu, Jeff Daniels again), and you've got yourself a completely unbelievable plot that keeps the audience chuckling at Allen's humor and marveling at his creativity. To state the plot would give it away, and I want you to be just as surprised by the film's little twist as I was, so sorry guys, no plot summary for this film.

Farrow in the lead? Although those of you who have seen Broadway Danny Rose may not connect this plain, dowdy-looking woman to the blonde bombshell of last year's film. Farrow, as in past films, shows off her ability as a character actress and pulls off her role as Cecelia, the starry-eyed small-town housewife, with a definite lovable effect. Playing a movie-aholic, she portrays the persona of all those who used to escape the reality of the Great Depression by slipping into the mysticism of the cinema. It is a joy to watch her on the screen.

The reason behind Cecilia's obsession with film is both Tom Baxter, the screen character, and Gil Shepard, the actor (Jeff Daniels and Jeff Daniels, respectively). For those of you who have already seen this film and know you've seen this actor before, you might remember him as Debra Winger's husband in Terms of Endearment. Given a difficult task of creating two different characters for one film and performing each with equal "believability."

With such a good cast and such a creative and imaginative plot, what could possibly be wrong with this film? Well, sorry to disappoint you people, but I can't give this film four stars (we're saving that for Drew Barrymore's latest film). Not to give away the ending of this film, I have one thing to say: it ends harshly and almost bitterly. While watching this film, I enjoyed its imaginative and almost fantastical approach and then Allen tacks on a "back to reality" ending. How cruel! He seems to be commenting that "Well, that's the real life..." My answer to that is, well Mr. Allen, if that's life, why fill our minds with fantasy and expect us to accept such a mundane ending? I could hear the audience grumble in disappointment, "Is that it?" and see them leave in disgust. O.K., I admit it, I'm a romantic, but I'm sure that a lot of others out there would enjoy a fairy tale ending once in a while.

Even if I didn't like the ending, it doesn't stop me from recommending this film (Although, may I suggest closing your eyes, covering your ears and humming during the ending). It is perfect for those of you who love film and who believe that dreams are made to come true. I'd consider it one of the better spring/summer films on release. So, come on, put all your problems, finals, and homework on hold for an hour and a half and lose yourself in, as Tom Baxter said, the "land of celluloid and flickering images."

Gorillas revenge: Harvard falls, 13-8

Freeman nets hat trick to lead potent offense, defense shuts the door

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE, MA - A New England championship and NCAA tournament berth may not be in the future of the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, but there are still a few scores to settles before the season ends.

The Gorillas snapped a three-year losing streak to Harvard University, riding a 6-1 first quarter lead to a 13-8 victory over the Crimson in Cambridge yesterday.

Senior Ken Freeman made the most of his switch from attack to midfield by registering a first period hat trick as UMass, now 4-5 on the year, came out shooting.

"We wanted to jump on them right away, we felt we owed them," Freeman said. "We felt confident with a midfielder guarding me because with a short stick there wasn't any way he could keep me from going to the cage. It felt good to drive in and get a good shot."

The Gorillas also welcomed sophomore attackman Tom Carmean back after a two-game absence due to a shoulder injury suffered at New Hampshire. Carmean celebrated his return with two goals and three assists as Harvard was unable to keep him from successfully moving in from behind the net.

"A guy like Tommy, when he's healthy, can do a lot with the ball and make things happen out there," UMass coach Dick Garber said. "The changes we made worked out well and it was a good win for us over a team that usually gives us a lot of trouble.

"Defensively, the close defense (Tom Aldrich, Mark Stratton, and Gerry Byrne) was tremendous and Gerry (goalie Gerry Moreau) was solid as always. It was one of our best efforts this season."

Freeman scored two goals in the opening 55 seconds of the game, taking a Carmean feed for a short-range blast just 22 seconds into the contest before dodging in one-on-one from the lower right corner of the field to blow past Harvard goalie Mark Bergmann 33 seconds later.

Carmean put UMass up 3-0 before Harvard's Tom Corcoran went in unassisted with 8:02 to go.

Senior attackman Tom Lukacovic, Freeman and junior midfielder Greg Fisk then ran off three goals in-a-row and UMass was in command, up 6-1 after a period.

Freeman then passed to attackman Mike Fiorini at the top of the crease with 9:20 to go in the second period and the senior gave UMass a 7-1 lead before Paul Garavente answered for Harvard. The two goals were all the scoring the teams would do in the period.

University of Massachusetts' defenseman Gerry Byrne (36) and midfielder Rich Abbott surround a Rutgers player earlier this season. The Gorillas defeated Harvard University yesterday in Cambridge 13-8.

Matt O'Reilly, Carmean, Lukacovic and senior co-captain Karl Hatton scored third period goals for UMass. Rufus Clark and Garavente scored for Harvard but UMass, for all intents, had the game won with an 11-4 lead going into the final quarter. Neal Cunningham, after a steal, and Doug Musco, after a nice feed from BubbaSandford, rallied for UMass in the final period. Harvard scored four goals but never threatened.

Moreau made 13 stops with Quint Moores making two. UMass outshot the Crimson 46-36, cleared the ball a good 25-of-29 times and enjoyed a 47-43 ground ball advantage.

Softball sweeps Blue Devils

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

NEW BRITAIN, CT--In the University of Massachusetts last five games before yesterday's doubleheader with Central Connecticut, the Minutewomen had scored just one run.

UMass went 1-4 in that stretch and got only 19 hits in its last four games.

Coach Elsine Sortino was positive, though. "Once we begin to hit the ball, look out!" she said before the game.

UMass went off on a hitting spree against the Blue Devils getting 10 hits in a 4-3 opening game win and 13 hits in a 6-0 nightcap victory.

"We did a lot of good things out there today," Sortino said "We swung the bats and played good, tough defense. It was nice to see."

UMass made only two errors all afternoon, both in the first game. One error, by third baseman Debbie Cole, and three Devil hits cut the UMass lead to 4-3 in the bottom of the sixth.

But the Minutewomen held tough and Lynn Stockley (10-7) got Central Connecticut to ground out three times to end the game.

"We held our composure and we did it very nicely," Sortino said.

Stockley struck out seven in the opener and helped her own cause going one-for-two, a double with two RBI. Lisa Rever, 6-5, hurled and won the second game as she struck out four and tossed her first two-hitter of the year.

But this was a hitter's show this chilly afternoon. Rever went three-for-four in the nightcap and outfielder Emily Bietsch went off, going four-for-seven on the day, with a double and three RBI.

Second baseman Carol Frattaroli went three-for-three in game two and shortstop Paige Kopcza went four-for-seven on the day also with a double and two RBI.

UMass, now 17-18-1, took a 4-0 lead in the first game on an RBI single by Ilene Freeman, a two-RBI double by Stockley and an RBI single by Chris Ciepiela in the sixth inning.

In the nightcap, Sally Maher and Kopcza had RBI singles in the fifth for a 2-0 UMass lead and the Minutewomen exploded for four more in the sixth and a comfortable 6-0 advantage.

Yesterday's doubleheader was the first UMass has swept since April 13 at St. Joseph's in Philadelphia.

All-NYC forward UM bound

Second-team all-New York city forward, 6-6 Joe Fennell, has signed a national letter-of-intent to attend the University of Massachusetts.

Fennell led Boys and Girls High of Brooklyn (Syracuse guard Dwayne Washington's school) to a 25-3 record while averaging 17 points and 15 rebounds-per-game.

"Joe will be a player who will give us added depth in the frontcourt," UM coach Ron Gerlufsen said."He will develop into a good college player."

Gerlufsen hopes to add possibly three other players, a point guard, forward and a center, by the end of next week.

Just a few thoughts...

The city of Cleveland, dumped on more than Rodney Dangerfield or even this column, is finally gaining some respectability from their sports teams. The Cavaliers, once known as the Cadavers (a common word used when I go on a date), are playing the Celtics much tougher than expected. Two close games in Boston led to a Cleveland victory Tuesday night. Of course, the Celts were without Larry Bird with elbow problems, but there is no question that the Cavs came to play...This could hurt the Celtics on their next series against either Detroit or New Jersey. Either club, seeing the trouble Boston had with Cleveland, may go in with that much more of a positive attitude.

If the Lakers have any trouble during their conference play-off, it'll be waking up in the morning. They must be tired after scoring more than 140 points a game. What's needed to beat them is a team that slows down to a snail's pace, the equivalent of waiting for the PVTA Northampton bus...What really cracked me up was when WTBS (Ted Turner's station) carried playoff games last Sunday, they had as their "expert" commentator Atlanta Hawk coach Mike Fratello. I know that the better coaches are in the playoffs and he must have been only a cab ride away, but it was really tough to take him seriously after he led the Hawks to the elite club of not making the NBA playoffs, more exclusive than the Fortune 500.

☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆

The NHL playoffs have garnished a little more excitement this season, the overriding series being Quebec and Montreal. The Habs and Nordiques have checked each other's blood type in three straight games, with two going in overtime. I don't think either can survive the Flyers, who look like they will be the team to eliminate the Islanders...Kelly Lindberg is without question the best goalie in the game. He has the quickest reflexes since Ken Dryden and knows not to put a rebound in front of the net (are you listening, Steve Penney?) I don't think last year's Stanley Cup winners have much of a chance against Philadelphia.

☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆☆

Haywood Sullivan has to talk to another broker. His investments aren't really paying off in great dividends. Captain Jim Rice has the knack of somehow hitting it right at the shortstop when someone is on first base. It's uncanny. Dwight Evans seems to enjoy striking out more and Bob Stanley gives up leads free of charge...I know Boston hasn't been playing that badly but these players must produce in order for the Sox to contend with Detroit and Toronto.

No more need be said.

Student strikes to shun militarism

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

A student strike will be held at colleges and universities across the nation Monday, and students at the University of Massachusetts plan to participate by boycotting classes and holding several events to increase awareness of militarism.

Instead of attending classes, students are urged to attend a peace camp outside the Student Union Building, which will include teach-ins on South African apartheid, the Vietnam conflict, and militarism in Central America and other parts of the world, Fiona Macaulay, an organizer, said.

We hope students will participate in this event, but obviously we don't expect everybody to skip their classes," Macaulay said. "This is a mass action, though, and it's for less political people to demonstrate their feelings about militarism."

Macaulay said students in Boston will attempt to close the Draper Laboratories Building, a nuclear weapons producer, and students in New York City will attempt to close the length of 42nd Street, which houses the city's red light district and armed services recruitment center.

Macaulay and other organizers of the event did not know how many other colleges and universities would hold boycotts but noted that a wave of student activism has hit the country this spring which includes sit-ins at UMass, Columbia, Rutgers and Tufts.

UMass praised for industry ties

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts has become a pioneer in developing an essential alliance between government, industry, and higher education, the director of the National Science Foundation said yesterday.

Speaking at the convocation of Industry Appreciation Day, held to thank industry representatives for their fiscal and equipment support, Eric Bloch praised the University's efforts which he said other colleges and universities must duplicate.

"The University of Massachusetts and companies in this area have achieved a range of cooperative programs and activities that richly deserve appreciation," Bloch said. "It is appropriate that we honor here the vision and dedication of those both in the University and in industry who have accomplished that much."

During the convocation, UMass President David C. Knapp presented an honorary degree to Bloch, saying that the foundation and Bloch have served as a "well spring of support for technology which has made this country great and helped UMass pioneer in a way which other schools envy.

Smith College student is raped

A Smith College student was raped Tuesday night after an unidentified male assailant forced her to drive him to Hadley, where he raped her, according to a Smith College spokewoman yesterday.

The student, who lives on campus, was attacked by the man when she went to her car, Mary Callahan, assistant director of public affairs at Smith, said.

The man forced the woman into her car, made her drive to Hadley, raped her there, and then forced her to drive him back to Northampton, she said.

Callahan said the woman received treatment at Cooley Dickinson Hospital and the Smith infirmary.

She said the man was unknown to the woman.

Northampton and Smith police are investigating the incident.

Smith security is contested during vigil for rape victim

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

One hundred and fifty women students gathered on Seelye lawn at Smith College last night to hold a candlelight "Take Back the Night" vigil prompted by the recent rape of a Smith student.

The vigil, organized by students, was called to extend support to the recent victim, to protest the large scale problem of violence against women, and to protest the local problem of inadequate security on the Smith College campus, said Suzanne, an alumna and organizer who requested her surname be witheld.

Commenting on Smith security, she said the school often hides or evades issues of sexual abuse on campus by often "not giving full details" when a rape occurs.

"Smith won't say what parking lot the woman raped on April 23 was abducted from," she said, adding that failure to disclose this information meant that women could neither avoid the lot or take action to increase the security measures there.

"At Smith there needs to be more security, more control, and better lighting," remarked Mary, a student-organizer who also requested her surname be witheld.

Mary also commented on the lack of support networks at Smith for victims of sexual abuse which makes reporting incidents "humiliating experiences," she said.

"Although few rapes are reported at Smith we don't really know how many there are," said student Emily Harding-Morick, stressing that the number of reported incidences fails to reflect the true extent of the problem.

According to Suzanne, the reluctance of Smith College Administration to release detailed information on incidences of violence against women on campus and their reluctance to build support networks for victims stems from their wish to maintain their "public image," she said. Harding-Morik said that another reason which prompted the vigil was the opportunity it allowed for "women to come together and verbalize their fear and anger."

"A lot of people were very upset and frightened by what happened Tuesday and an important step is to turn our fear into anger and say we're not going to stand for it," agreed student Jocelyn Wender.

"One woman is raped every three minutes," said Mary, speaking to the crowd. Seventy-one percent of rapes are planned, 11 percent are partially planned and 16 percent are spontaneous, she said.

"We must no longer live with this terror. We must take back the night," she said.

"Rape is the most blatant form of violence," said a spokeswoman for the Valley Martial Arts. She added that because of inadequate legal support women "have to find support in each other."

"I think it's incredible how many women have gathered here tonight at such short notice," she said.

Economy to keep slipping due to education cuts,prof. says

By IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Staff

The United States will continue its downward slide in the world economy unless the U.S. government acts to strengthen, not cut, education and other social programs, an economist and author warned a University of Massachusetts audience yesterday.

Lester Thurow, a professor of economics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, said the government must also control the rise in the value of the dollar in order to help American industry and agriculture in the face of foreign competition.

In terms of education, "The American worker doesn't compare" to his or her counterpart in Japan and most of western Europe, Thurow said, speaking to about 70 people in the Campus Center.

For example, while only 0.5 percent of all Japanese workers are functionally illiterate (cannot read beyond the fifth-grade level), that figure is 7 percent in the U.S., he said.

Thurow, who has written extensively on the American economy, was a member of a commission headed by North Carolina Gov. James Hunt which in 1983 issued a gloomy report on the status of education in the U.S.

He attacked the conservative prescription of favoring private entrepreneurs by minimizing social spending and other government involvement in the economy.

"Instead of liberating the entrepreneur, you're going to have to improve social organization...(and) produce a high-quality mass education for everybody.

"What is an American liberated entrepreneur going to do with illiterates?" he asked.

Thurow said a strong "belief in no intervening in foreign exchange markets" has hurt the U.S. because the value of the dollar has steadily risen in recent

Bush on aid: never say die

WASHINGTON (AP) - Two Nicaraguan rebel leaders yesterday assailed the House rejection of new U.S. aid to the resistance fighters as a "communist victory" and the Reagan administration vowed not to give up its struggle to get money for the Contras.

"We will be back and back and back until America does the right thing," Vice President George Bush said in a television interview.

"We are not going to turn our backs on those who are fighting for democracy in our own hemisphere to the favor of those who are trying to establish a Marxist-Leninist dictatorship in Central America," Bush said.

At the White House, spokesperson Larry Speakes said: "The point is, the president will not abandon his goal of finding funding for the freedom fighters in Central America."

Speakes said the administration was looking for ways to force new votes on the issue.

Under parliamentary ground rules the administration could revive the $14 million proposal by next Tuesday.

House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, said the Contra aid issue would be back, "but not between now and Tuesday," despite Speakes assertion.

Wright said "there is a widespread feeling in Central America and on Capitol Hill that Reagan will not be satisfied until he has American troops down there." The majority leader said that was not necessarily his opinion.

The House on Wednesday night rejected a compromise Republican proposal to provide the rightist Contras seeking to overthrow Nicaragua's leftist government with $14 million in non-lethal assistance. The night before, it had voted down Reagan's original request that the money be used in direct military aid.

On Capitol Hill, Nicaraguan rebel leader Alfonso Robelo told a news conference, "The debate in the Congress has resulted in a communist victory, but the civil war in Nicaragua continues."

Sunny's maid testifies

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) - Martha "Sunny" von Bulow's maid testified yesterday that she found her mistress unconscious, ice-cold and moaning in bed beside Claus von Bulow minutes after he warned her to stay out of the bedroom because his wife had a sore throat and would be sleeping late.

Maria Schrallhammer, the first prosecution witness in von Bulow's retrial on charges he twice tried to kill his heiress wife with insulin injections, said it was not until about five hours later on Dec. 27, 1979, that von Bulow called a doctor.

Mrs. von Bulow, 53, had lapsed into the first of two comas. She recovered from that one, but doctors say she will never recover from the second coma of Dec. 21, 1980.

Miss Schrallhammer, 62, said that when she heard her mistress's groans, she ignored von Bulow and entered the bedroom after knocking once.

The frail, softspoken maid, said von Bulow, who was reading beside his wife, insisted she was only asleep. "He said...they hadn't been sleeping the two previous nights. 'Let her sleep.'"

"I saw Mrs. von Bulow was laying on the bed with her right arm hanging off the bed. I tried to talk to her. Her arm was ice-cold...I was shaking her and getting no response," said Miss Schrallhammer, who has worked for Mrs. von Bulow for 23 years.

Good friends will give you a break when you're broke.

The dinner was sensational. So was the check. The problem is, the theater tickets that you insisted on buying broke your whole budget. Enough to declare bankruptcy by the time the coffee arrived.

A nudge under the table and a certain destitute look in the eye were enough to produce the spontaneous loan only a good friend is ready to make.

How do you repay him? First the cash, then the only beer equal to his generosity: Löwenbrau.

State senators discuss acid rain

Amherst coalition is formed

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group last night kicked off the formation of the Amherst Acid Rain Coalition with speeches by state Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst and Professor O.T. Zajicek of the UMass chemistry department.

Olver discussed the progress of two bills in the U.S. Congress designed to control acid rain as well as a bill he introduced into the state house to control it at the state level.

"The political will is not there" to pass acid rain legislation in congress, he said. The senate version is based on making the polluting states pay, while the house bill would be based on a national payment scale, according to Olver.

"Both of these bills this year are in trouble," he said. State senate bill 1187, which is now in the senate ways and means committee, "would require that the department of Environmental Quality and Engineering set the maximum (smokestack) emmissions in this state to an average level between 1979 and 1982.

"Then if we don't have any kind of national movement by 1987, we would have to embark upon a reduction program that would reduce the sulfur oxide emmissions into the air by something like 30 percent starting in Jan. of 1989," Olver said.

"While we can't do everything here...we can make an effect. We should take the step in this state if it is clear that the federal government isn't going to," Olver added.

According to a recent report by the Acid Rain Monitoring Project, located at UMass, of 40 percent of state waters tested, 5 percent are acidified and cannot neutralize acids. Zajicek, who works on the project, said about 44 percent of the state's waters are highly sensitive to acid deposits.

The project which will have an inventory of almost 100 percent of the state's surface waters, will be the most extensive in the world when completed, Zajicek said. "You go to Washington D.C. and they tell you that more studies are needed. You throw down that volume of numbers and people will listen."

Acid rain is caused by pollutants primarily from power plants of the Midwest which when mixed with moisture in the atmosphere travel with the weather patterns and later fall to the earth.

Storytelling Conference to take place

On Saturday the School of Management building will be home to storytelling techniques instead of marketing strategies when the University of Massachusetts hosts a "Perspectives in Children's Literature" Conference at 8 a.m.

The 14th annual conference, founded by Hatfield author Jane Yolen, grew out of "sharing sessions between authors, illustrators, and editors," William Moebius, professor of comparative literature, said.

"It grew and grew, attracting teachers, librarians, the occasional college instructor and eventually the public," he said.

Workshop leaders includes such noted writers and illustrators of children's books as C.S. Adler, Charlotte Zolotow, mystery writer John Bellairs, Tom Feelings and local author Patricia MacLachlan.

They will lead workshops with themes on Afro-American fiction, censorship, the use of television to promote reading and the use of books to teach children about the nuclear threat. Professionally oriented discussions on portfolios, manuscript "surgery," and word processing will also be held.

New senate officers vow support for students

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

Graduate students at the University of Massachusetts have elected two new senate officers who have both pledged to campaign for students' rights.

Jerry Ashlock, a senator from the labor center, was elected president of the senate while George W. Claxton II won the vice presidential position in an election which had a turnout of only 167 voters, less than three percent of the graduate students.

Ashlock, who campaigned on "a commitment to activism," said he plans to have the student grievance procedure put into effect as soon as possible, and will also fight to improve safety on campus.

Ashlock said his focus will be to address the issue of student finances, which he said is not more difficult to acquire due to the disappearance of grants and its replacement with loans.

"This trend can only serve to weaken our education process and breed divisiveness and uncooperative attitudes among our citizens," he said.

Claxton will push for students rights, which he said won credibility with the student body's response to the Universal Resource Fee. Future protests must be stronger and even more radical, he said.

Claxton said that for the past few semesters, the University administration has started to think of students as "a powerless group of whiners who, when push comes to shove, will back down and become a rubber stamp for whatever policies they care to put off on us," he said.

Claxton said that further struggles for student's rights will erase this image.

The senate elected John Hayes, a senator from Prince House, as its new executive officer, and re-elected Alison Huettner as treasurer. Huettner ran unopposed.

Hayes said he will concentrate on stipend increases and the grievance procedure, and also said the senate must work more closely with undergraduates on issues that affect both groups.

David Martin sweeps commuter area elections

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

In a landslide victory yesterday, David Martin was elected Commuter Area Spokesman, capturing over 95 percent of votes cast.

Less than 6 percent of the commuter population voted in the election between Martin, a commuter senator and student coordinator of Student Center For Educational Research Advocacy (SCERA), and the commuter Area senator Paul Kasman.

On the low turnout commuter Area Government Program Coordinator Jose Tolson said, "We have to do more outreach and increase what we've already begun to do." Tolson hopes to produce more newsletters and advertisements to raise awareness about the commuter area government.

Martin, formerly an undergraduate student senator, said, "I hope to work closely with the UMass transit advisory to continue to provide the shopper shuttles.

"I would like to continue late night service," to allow students to go to bars and parties without driving, he said.

"I would like to continue the commuter program support funds for child care," Martin said. He said that he would like to "try and establish a sense of community."

"I'd like commuters to start working more closely with the fourth floor (Student Union Building) groups," Martin said. With university fees rising, "similar groups are going to have to band together."

"I'm very happy that I won and I appreciate the people who voted for me," Martin said.

Panel examines effects of '60s on the future of American politics

"The 1960s and the Future of American Politics" is the subject of a three-day symposium which began last night in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center.

The event is sponsored by political science faculty members at UMass. In a series of speeches and panel discussions, political scientists, authors, historians, and economists will examine the political fallout from Lyndon B. Johnson's Great Society, the Warren Court, Vietnam, the Civil Rights Movement, high tech and the future, and the role of television in American politics.

Everett C. Ladd, director of the Roper Center for Public Opinion and author of "Where Have All the Voters Gone?," opened the program last night with a presentation on "The American Voter and Politics Today."

Robert Kuttner a contributing editor of The New Republic and editorial writer for the Boston Globe will speak on "The Political Legacy of the Great Society" this morning after opening remarks by Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey and political science department chairman Lewis Mainzer.

Other events will continue today and tomorrow.

Professor of political science Jerome Mileur will be on of the symposium's panelists. "It is appropriate to look back at that time because it was a pivotal time," Mileur said.

Mileur said one of the symposiums' goals is "to identify a half dozen of the events," that he said have had spinoff issues which prevail today.

We will look at the "political consequences of the sixties," and try to find out how we got from Lyndon Johnson to Ronald Reagan, he said.

Persons interested in registering for all or part of the symposium should contact the political science department, 545-2438.

Funeral scheduled for student killed

A funeral will be held Saturday in South Easton for University of Massachusetts student Judson C. Walton who died Tuesday from head injuries sustained when he fell off the hood of a moving car last Friday morning.

Walton, 20, a member of the Phi Mu Delta fraternity, was executive vice president of the UMass Inter-Fraternity Council, a member of the ARCON Greek Honor Society and a member of the crew team. He was also a waiter at the Top of the Campus restaurant and a volunteer with the Student Credit Union.

Walton, a 1982 graduate of Oliver Ames High School in North Easton, leaves his parents, Judson C. Sr. and Catherine Walton of North Easton. He also leaves a brother, Kenneth S. Walton, a student at UMass, and a sister, Melissa Walton.

The funeral will be held at 10 a.m. in the Robert J. Kane Funeral Home.

The burial will be in the Immaculate Conception Cemetary in North Easton.

Calling hours will be held in the funeral home from 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. and 7 p.m. to 9 p.m.

Donations in his memory may be sent to the Massachusetts Chapter of the National Head Injury Foundation, 217 South St. Waltham 02154.

Woman hits man who followed her to dormitory

A female student knocked a man to the ground with her book bag after he followed her to her dormitory Wednesday night, University of Massachusetts police said.

Police said the unidentified man was walking at the same pace directly behind the student near Butterfield House. As she approached the dormitory, she swung her book bag at the man and ran into the dormitory to call police. Police said the area around the dorm was searched but revealed no suspects.

A group of five female students were warned by Amherst police after they fought over a parking space in lot 22 Tuesday night. Police said the women were bordering on disorderly conduct after they were observed yelling at each other.

The drivers of the two cars were apparently vying for the same parking space, police said.

Three hundred walk against hunger

By TIM O'LEARY
Collegian Correspondent

Three hundred people, including 200 University of Massachusetts and 80 Amherst College students will walk seven miles Sunday in the second annual Amherst CROP Walk to raise money for the fight against world hunger.

The CROP Walk, which is sponsored by Church World Service (CWS) a worldwide relief and development agency, will begin at 1 p.m. on the Amherst Common and go to North Amherst and back.

"If anyone wants to walk in the CROP Walk they can just come to the Common at 1 p.m. and we'll give them a packet and we'll collect from them later," Sylvia Snape, a member of the CROP committee, said.

"Many people in this community are not aware that some people in the world walk as many as five miles just to bring water to their home," she said.

"All my life I've heard over and over again about people starving but with CROP a community can work together and generate thousands of dollars that really make a difference.

"We'd like to make $10,000," she said.

Twenty-five percent of the money raised in the walk "stays in our community. Some of it goes to Jesse's House, a Hampshire County emergency shelter," Snape said. The Amherst Survival Center "provides emergency articles of clothes and food" and will also receive funding.

The UMass Hunger Task Force assisted in recruiting students for the walk and "the people who will be walking are those that have expressed an interest in the problems of hunger and are trying to do something about it," junior John Horsler, treasurer of the task force said.

"I can't imagine any student taking longer than two hours to do the walk," Horsler said. "The actual fact of participating in the walk gives you a great feeling."

People with questions regarding the CROP Walk can contact Sylvia Snape at 549-1623, after 5 p.m., or the hunger task force at 545-2661.

Duane E. Cromack, associate dean of engineering, said that over 300 industry representatives, state legislators, and University faculty and administrators attended the convocation. Since 1980 a capital campaign has raised $11 million for the College of Engineering, twice the original goal.

Engineering Dean James E.A. John said yesterday's convocation and awards dinner was the University's way of saying thank you to its sponsors, including the foundation.

"This alliance has enhanced the reputation of the College of Engineering within the state and nationwide," he said, "and we are now conducting research at the forefront of technology, which is truly a resource for the Commonwealth."

In a speech similar to one he delivered at last week's polymer research funding drive attended by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey emphasized the importance of an industry, education, and government partnership to help this country continue to compete in a global market.

Duffey said today's economic situation presents a challenge of cooperation to provide educational quality which is critical for this country's future.

At a banquet after the convocation, John presented awards to four corporation representatives whose companies have been "outstanding in their help to the University and made the capital campaign go."

Analog Devices, the Digital Equipment Corporation, the General Electric Company, and Raytheon have all supplied funding for faculty, graduate programs, research, and computer and laboratory equipment, John said.

American goods have become more expensive on the world market.

He added that the government should override concerns about inflation and sell more dollars on the world market in order to control the rising value.

"A free financial market can sometimes go out of control and do tremendous damage to American farms and industry," he said.

He said the U.S. must recognize that it no longer has the "effortless economic and technological superiority" that it once did. Japan and most western European countries have caught up to and will pass the U.S. in industrial productivity, he said.

Women victims of sterilization abuse

By KIMBERLY BURGE
Collegian Staff

Sterilization abuse is a major issue among Third World women and one they should be aware of, according to panelists who spoke last night on the issue at the University of Massachusetts.

"La Operacion, a film about sterilization abuse among Puerto Rican women, shown before the discussion, explained why Puerto Rico and Puerto Rican women were the targets of population control during and after the Great Depression.

According to the film, in 1946, 6.5 percent of Puerto Rican women had been sterilized in government hospitals. In 1953, the number increased to 17 percent. In 1956, birth control pills twenty times stronger than those given today were tested on Puerto Rican women living in government housing projects.

The film also showed that if the United States had met its goal of sterilizing women, one-fourth of the world's women would be sterilized to prevent revolution from interfering with the financial interests of multi-national corporations.

"A recent study has shown that in 1980, 51 percent of Hispanic women in Hartford had been sterilized, in 1981, 65 percent in Worcester, and in 1983, 55 percent in Springfield had been sterilized," said Maria Idali Torres, director of the Women and Infant Care program in Holyoke and Westfield, who specializes on Hispanic women.

"Hispanic women are 10 times more likely to be sterilized than non-Hispanic women," Torres said. There are two kinds of abuse: overt and covert.

"Overt abuse is when the women don't sign consent forms or are forced to sign one. Another type of overt abuse takes place in the United States when consent forms are not translated into Spanish and they aren't fully explained," she said.

Covert abuse is when the doctors tell the woman that sterilization is the only thing which will solve her gynecological problems, Torres said.

Laurie Jefferson, program director of the Reproduction Health Program for the Massachusetts Department of Public Health said, "Sterilization is not the only gynecological issue black women face. They must also face unnecessary hysterectomies and infertility."

"Unnecessary hysterectomies (removal of ovaries) are a major problem for black women. They are usually given as a result of traditional operation and cause many women to show the signs of early menopause. Infertility is caused by gynecological problems not treated or treated too late. If the problem is treated, the women are usually given poor medical treatment," Jefferson said.

Pache Cruz, Donna Light, Jahmes Finlayson and Alisa Beaver of Nueva Cancion, will perform at 3 p.m. Sunday in the Campus Center Auditorium as part of Latin American Week.

Radio show takes on musical safari

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Searching for music from the African diaspora in the Pioneer Valley might be an everlasting trek. But since last August from 8 p.m. to 2 a.m. on Saturdays on WFCR, there is a place one can find it: Safari.

Safari is a show of Pan-African music expanding from the blue-green shores of Trinidad and Tobago, touching on the streets of St. Louis and Columbia and ending on the backwoods of Africa.

"Safari is a program where I try to present the different aspect of African culture as expressed in Africa and in the Western Hemisphere," Kari Njiiri, the show's producer, said.

The show is done in two parts, one showing the African culture as represented in the music of the Antilles, Africa, North and South America. The other part incorporates the American jazz radio festival produced by the National Public Radio.

Njiiri said the show emphasizes the commonality of African music and how it is expressed in different ways and styles. Safari also tries to express the African roots that have influenced and prevailed in Western music.

Because African culture is based on an oral tradition to educate the community, Njiiri felt a show such as Safari was needed. Criticizing the Black Mass Communications Project (BMCP) for failing to keep that tradition alive, he said "we lose a part of our identity and not make connection with our past."

Njiiri, a BMCP member from 1978 to 1983 said the problems with project have confronted with WMUA was predictable and is due in part to the limited programming they offer. "In the past, people openly receptive to more diverse programming had warned of those consequences," of hour cuts and loss of funding.

He said the purpose of the organization is still valid and essential, but there should be "more diversity of expression from the African-American musical world."

By becoming aware of one's identity and one's cultural roots and tradition, Njiiri said black Americans can find a strong base of support which the media tends to denegrate to the point "where denegrate it ourselves."

By hosting Safari, Njiiri said he is learning "about myself, my culture and a legacy that preceeded me." With the show he is also joining the struggle to battle with the cultural chauvinism of American society.

The Queens, N.Y. native said another motivating factor sparking his interest in radio was born out of his travels in Africa, and Europe. Njiiri lived in Kenya the first part of his life.

Among the advantages he finds in the college public station is serving a wider audience, and finding support, "in terms of encouragement and (show's) mere existence."

Njiiri suspects "there will be a consensus and a demand for the program to continue and expand," when he leaves. He added no matter in what direction his predecessor chooses to stir the program, Njiiri hopes he or she, "stresses the African connection."

"An African is always an African. This is one thing that has survived in our music, in the way we talk, in our language and even how we walk. It is part of our every day life," he said.

Letters to the Editor–

Students should be involved

We have a problem on this campus. We have groups of students, under both authorized and unauthorized auspices, trundling around telling everybody, administration, SGA, and students alike, what is best for the student body. Yet when crucial questions come up on the senate floor, these people (or some of them) are either not there or leave conveniently for quorum to be called.

In the past three weeks, the Student Senate has been mired in personality conflicts, party politics, and an outdated, practically unknown form of parliamentary procedure. It has been frustrating, even outraging, to many of my friends (non-senators) who have come to the Senate to watch it "in action." Unfortunately, I, along with most senators, have grown accustomed to the games that are played on the Senate floor, and even join in at times. Isn't it about time that students and RSOs and other organizations started coming to the Senate to observe it and protest its almost lifeless incompetence?

I am a champion of Senate authority, but that authority is mandated by the students and no one else. The Senate is going to be dealing with the Budget Act for Fiscal Year 1986 on May 1, 1985. This Budget Act is a crucial one, one that is going to affect every aspect of student government at this University. I urge every RSO on this campus, and every student who can make it, to come down to that Senate meeting and listen to the debate. The ex-Treasurer of the Student Government Association, John Mooradian, once said, "We don't have to fund RSOs..." The Budgets Committee wants to show him, and anyone else who puts the SGA or professional payroll over the RSOs, how wrong he is.

Polemics aside

Polemics aside, I wish to question Peter Dow's depiction of the turmoil in Nicaragua. First of all, why are the contras considered "true democrats?" Have they demonstrated a capacity for persuasion, reason and moral integrity as opposed to brute force? Do they intend to establish a fair, representative government, one based on reform? In short, have their actions and objectives affirmed that they are Democrats?

Second, Dow accused the Sandinistas of adopting PLO and Gestapo terrorist activities to drive out Jews, quell opposition groups, and murder thousands of native Indians. Such serious charges demand solid evidence — Dow should present pertinent documentation.

Third, Dow contends that the Sandinistas are anti-American Communists bent on spreading their tyranny across Central America. Are the Sandinistas so dangerous, powerful, and ruthless? Is this their stated goal, or is this Dow's assessment? What facts or evidence can Dow present to support this rather sinister portrayal?

Fourth, he asserts that the Nicaraguan people are opposed to the Sandinista government. Is this true? Are all Nicaraguans in favor of overthrowing their present leaders? How does Dow explain the outcome of the November election?

Dow must realize the serious nature of his statement. He advocates a violent overthrow of the Sandinistas in which countless people will die and many more will suffer terribly. This bloody civil war would take place among a people which Dow does not even know. The argument which he presents better be correct and well-justified because they and not he will suffer from the mistakes.

Care about the government

Bravo, and respect, for the students who opposed the CIA on campus, those who opposed American business involvement in South Africa and University investment there, and the student Board of Governors in its vote against the sale of Coors beer on campus. We have had information for some time that the rich person(s) owning Coors heavily financed the campaigns of Ronald Reagan and is a strong supporter of the "moral majority" policies (accurately named IMMORAL MINORITY).

Needed opposition to right wing politics, power, i.e., on the part of students, and all of us, is long overdue. Now that we are in a real mess in this so-called "democracy," we are beginning to act. We can create a real democracy in the U.S., a responsibility and duty under a democratic system, if we work at it and accept our responsibilities. It will take more of us than currently active. It will require much more work.

Those who don't accept the responsibility for others, and just concern themselves with their own lives and "getting ahead," are a bit less than human. After all, the specialness of the human species is its ability to care, and for all and to nuture and build.

Let's really care about our government and our society and participate. Are we a democracy?

Time in a bottle

Rita Murphy

There are times when the world isn't anything like we want it to be. There are times when the coldness of the outside hits and penetrates the inside.

There are times when life just isn't fair.

Remember being young? It was so nice back then, being able to sit in the corner and cry for as long as I wanted.

Children, God they're lucky they don't care about acting their age, if they cry it's considered part of growing up or learning or maturing. They don't even have to have a reason to cry, they let the tears flow.

But when you're older you're supposed to act mature, I'm told. No place for tears, no place for sorrow.

We see as children a world to conquer. We see as adults a conquered world.

In youth there is no such thing as disillusionment. What is there to be disillusioned at? The world is big and bright, full of television and red liquorice and peanut butter and fluff sandwiches. There's usually someone full of love warning "not too much t.v., " or "why don't you do your homework." The world is simple. Oh sure, there's a lot of questions and few answers, but its all simple. The tears are simple. "Mom wouldn't let me sleep over my friend's house because I didn't do the dishes." It's all so damn simple. Oh, so simple.

When children think of growing up they think of power. "When I'm older I can watch all the television I want." "No one, I mean no one can tell me what time to go to bed." "Think I'll stay up past midnight every night."

Time, it really does go by fast.

You wake up and the world is just there, no warning, no nothing. It just is.

So what do you say when you don't know? What do you tell someone when you're not sure what it is you're telling him or her or them? How do you jump for joy or grimace in pain, not physical but mental? How do you accept when people say "no" to you and your beliefs? How do you accept it when people say "no" to someone you say "yes" to ? How do you accept disappointment in yourself and in the world?

What should you feel when the president says let's forget the bad? What do you do when you too want to forget but know it is wrong?

What do you feel when they strap a man to a chair in Louisianna and pump his body with enough electricity to light a room? What do you do when the man in the box says 20 more people were killed today because of the color of their skin?

What do you do when you just don't want to grow up, when you want to recapture the feeling of joy at seeing a dog fetch a stick?

What do you do when you just seem disillusioned with life?

How can you get it back, get back yesterday before tomorrow?

Time, I guess it really is a state of mind.

Fighting paranoid ideology

Becky Lockwood
Michael Jackman

The protest last weekend in Washington D.C., concerning United States arms and foreign policy attracted an estimated 75,000 "typical" leftists, according to D.C. police. The protesters chanted their "silly slogans" in order to attract the nation's attention to Reagan's misguided policies. Since the 14 million (tax dollar) aid package for the contras was being voted on Tuesday, a main thrust of the rally, lobbying and civil disobedience that took place during the 4 Days of April Action concerned the elimination of U.S. aid to the Nicaraguan rebels.

The nature of this protest was two-fold. Many of the protesters recognized that the Sandinistas have strived for and achieved measurable change in the living conditions of the Nicaraguan people. These people have reciprocated with support of this government, as evidenced by the Sandinistas' victory in the recent election. The Sandinistas have made marked improvements in health care and education for the Nicaraguan people, such as rent control, a massive literacy campaign, universal vaccination drives, accessible health care to neglected people and the immediate outlawing of capital punishment. The Sandinistas represent to the people of Nicaragua, a progressive and positive change from the elitist Somoza regime. Somoza and his followers (many of whom now populate the ranks of the contras) were indifferent to the struggles and suffering of the people. Whereas Somoza pocketed the money donated to his government by relief agencies for the reconstruction of Managua after the earthquake of late 1972, the Sandinistas initiated highly visible, labor intensive public works projects to begin a clean-up in Managua and other areas, as well as re-employ thousands of unskilled laborers in Nicaragua.

Some of the programs initiated by the Sandinistas have not been successful. Additionally, the Sandinistas have violated many human rights, most notably the raids on the native Meskito Indians. Reagan's opposition to the Sandinistas rests on these human rights violations and yet, his administration supports such governments as Chile, South Korea, the Philippines and most conspicuously, South Africa, all of whom have also been found guilty of a similar disrespect for human freedom. These governments are attractive to the Reagan administration because they are pro-U.S. and anti-Soviet. This exposes the administration's policy goals; in its relation with other governments, it values an anti-Soviet stance more highly than a human life. This goal is evidenced by Reagan's support of the Contras. By comparing the contras to the founding fathers of our nation Reagan has insulted and degraded the memory of such Americans as Washington, Jefferson and Franklin. It is hard to believe, that the fighters who freed our country from Britain used such tactics as the torture and murder of civilians working within the government for social betterment, like health care and literacy workers.

The second aspect of the protesters' opposition to the Reagan Nicaragua policy is a firm belief that every nation of people has the sovereign right to self-determination of government. Reagan's support of the contras violates not only this assertion but also international law, as manifested by the World Court's ruling. It is ironic that the "peace initiative" proposed by the president was originally formulated by the contradora nations, who ardently oppose all U.S. intervention in Central America.

The protesters recognized that Reagan's policies have been based on a paranoid militaristic ideology and rallied because they believed U.S. foreign policy should be founded on a respect for human rights and not a government's alliance to the imperialist doctrines of either the United States or Soviet Union. These people used the right and responsibility granted to them by our democratic system to effect change in unjust, expansionist policies.

Michael Jackman and Becky Lockwood are UMass students.

Letters to the Editor

A time to say 'no business as usual'

Monday is "No business as Usual" day. It is a day of national protest against the militarization of the U.S. society, the world society and most importantly an attempt to "stop WWIII no matter what it takes." Here at UMass the day is being devoted to a number of events aimed at stimulating thoughts about the true dangers in our "nuclear age;" and to impress upon people the need of an urgent solution to the fear and danger that exists in this world. Although the day itself might seem to be a symbolic action it is only by empowering and educating ourselves first that we can act effectively to change the course of world history.

There is no longer any time to argue about the virtues of a strong defense, deterrence or the arms talks. "You cannot simultaneously prevent and prepare for war," Einstein said; and Reagan made a joke about this point. The punch-line, "The bombing begins in five minutes," in a time of peace rhetoric and war preparation is not that funny, especially if one considers the possibility of it not being a joke.

This day is not one of usual sectarian politics; it is not the time to decide between Reagan and Mondale — it is not the time to flip-flop between physics and sociology — it is not the time to read the New Republic or New York Times; because when the bomb drops it will not choose by race, gender or political affiliation. Nuclear war will vaporize everything including politics and school.

I hope that people will take the time to visit the peace camp by the pond, listen to the teach-ins and watch a few of the free movies on the first floor of the Campus Center. But most of all it is my hope that the people of our campus will take the day, put down the books and biases, and face up to the reality of nuclear war. We must make the choice together to declare "No business as usual" and move off of the path that is leading to annihilation.

Random Notes

When comfort and caring are forgotten...

There are a great many subjects that I could stick my two cents into, but I would much rather relate a story. A disappointing but true story.

On Sunday, a friend of mine collapsed at our West Side Story rehearsal in the Campus Center. The room was very warm because even though temperatures have reached very high these past few weeks, the University hasn't turned off the heat. In addition, the young woman spent some time in the sun during the day and had eaten only one meal. We immediately called Health Services and waited while the woman lay on the floor trembling and very scared.

A police officer arrived to assess the situation. I would like to say that he came to see if she was all right, but he sure didn't act that way. The officer came in and stood behind one of the cast members who was assisting our friend, waiting for him to move. The fact that this man did not move away at light speed should not have prompted a harsh command from the officer in this particular situation.

This in itself can be excused, right? After all, he was just thinking of the woman's health as she lay on the floor, right? Not quite! If this was true then he's got my nomination for the Academy Award for the role of creep of the year! What should have followed was a comforting question and answer period. What we witnessed instead was an all out interrogation! He did not smile, and his voice was far from gentle and relaxing. On the contrary, it was hard and accusatory. We found our feelings of worry for our friend rivaled by our anger at this man in uniform. As the questions and the amazing bedside manner continued the patient got more and more upset. Our man in blue was no help beyond his handbook questions. The woman was sick, not a criminal.

Some may feel that I am displaying the "UMass mountain our of a molehill" syndrome. I don't. There was something missing. If a child is lost, an owner robbed or a woman ill, a police officer's job must extend beyond the ABC's of memorized questions and answers. Seeing the lack of any comforting attention Sunday night makes me wonder if I haven't stumbled upon the answer to an age old question: "Why don't people like cops?"

Think about it. I did.

An artistic ode to a lost friend

Artist's Show A Tribute to Friend
Tim Harney
Herter Gallery, until Friday
By CHARLES FRANCIS CARROLL
Collegian Staff

Tim Harney has dedicated his solo show at Herter Gallery to a recently deceased friend, Kevin McNiff, who was on board the 007 plane which strayed over the Soviet Union and was shot down. McNiff and Harney were born a day apart; they lived a street away from each other, and were close from the age of four. According to Harney, they were not only good friends, but McNiff would send money from time to time, because of his confidence in Harney as an artist. Harney's current exhibit amply demonstrates that McNiff's faith in him was well-founded.

Breath-taking. Brilliant. Beautiful. Awesome. Intense. These are just a few of the words that typically litter reviews; I myself even used the word "wonderful" to describe Warhol. But, without exaggeration, the exhibit of Tim Harney's works is all of the usual superlatives, without using them.

What then can we say about Harney? He is a polished painter with a distinct style and accomplished, refined technique. Having lived in the valley on and off for more than ten years, and hailing from Beverly and Boston, Harney was recently featured as one of the "Emerging Massachusetts Painters" at the Museum of Fine Arts at Boston. After a five year hiatus from school, in order to paint, Harney is now completing a Masters of Fine Art at UMass.

However, Harney's work is anything but provincial. I think it would not be incorrect to place him in the New Humanist tradition by virtue of his focus on the human head and face. Harney's psychological portraits of his subjects draw from material he finds in his own subconscious. The mastery of his tools as a mature artist allow him to express his emotions so that they extend into his subjects, giving them greater depth and making them also appeal to the viewer at a deeper level. So the works are substantiated by the artist's own experience.

Harney's portrait are rendered with rich, expressive colors in his bright paintings and with bold blacks in many of the other darker paintings and drawings. The glittering impasto of paint is luxuriantly speckled with color. These bright acrylics and oils, such as "Grillo in Chicago," are balanced by a number of subdued works, most notably "The Fall." Several of these darker paintings are inspired by the loss of McNiff. Using some elements of collage, such as a newspaper obituary and postage stamps, these paintings differ from the others formally, and yet are even more literally and personally complex.

Elsewhere, Harney has warned against a narrative interpretation of his artwork, and this exhibit is no exception.

Harney's "Night Flights, Pilgrims and Last Suppers," is at display in Herter Gallery.

The surface of his painting is built up and worked down in the manner of Leon Gollub. He uses the pallette knife not only to apply paint but also to cut it away, even scratching the surface. The effect of this is not mutilation, but an intensity and character to the surface. The very process represents a struggle. According to Harney, there is a "struggle on the surface suiting my own temperment, allowing me to go on, to survive the painting, still making it more true. If I didn't have this struggle, I don't know what I would do." The artist not only must survive this struggle with the artwork but also must ever return to it and contend with it and himself.

The drawings which are more spontaneous than the paintings which often take up to a year to finish, serve as a release. Still, there is the same struggle, the same tension, one might even say pain. Harney actually cuts his hands and develops sore paper burns by rubbing the charcoal so directly and closely into the paper. Harney calls this "attacking" the art work.

The destiny of this destructive approach to the painting is ultimately creative, the created object a result of the free flow of passion modified by critical self-restraint. The original object as idea which has suffered the artist's "attack" is restored by the artist, not to the pristeen beauty of the original, but to a new synthesized aesthetic satisfying the artist's concept at least temporarily. The entire process represents a restitution, and, as such, a cartharsis with which the viewer can share, e.g., the mourning of a lost friend.

Harney's show ends today, not leaving too much time for us to view these truly moving and masterful pieces.

CINEMASCOOP
by Count Ramin Zahed

It is a truth universally acknowledged that a film directed by John Huston and starring Jack Nicholson and Kathleen Turner is bound to be something extraordinary. Therefore, when a photo of this summer film came in the mail the other day, I thought, "Hark, it is time indeed to take a second look at the late summer releases." (Jane Austen helped me out with the opening line.)

Huston's Prizzi's Honor is based on a book of the same title by Richard Condor and tells the story of a couple of professional killers who make the mistake of falling in love with each other. Also set for a late summer release is the remake of the French hit movie The Man With One Red Shoe. Tom Hanks plays the hapless musician who is suspected by the C.I.A. thanks to a classic case of mistaken identity. Lori Singer (Footloose, Falcon and Snowman) and veteran Saturday Nighter Jim Belushi play Hank's sidekicks.

Tom Hanks is also pairing up with John Candy in Volunteers, a comedy directed by Nicholas Meyer about two disenchanted college students who seek solace in the Peace Corps. Then there's Legend, Ridley Scott's (Alien, Blade Runner) movie of elves, fairies, pixies, and goblins with Tom Cruise sans shades as Jack o' the Green. Finally Spielberg is producing a project about the early days of Sherlock Holmes. Barry Levinson who gave us the brilliant The Natural last summer directs Young Sherlock.

Tom Hanks, Lori Singer and Jim Belushi star in The Man with One Red Shoe.

If you have missed Jane Fonda, she will be back with the screen adaptation of Agnes of God. She will be getting heavenly support from Ann Bancroft and Meg Tilly. Hopefully we will be seeing more of Fonda the actress than Fonda the video exercise instructress in the future. Looks like there will be lots of relief this summer from the average trash produced by Hollywood.

Speaking of trash, Ghoulies is opening in the area this Friday. The publicity ad shows a bald little monster who looks like an evil Humpty Dumpty (or me in a couple of years) climbing out of a toilet seat and the clever caption reads, "Ghoulies...they will get you in the end." If the humor of the ad is any indication of the film, I strongly urge you to avoid the mall this one weekend.

Of course there is also this new movie about a budding journalist who wishes to investigate what it is really like to be a boy in high school. So, she masquerades as a boy, with heavy shades of Tootsie and Victor, Victoria. One publicity photo shows Terry as a guy in the locker room with the rest of the boys. Just One of the Guys should be kept hidden in the vaults of film embarrassments of Columbia pictures.

Also opening today at the mall is Stick, a drama with Burt Reynolds as an ex-con who is released from prison. Candice Bergen and Charles Durining costar and Reynolds directs. I don't know; I simply do not trust Reynolds. His career has been one big ego trip ever since Deliverance. So, try Stick at your own risk.

Weekend Winner: Amherst Cinema brings Amadeus and Nijinski together. Although none of the films are really biographical in nature, they do make up for great entertainment. Nijinski especially has enough suds to keep a soap opera fan in ecstasy. Both films have superb photography. Dianne Keaton and Mel Gibson are busy with their amour fou in Mrs. Soffel, enjoying its second run in the area at the Academy of Music in Northampton. By the way, Cat's Eye left the Dead Mall yesterday. Too bad, I know a lot of people who anticipated the troll to actually deflower Drew Barrymore, not to mention take her breath away for life. I hear Drew is busy sleeping around to get a new role in another Stephen King movie.

Killer Question: Kevin Dwyer, Conor Plunkett, and Don Liper all correctly identified Mia Farrow's first husband as Frank Sinatra and Zelig's first name as Leonard. This week a handsome giant-size LadyHawke poster is the prize given to the first person who can tell me the name of the movie that Burt Reynolds stars in and doesn't have one single line of dialogue in it. In the words of guru Betors, no more need be said.

Jack Nicholson, Kathleen Turner, and Anjelica Huston will sizzle this summer in Prizzi's Honor.

Lyrical tunes

By DANIEL CALNAN
Collegian Staff

I didn't know a lot about this group, A Drop In The Gray. What I discovered, however, was that A Drop In The Gray is comprised of four very talented young musicians who's latest album was a pleasant surprise.

Certain Sculptures is a collection of eerie love songs, all of which were written by lead vocalist Dan Phillips. Though it is not my usual style, I did very much enjoy this album's desperate love ballads, such as "Be There" and "A Place For You." Phillip's unusually poetic lyrics touch accurately upon the heartaches of lost love, as from the tear jerker, "Turn Me Around," ("One day I will see your face/ Because I packed today your memories/ You might be in a cafe on a California street / or some other place...."). We have to pity the man if he's actually been dumped on as much as he writes about.

The rest of A.D.I.T.G. consists of guitarist Colin Campbell, drummer Marty Frederiksen, and Hans Christian Reumschuessel on bass. Campbell is truly an outstanding guitarist and he often adds a much needed jolt to the occasionally sleepy melodies.

Phillip's vocals at times sound like Roger Hodgson of Super Tramp, at others like U-2's Bono, but always sound convincing. The band meshes extremely well as a unit, and this album is proof.

MOVING VIOLATIONS
Directed by Neal Isreal
Starring John Murray and Jennifer Tilly
Hampshire Mall

By THOMAS HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

John Murray, James Keach, and Lisa Carrol sink in Moving Violations.

Recipe for a modern comedy: Take one familiar institution (here, a traffic school), add one villainous symbol of authority (James Keach), mix well with several stock characters (a hypochondriac, a near-sighted old lady, a gross-out artist, etc.), top with flippant, wise-guy hero (John Murray) and set for ninety minutes. Yields: a bore called Moving Violations.

Moving Violations is the latest in a genre that began over five years ago with Animal House, and finally seems to be running dry. Director/screenplay writer Neal Isreal, seeing all the good ideas used up, settles for an implausibe story in which a group of repeat traffic violators are forced to pass a special traffic course in one week, or have their cars impounded by the state.

John Murray makes his film debut as the rebellious leader of the "misfits" of the school, proving that every comedy like this must contain a Bill Murray impersonator. The producers were obviously hoping that, like his brother, John could turn bad material into magic, but all he can do is hopelessly ape Bill in every scene, right down to stealing his trademark peptalk.

James Keach is simply abominable as the pig-headed instructor of the course. Jennifer Tilly is stuck with a nothing role as the romantic interest. Sally Kellerman, the actress who originated the role of Hot Lips Houlahan in the movie M A S H , is also wasted a corrupt judge.

You'd think a film like this would at least provide a few funny car stunts, but that's clearly beyond its budget. There are only a few moderately funny crashes in the beginning, but nothing else. It even concludes with one of the most cost-effective chase scenes in movie history, having the entire cast jog aimlessly through a city.

Though performers such as Wendie Jo Sperber and Fred Willard manage to salvage some of their material, Moving Violations is ultimately a slow and unambitious film, destined to find its place on 3 a.m. on Channel 9.

on one player," Hixon said. The UMass defense, led by goalie Debbie DeJesus and defenders Kris Kolot will have to rise to the occasion against Temple's big guns.

Temple is led by Kathy Barrett who has scored 41 goals in 14 games. Owl freshman Gail Cummings, who has spent the past three years on the Canadian National women's lacrosse team, has tallied 36 scores. Sue Yeager has notched 34, Monica Mills 30 (with 15 assists) and Kim Lamdin 29.

"Our defense is going to have to be solid and play a clean game. We'll double team if necessary.

"Overall, I think the team that makes the fewest mistakes will win. I think we have some advantages: they don't know any of our individuals; and we'll be playing on grass- they play most of their games on astroturf. But we're going to have to capitalize on our opportunities."

With a team as powerful as Temple in town one might tend to overlook Rutgers. However, Sunday's game could prove to provide another valid challenge for UMass depending on Saturday's results and the fact that Rutgers, while only 2-8, has lost to some very strong teams. Rutgers has gone down in defeat to Temple, Lehigh, Penn State, and Maryland. Along with Temple, the other three teams are national powers.

On the factors involved in the second game Hixon said, "Sunday, we must overcome the outcome of the Temple game. Whether we win, lose, or tie we must be able to come out and play. The Temple game will be very demanding so we have done a lot of training to let us play two solid games."

Temple is led by attackers Kathy McMermey and Mary Beth Dwyer. Maria Grant is in the goal for the Scarlet Knights.

Hixon admits that Temple is the team that has occupied most of her attention the past week but that is consistent with her one-day-at-a-time approach to all her team's contests. Winning both games would improve UMass' chances for a seed in the NCAA's final four in post season playoff action, Hixon said.

The Gazelles already received notice that they have been chosen to play in the East Coast Athletic Conference tournament in May. Ten to fifteen teams applied to take part in the post-season tournament but only four were chosen. UNH was seeded number one, followed by UMass, James Madison, and Loyola.

There will be testing this summer and fall for lifeguard positions. Testing will be Thursday, May 2 at 6 p.m. and Saturday, May 4, 9 a.m. at Boyden Pool. Previous qualifications include CPR, First Aid, First Responder, and ALF. No work study is needed. Pay is $3.65 an hour. Call 545-0893 for more information.

dle them."

The UMass midfielders will have to pass the ball against that press. In Wednesday's 13-8 win at Harvard, Garber juggled his midfield lines to get attackman Ken Freeman one-on-one against a midfielder, with success.

Freeman scored three goals in the first quarter, beating the Crimson midfielders with ease. Garber doesn't plan to abandon that strategy.

"I think we'll stick with what worked," the coach explained, "We'll try a few things, but basically if we can handle their ride, we'll be in good shape."

GORILLA GRUMBLINGS: Sophomore attackman Tom Carmean's 34 points lead the club. Senior Tom Lukacovic's 15 goals is tops. Sophomore Matt O'Reilly has 18 points.

BE TRUE TO YOUR SCHOOL DEPARTMENT: Freeman's new sports car has "UM Lax" license plates. In a gym class game yesterday, defenseman Tom Aldrich's team ruled attackman's Mike Fiorini's squad 10-1 with a succession of crisp moves to the cage.

UM will have to look sharp:

Number one Temple faces women's lax

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Staff

The action will be coming hard and fast this weekend for and from the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team, 6-1, as they host the number-one ranked Temple University Owls on Saturday and unranked Rutgers University, a deceptive 2-8, on Sunday. Both games take place on NOPE field at 1:00 p.m.

"Temple is the big game for us, it really means a lot and I think, mentally, we are more prepped than we were for New Hampshire," UMass attacker Liz Schueler said in reference to the Gazelles' last contest, a 10-9 loss in sudden death.

"We have the home field advantage and we've had the whole week to work after the UNH game. We're ready to play them and we are not a push over for them by any means. We're going to come out smoking," Schueler added.

Temple, 14-0 and the defending national champions, rides a 26-game winning streak into Amherst dating back to last season. But UMass coach Pam Hixon refuses to be intimidated. While UMass lost at Temple last year 13-5, the last time the Owls visited they left with a 4-4 tie.

"I think it's going to be a great game, first of all," Hixon said. "They're a premier team but we're coming out to play. Temple is undefeated but the longer you go undefeated the harder it is to remain undefeated. We know. And I think they get a little nervous when they come here."

Leading the UMass attack that has outscored opponents 80-28 is senior all-america midfielder Pam Morsi who tops all scorers with 27 goals. But the Gazelles rely on a number of players to put points on the board. Bunny Forbes is a key contributor around the net for UMass scoring 12 goals and dishing out 12 assists. Freshman Ginny Armstrong has netted 12 goals, Becky Bekampis 11, and Schueler 10.

An evenly-distributed UMass offense will be key to the team's success against an Owl defense that has yielded 5.2 goals a game this year, according to Hixon. With Temple using a sagging man-to-man defense UMass forwards will have to be alert, moving to their double-teamed teammates for the UMass offense to be successful, Hixon said.

"We have to get a consistent game from everybody. But the attackers have to be in it so the Temple defense can't key

Playoff berth on line for Minutemen

Baseball needs two vs. Rutgers to advance

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

It's as simple or as complicated as you want it to be.

The University of Massachusetts baseball team is 6-3 in the Eastern Division of the Atlantic 10 conference. Temple University is also 6-3, Rhode Island and Rutgers are both 5-4.

UMass hosts Rutgers for three games this weekend while Temple plays three with URI. The top two teams in the league make the conference playoffs against the Western Division. The winner of that tourney makes the NCAA regionals.

The Minutemen have nine other games left on their schedule, but the season comes down to the weekend series.

"My solution's an easy one, win two and go to the playoffs," UM manager Dick Bergquist said. "I don't want to worry about the other two teams, I just want to win some games here and let what happens happen."

UMass split a doubleheader with New Hampshire yesterday to run its record to 17-13 on the season. UMass was shutout for the first time this season in the opener, 2-0, but rebounded to win 4-1 in the nightcap.

"I was disappointed in the results, we didn't hit the ball well although our pitching was tough. I hope we hit the ball better against Rutgers."

Jon Martin picked up this second win of the season in the second game, working three scoreless innings. Matt Sheran, Todd Ezold and Todd Comeau drove in runs for UMass.

Last night, UMass faced rival Springfield College in a night game at Holyoke.

On Saturday, UMass will start staff ace Jim Knopf in the first game. Knopf, 3-2 with a 1.98 earned-run-average, leads the team in strikeouts, batters faced, innings pitched and complete games. Junior righthander Bob Kostro (2-0) will start the second game. Sophomore lefthander Steve Allard (2-1) will work Sunday.

UMass will be without junior firstbaseman Jeff Cimini, who was hitting .395 with four homers and 16 runs batted in. He had arthroscopic surgery done to his knee Monday and is lost for the season.

Designated hitter Comeau (.364, 4, 31) needs two hits to tie the career UMass record of 157. Outfielder Jay Zerner is hitting at a .400 clip with second-baseman Jack Bloise, slowed with a nagging leg injury, is at .364.

Gorillas attack the Army

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team finishes up a rugged five-game road trip with sixth-ranked Army at West Point tomorrow at 2 p.m.

UMass, 4-5, can regain a lot of national respect with a victory over the 8-3 Cadets. The Gorillas beat Army 7-6 last season and were 14-11 victors in a pre-season scrimmage.

The key to defeating Army revolves around beating its press ride. The Cadets send out nine long-stick equipped players when an opponent tries to clear the ball from its own end, and like basketball they try to deny the pass.

"It's tough to get the ball past a midfield of long-stick guys," UMass coach Dick Garber said. "You need patience and the players have to spot the open man. They're just looking for you to panic and make a poor pass."

UMass' weapon against the ride is in the person of assistant coach Eric Kemp. The Gorillas' defensive coach previously worked at Washington and Lee as an assistant to present Army coach Jack Emmer.

Emmer's Washington and Lee team used the same press that the Cadets employ. Kemp developed that defense.

"Having Eric here helped us win last season," Garber said. "I think we can han-

Softball hosts weekend tourney

The softball team will have a busy weekend as they tune up for Tuesday's crucial game with Rhode Island for a berth in the Atlantic 10 championships.

The first UMass Invitational fell through because the St. John's athletic department decided that they couldn't afford the softball team's trip to Amherst.

So, Vermont, New Hampshire and UMass will compete in a series of games today and tomorrow at the NOPE field.

This afternoon at 2:30 p.m., UMass meets New Hampshire in a doubleheader. Tomorrow at 10 a.m., Vermont takes on New Hampshire and at noon UMass and Vermont square off in another doubleheader.

Walk into the biological sciences library in Morrill Science Center and you will see bookshelves filled to capacity and an archaic check-out system. You will feel the stagnant air and heat of a poorly ventilated building.

The library is not impressive and, these days, few staff members, faculty or administrators familiar with the place will disagree. In fact, conditions are so bad that a committee was formed to investigate the library's problems and propose solutions to make it more useful to the community.

The 12-members of the "ad hoc committee on the future of the Morrill Science Library" came up with some startling conclusions concerning the present state of the facilities and some solutions to the problems. Overall, the committee decided the library's facilities have "reached a crisis," and "expansion and renovation are urgently needed."

The library, home to more than 80,000 biological science volumes, only occupies 24 percent of less than 8,000 square feet of the space called for in a 1968 plan. A new wing proposed in that plan was never built and now "the working conditions . . . are decidedly inferior to those in the Physical Sciences Library of the Worcester Medical Library," the committee report stated.

The report also points out that ventilation is inadequate and there is no air conditioning — two important factors in creating a workable atmosphere.

There is an in-the-front-door out-the-back-door policy meaning that once new references come in, the older material is sent elsewhere on campus. The committee believes this is no way to run a library.

Fredrick Byron, dean of Natural Sciences and Mathematics, disagrees with the committee's conclusion that the library is in a crisis state.

"It's not a very good library to work in, that's for sure," he said in his office last week. "But I wouldn't say there's a crisis. There are many places around this campus not in very good shape."

Eric Martz, professor of microbiology and chairman of the committee, backed his committee's conclusion. "It depends on your frame of reference," he said. "What is a crisis? We have problems with maintenance, furniture, air conditioning, janitorial, some collections had to be moved out to make space. That's unacceptable and I'd call that a crisis."

Laurence M. Feldman, the library's acting director, said library conditions have improved over the last month since Physical Plant workers have swept some of the grime. "It's a pleasure to work in now," Feldman said. "Now, it's a comfortable place."

But Martz, when told of the cleaning said: "If they made a one-time cleanup because of one complaint, that's typical. I have trouble even getting the carpet in my office cleaned regularly. I'm not going to be impressed if the Physical Plant comes up and cleans."

Among the committee's solutions, published April 1 in a second report, are suggestions to create a task force to find new space for the library and work to improve the existing space.

In addition, the committee wants to set up a "Library Fund Task Force" to "identify promising sources of some millions of dollars for construction of a new Biological Sciences Library or major renovation and expansion of Morrill Library," something Byron said is impressive, but difficult to do.

As of now, Byron, Provost Richard O'Brien and Director of Libraries Richard Talbot are scheduled to meet before the semester's end to begin to make decisions about the situation. Regardless of how soon the meeting takes place, Byron admits it will be some time before anyone sees a major change.

Rain dampens East side concerts

WASHOUT — Only one of five acts, The Fools, performed at the rain-shortened East side Concert yesterday. The first of the spring concerts was cancelled after two and a half hours but it didn't dim the spirits of (below, left to right) Margery Naylor, Tammy Kelly, Michael Jayes and John Champy. The second group Del Fuegos tried to entertain the group of 1,000 with jokes and sing-along songs. The stage was dismantled at about 2:30 p.m. There were no arrests made, police said.

SGA committees give SSAM cold shoulder

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

Two committees in the Student Government Association have voted to cut next years funding for the University of Massachusetts chapter of the State Student Association of Massachusetts (SSAM).

On March 11, and 12, students voted by a 6-1 margin to support a referendum calling for a $1 increase in the Student Activity Fee per semester that would go to funding SSAM. Although students supported the referendum, the University's Board of Trustees has to approve the fee increase by June. Fifteen percent of the UMass students voted in the referenedum.

The present SSAM budget of about $2,100, was cut by the SGA's budget committee on March 14, and an appeal by SSAM for funding was voted down by the SGA coordinating committee on April 10.

If the $1 fee increase passes by the board, it will mean that the parent organization of SSAM in Boston will receive about $36,000 per year. Of this amount, 10 percent may come back to the local UMass chapter, but nothing has been approved yet.

Local SSAM officials said the senate is premature in thinking the referendum will pass, and this has led to the reasoning behind no funding.

Martha Porter, treasurer of the local SSAM chapter, said the association offered the senate's coordinating committee a com-

Mass. seat belt law not dead; supporters still pushing hard

BOSTON (AP) — A controversy over forcing Massachusetts motorists to buckle up may be on the back burner for the moment, but supporters of a mandatory seat belt law in the Bay State are pushing hard for the measure.

In February, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis unveiled a mandatory seat belt proposal that would have fined violators $24 — and which attracted criticism from state Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti.

"How are you going to enforce such a law? Is the patrolman going to climb into the car with you?" Bellotti said in a March interview.

Last week, the Legislature's Public Safety Committee sent a redraft of the governor's bill to the House. Proponents say this version is less intrusive and sets a lower fine of $15.

The committee's Senate chairman, Sen. William R. Keating, D-Sharon, said the bill now sits in the House Ways and Means Committee behind the budget and other bills, such as the truth-in-sentencing package.

"Unlike the New York law, police officers won't be stopping to check specifically for seat belts," he said. "That kind of intrusion can be abusive, I think."

Meantime, a private public-interest group, the Massachusetts Seatbelt Coalition, today released results of a survey it says shows overwhelming support from Massachusetts residents for seat belt use.

Of 500 people interviewed by an independent firm, 81 percent said they believed seat belts saved lives, while 6 percent said they didn't believe it and 12 percent didn't know, according to the coalition.

Ed King wants to join GOP, Globe reports

BOSTON (AP) — Former Gov. Edward J. King has indicated he wants to run for governor next year as a Republican if state GOP leaders can offer him a clear field in the party's primary, The Boston Sunday Globe reported.

In a copyright story, the newspaper said Republican leaders, among them the state party chairman, Rep. Andrew Natsios, R-Holliston, told King at a breakfast meeting in Newton last Tuesday they could not assure he would be unopposed in the September primary.

The meeting was arranged at King's request through his former campaign manager, Paul May.

King publicly supported Ronald Reagan in last November's election.

Walpole businessman Ray Shamie, who has made two unsuccessful U.S. Senate bids, says King is his favorite of several possible candidates mentioned at the meeting, the newspaper said. They include businessman John Lakian; former U.S. Rep. Paul L. Cronin of Andover; former state Rep. Andrew Card of Holbrook, who works for the Reagan administration; and U.S. Attorney William F. Weld.

Shamie described the meeting to the Globe as "an exploratory one."

Berra gets ax

CHICAGO (AP) — Yogi Berra was fired as manager of the New York Yankees yesterday and was replaced by Billy Martin, who will take over the team for thefourth time in his managing career.

"The action was taken by the Yankees and we felt it was in the best intersta of the club," Yankees principal owner George Steinbrenner said in a statement. The dismissal was announced after the Yankees lost 4-3 to the Chicago White Sox , the club's third straight loss and 10th in 16 games this season.

Boston Pops Orchestra celebrates 100th anniversary tomorrow night

BOSTON (AP) - Grover Cleveland was president of the 38 United States when Adolph Neuendorff, with a stroke of his baton, called forth the opening notes of the Boston Pops.

It was July 11, 1885, and the program performed that Saturday night by members of the 4-year -old Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first of the "Music Hall Promenade Concerts." and by 1900 that officially had become the "Pops."

The 100th birthday season for the now-famed and cherished Boston Pops opens tomorrow night at Symphony Hall with a concert conducted by John Williams, the 19th Pops conductor.

He carries on a tradition that got into full swing under the direction of a violinist with a love of fire engines - Arthur Feidler, who conducted the Pops for half of its life.

Fiedler's signature piece was "Stars and Stripes Forever," and a rendition of it will close tomorrow's concert.

The Promenade Concerts were established by Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, who had founded the Boston Symphony.

He and the BSO's second conductor, Wilhelm Gericke, thought the concerts would provide jobs for the Symphony's musicians in the summer and also train new listeners.

From the beginning, the idea was to perform lighter music, or as the program for the first concert stated, "The Programme for these Concerts will be made up largely of light music of the best class..."

Included that first night were a waltz by Strauss, a piece by Wagner and the overture to "William Tell" by Rossini.Neuendorff, a native of Germany, was a prominent conductor of opera.

Barn fire disrupts afternoon traffic

By LAURA KOESTER
Collegian Staff

A storage barn on North Pleasant Street, near Puffton Village, caught fire yesterday afternoon closing off traffic for about one hour and causing an undetermined amount of damage.

There were no injuries and the fire started in the barn basement, Amherst Fire Chief Victor Zumbruski said.

The cause of the fire is still under investigation, Amherst Police Sgt. Richard Buckley said.

"No one person is under suspicion now, but we'll follow up all possible leads," Buckley said.

Twenty-three firefighters fought the blaze in the barn, located at 1136 North Pleasant St. The fire, which started around 4:30 p.m., took about 50 minutes to extinguish.

An unregistered 1976 Dodge was destroyed by fire and smoke damage, George Bowles, Amherst deputy fire chief said.

"In a fire of this nature, with a lot of open space and air, the fire keeps rolling. It's hard to control," Buckley said.

The one-and-a-half story barn was used primarily for storage space. It is owned by Chester Watroba of Montague, who also own Watroba's Market in North Amherst.

Antique furniture, tires, a tractor, old refrigerator, other appliances, bicycles and other furniture was stored in the barn.

"The basement is always locked, although the main level isn't. It's only my father's stuff in there and no one else has access to it," Hope Watroba said.

Residents of a nearby house said that there have been problems with vandalism and illegal entry into the barn in the past.

Chancellor Duffey addresses three-day politics symposium

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

In the sixties everything was normal, yet everything was different, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said in the keynote address of a symposium on "The 1960s and the Future of American Politics," this weekend.

The three-day symposium, sponsored by the political science faculty at the University of Massachusetts, began last Thursday and ended Saturday. In a series of speeches and panel discussions, the political impact of the Warren Court, Lyndon Johnson's Great Society, Vietnam, the Civil Rights Movement, high-tech and the future, and the role of television on politics were examined.

Duffey, in his address on Friday morning said that while in the sixties, everything was normal and different, "Day by day we lived our lives of normalcy as if nothing extraordinary was happening. Yet, we lived our lives at the edge of history."

Jerome Mileur, UMass professor of political science, said a few themes came out of the symposium. One, Mileur said, was "clearly the old democratic majority that came out of (Roosevelt's) New Deal had disappeared." Mileur added that nobody at the symposium was prepared to say if the Republican conservatives were better or worse candidates.

The other theme, Mileur said, was the notion of the "national state." This state, he said, has been under some change in recent years, but the consensus of the symposium was that "Reagan may be re-directing it but he is not repealing it."

Mileur said the original idea for the symposium was sparked when a student asked if the sixties ever really did happen. The event was organized and funded out of the faculty union contract, which is used to assist faculty members in teaching.

During the opening address, Duffey said Americans began to ask larger questions searching for the meaning of human dignity.

"The answer was not one but many," Duffey said. "America exploded in search of new definitions of human dignity. There was a breaking of boundaries."

After the opening remarks by Duffey, Robert Kuttner, contributing editor of The New Republic and op-ed writer for the Boston Globe spoke on "The Political Legacy of the Great Society."

Mileur said he learned something from Kuttner's speech. "I was not aware how much the spirit of the Great Society was carried through the Nixon Administration," he said.

Co-ed living option in Greenough started new trend on campus in '69

by BETH PASTINO
Collegian Correspondent

The scene may be familiar — female and male students in dormitory rooms, eating pizza or talking. By today's standards, it is hard to imagine a time when these dorms were segregated by gender and when visiting hours were strictly enforced.

In 1969, however Central's Greenough became the first dorm at the University of Massachusetts to go co-ed and initiate the change to co-ed dormitory options.

Larry Moneta, assistant director of housing services for residential east, and a student here when Greenough went co-ed said the idea "snowballed" and was soon followed by Butterfield in 1970 as well as Orchard Hill. Yet even with the liberal attitudes of the time, Moneta said dorms were permitted to become co-ed only on a floor-by-floor basis, not room-by-room.

"When co-ed living was introduced, a definite change in the nature of relationships came about," he said, adding that the change went from "real juvenile relationships" when panty raids were a common occurence, to "brother-sister relationships."

According to Moneta, the initial reaction of some men was "fairly sexist," but the end result was no different.

"It was still just as difficult to get a date," he said, adding that the rule of thumb that discourages people from dating someone on their floor has "seemed to last and even been strengthened" over the years.

Joan Stoia, director for the Office of Cooperative Education, was a student living in Field dormitory in 1970. She said the reactions of women to the change were "very positive" and that women were excited about the changes and wanted to make it work.

Stoia said the same kinds of privacy issues existed in a single sex dorm as in co-ed dorms.

"Adjustments had to made in interpersonal relationships, not just between the sexes," she said. "A lot of stereotypes that people expected just didn't play out."

Luther Allen has been faculty resident of Webster for twenty years and was there when Orchard Hill went co-ed. Allen said social relationships "definitely improved and became more civilized." As a result of co-ed living, he said , rooms became "more social places and , consequently, started looking a lot nicer."

Allen said the leaders of the change were students who had "radical ideas" and noted the desire to co-ed living options went "hand in hand" with the activism of the late 60s and early 70s.

"It was all part of a movement to liberate life style," he said

Illegal weapons battle won

But, the war continues

by SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts student says his "war has been won" against the flow of illegal martial arts weapons into the United States, which he says have become increasingly attractive to young children and teenagers.

Larry Kelley, a physical education major and director of the Karate Health Fitness Center in Amherst, has received recognition from Senator Edward Kennedy after extensive letter writing to congressmen, public officials and media on the issue.

Kennedy said last week in Boston that he would ask Congress "to shut off the sudden surge of interstate shipments of mail-order martial arts paraphernalia such as killing stars, kung-fu sticks and crossbows and a variety of other deadly weapons."

"As far as I'm concerned, I call these deadly weapons. They should be treated in the same respect as a gun" Kelly said. Sales of such weapons he said, should be allowed only to those over the age of 18 who have no history of mental illness and no felony convictions.

Through his efforts, Kelley also managed to grab the attention Chicago mayor Harold Washington, who, after receipt of Kelley's letter, issued a warning to the Asian World of Martial Arts, a main distributor of the weapons for not possessing a deadly weapons license. According to Chicago Deputy Commissioner Jesse Blackmon, the company,$10 million business, will shut down rather than be issued a license.

Kelleys' next step is to begin a letter writing campaign to push Congressmen Ed Markey or Silvio Conte to introduce federal legislation that would make mail orders for these materials illegal.

"I think it would be really great if some Massachusetts students wrote their congressmen and told them they were really concerned about these weapons and urge them to introduce the legislation", he said.

Kelley said, "Most people that use these for self-defense end up getting them used against them. They are useless for that purpose."

UMass Department of Public Safety Director Gerald O'Neil said, "any kind of a weapon that can be used to maim or kill dosen't belong in a mail order system."

"It's important to disallow the public, especially teenagers to have access to this sort of thing; legislation on the issue would be most important," O'Neill said.

promise in order to obtain funding for next year.

"If the referendum passed and 10 percent came back to campus, we would return the budget money back to them," Porter said.

John Crowley, a member of the senate coordinating committee, said because of financial problems, certain groups have to be cut to save other organizations.

"We have these groups that fight for student aid and help. The question is do we cut them all to an ineffective level or just cut one that has the potential to collect future money," Crowley said.

Local SSAM chairman Barry Wray said SSAM ran a student referendum two years ago and it passed by an eight to one margin. However, he added the trustees never enacted that fee.

"I feel that because of their assumption that the fee will pass, they won't take the loss of SSAM seriously," Wray said. "This is where SSAM started and it should stay here and progress."

Michael Cerrato, assistant chair of the senate budget committee, said he sees two problems with the local chapter of SSAM.

"We see immense duplication problems," Cerrato said, explaining that the work of Students Advocating Financial Aid, Academic Affairs and the senate's public policy committee can do the work of SSAM.

The other problem, Cerrato said, is that he sees the local SSAM chapter as ineffective. "I don't have any evidence of SSAM working on this campus. They (students) have no idea of what SSAM is," Cerrato said.

Wray disagreed with Cerrato's assumption that the students have never heard of SSAM, citing the six to one approval of the referendum, which Wray said is "a mandate from the students."

Wray also said there have been three recent examples of SSAM participation in important legislative meetings where members of public policy have not been present.

"A lot of the things we do coincide with other schools, which has been the key to successful passage of student issues," he said.

Beth Harrington, chair of public policy, said that what SSAM does is a duplication of what her committee does.

"I believe that public policy has done more than enough," Harrington said. "I've been working very close with the parent organization and I think we should work with SSAM." However, she added this work will be done only with the parent organization and not with the local chapter.

Noted American journalist to speak

Veteran journalist William Worthy, known for his scraps with the U.S. government over travel to China and Cuba and other 'restricted areas' will appear tomorrow at 4 p.m. in the Campus Center. Watch the Collegian for the room number.

The visit is being sponsored by the journalism department, Afro-Am and the Collegian.

Worthy has won court cases against the State Department affirming journalist's rights to travel to China,Cuba and (then) North Vietnam.

More recently upon returning from Iran, he was stripped of all his reporting notes and documents he had gathered concerning the U.S. Embassy in Teheran.

Some of the documents eventually found their way to American newspapers.

"He is an unsung hero of the American press," journalism professor Lawrence Pinkham said of Worthy. "He's consistently gone against the status quo, taken on the State Department's effort to restrict journalists and won."

Of undergraduate senate and racism

I feel that it is my duty to write this letter concerning the issue of a collective subtle effort to undermine the authority of John Ruddock III as speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate. I have witnessed senate meetings throughout this semester while Chris Sullivan was speaker of the senate and during John Ruddock's current term as speaker.

I see the present speaker of the senate as having the same abilities as Sullivan, but the problem people are not concerning themselves with John Ruddock's qualification, his effectiveness, performance, and various in depth degree of being well informed. What they seem to be concerning themselves with is that in our recent senate meetings people appear to be looking up towards him and realizing that his skin color is different from that of the majority and they are determined to be as disruptive, undermining and consciously are trying to destroy our contructive efforts to carry out the senate meeting in a more expedient manner if not for the friction producing efforts of some of our fellow senators.

These senators were duly elected by their constituency to represent them and I am quite sure that if this so called liberal campus could see their elected senators in such a unproductive, prejudicially and acting in a manner that borders on polite racism the constituencies would be appalled.

There has been especially one senator that has been outstandingly disruptive towards our meetings and this senator is not without a loyal following. I am in full support of being allowed to run a smooth, effective senate meeting that deals with the issues that we have been elected by our constituencies to perform.

But I felt that I could not go on any longer without pointing out that there is a political conspiracy formed by polite racist within our student senate. People are clearly not giving respect towards our speaker during meetings and I felt the need to expose this conspiracy before it gets too far out of hand.

Not all the BOG banned Coors

Recently the Campus Center-Student Union complex Board of Governors voted to discontinue the sale of Coors beer in the Campus Center, effectively banning it. As a board member, I was disturbed by the implications of the move and opposed it even though the action was well within the responsibility and authority of the BOG. At the appeal of the move, where both sides were represented, I was still unconvinced of Coors' guilt.

Upon losing their appeal before the board, the Coors people invited three board members; one pro, one con, and one neutral, to the Colorado plant to see plant conditions for themselves, at Coors' expense, with complete freedom to talk to anyone we wished so we could make a truly informed decision based on first hand information. (The supposed reasons for the discontinuance of sale were various alleged practices followed at the plant.) A motion brought before the board to allow these three members to go was ruled "out of order" at the board meeting. There was, however, set-up work done on an "open forum" which will have presentations by both sides in order to educate students on this matter.

In the Undergraduate Student Senate, a bill to put the "Coors Question" on a campus-wide referendum was suppressed by a walkout, on a quorum call, by various special interest groups and supposedly progressive groups, even though such a referendum would take place after the educational forum.

I am deeply disturbed by the implications of first being willing to "educate" people by presenting two groups that have a stake in this question, and leaving it up to the presenter's charm as to which biased side is telling the truth; but not allowing students to go see what is going on first hand, and second not allowing students to decide for themselves what they want after they have been educated on the issue. Just because we take our power from the students, do we take it away from them?

I urge anyone concerned to talk to their Student Senator and/or BOG representative (every student has at least eleven of us they can call their own, myself and ten others) to ask questions or voice an opinion.

Dow has done it again

In reference to Peter Dow's article, "Give Them What They Need," in Tuesday's Collegian I am perplexed that the campus paper would label such a total idiot as a Collegian columnist. It is evident in this article, as in most of his writing, that Peter Dow is rarely in control of any real facts. It appears that he is using his column space as an outlet of disinformation.

To be specific: Dow criticizes the manner in which the Peace movement uses its energy and finds it "disturbing that not nearly the same amount of energy was devoted to investigating the purposes of such American policies" (in reference to Central American policy). Although I did not go to the protest in D.C., it is very apparent that the people who are commited to peace are not commited because of ignorance. Dow should be personally aware of just how versed the "American Left" is; especially after the embarrassing defeat the Republican Club suffered during the debate on Nicaragua, early this semester

Dow again confuses the facts when he states: "It is infuriating to note that so many of the people who loudly supported and admired the freedom fighters in Nicaragua who armed themselves against Somoza should be so condescending against those who seek to do the same thing against the Sandinistas." Clearly the situation is not the same. The Sandinistas are not guilty of the systematic abuses that the Somoza regime did commit. Also it is no longer a case of freedom fighters throwing off the oppressor but of the ex-National Guard (Somoza's death squad) attempting to regain control.

Anyone who knows what is going on, and attempts to read his article, will soon be overwhelmed by Dow's use of words that lack any intelligent connection. Dow's column of "vague Republican slogans and misinformation" strikes again.

Foreign policy: sponsored terror

The Reagan administration's current policies towards Nicaragua and South Africa offer an interesting contrast in approaches to foreign policy. In Nicaragua the administration has opted for a "return to democracy and freedom," at the point of a bayonet. It is argued that support for the Contras, or if one prefers, "Freedom Fighters", is necessary to bring back democracy to Nicaragua. Was that what Somoza was, a democrat? However noble the motivations behind this policy, it fails to come to terms with America's historic role in Nicaragua. The U.S. has never been in the business of restoring democracy in Nicaragua; rather we send the Marines in to stuff the genie of nationalist sentiments back into the bottle. This time, instead of the Marines, we are using the CIA and a handful of Nicaraguan mercenaries. When the U.S. is not in the field of supporting such rebel groups, the administration likes to term such activities "state sponsored terrorism." Regardless of whatever doublespeak term Reagan prefers to use when discussing the Contras, this is the phrase that clearly and concisely describes U.S. policy towards Nicaragua.

In striking contrast is the administration's policy towards South Africa. In a country where over three quarters of the population is virtually enslaved, and where policemen routinely fire into crowds, the U.S. policy is to bring about change through quiet diplomacy. A question that needs to be asked is how successful has constructive engagement been? Although the Reagan administration likes to discuss policy towards South Africa as if it is still in its formative stages, constructive engagement has been official U.S. policy for over four years. The record of accomplishments is far from impressive. In fact, the paucity of results can only be matched by the moral bankruptcy of the official position towards the country. To further add to the insult, the justifications for not adopting a confrontational stance towards Pretoria are largely devoid of validity.

The reason most often put forward for not taking a more aggressive position against apartheid is that the U.S. is dependent on South Africa for a number of vital strategic raw materials. The two most prominent are chromium and platinum. The U.S. imports 68 per cent of its chromium from South Africa, and 73 per cent of its platinum. However, what is seldom mentioned is that the U.S. has proven reserves of both these minerals. They are not presently mined because it is cheaper to purchase them from South Africa. Cost efficiency is a pretty poor excuse for the support of a regime as reprehensible as South Africa's, especially from an administration that felt no compunction when purchasing $100 screwdrivers. South Africa, along with Ireland, accounts for all of our industrial diamonds. As of 1980, the U.S. strategic stockpile included 20 million carats of industrial diamonds, certainly enough to tide us over for quite a while in the event of a South African embargo. So what is the purpose of pursuing a policy of constructive engagement?

To be fair to President Reagan, who certainly would not support policies that are morally indefensible (religious man that he is), we must assume that he simply made a mistake. There are so many things for a president to keep track of, (and we all know that he sometimes gets confused), that he mixed up policies towards Nicaragua and South Africa. What the President really meant to do was to pursue a policy of constructive engagement towards the Sandinistas, and support armed insurgents against the malignant regime in Pretoria. It just makes so much more sense; send the insurgents where they would have popular support, and therefore a chance of achieving their objectives, and pursue quiet diplomacy and negotiations with Nicaragua to resolve our outstanding differences (whatever they may be). As long as the U.S. feels compelled to pursue these sorts of policies, why not direct them where they might do some good?

ARTS

Sculpting the fourth dimension

by CHRISTINE MARINI
Collegian Staff

A "vital need" for artists to work in the realm of technology has led sculptor Michael Phillips away from conventional plastic art into the more experimental realm of sculpture in light and sound.

Phillips, 22, a native of Earlswood, near Stratford England, is on exchange as a non-degree graduate student in sculpture at UMass. Structural Amnesia, "a sound installation etc.", will open Thursday night at 6 pm in the Wheeler Art Gallery.

Phillips received his BA in Fine Arts from the Exeter College of Art and Design last year. At Exeter he studied in the 4d (fourth dimension) department, an area founded in the 60s from an overflow of sculpture department students who were less object orientated and preferred to work in light and sound. Phillips moved from object sculpture into 4d, where, he said, "The structure was very experimental. The stress was on developing modes of personal expression through various media- video, film, and sound technology.

After experimenting with unscored spontaneous music, and in sound incorporated into sculpture, Phillips became interested in performance art and process-oriented works. He also began documenting and recording (in film, video, and sound recordings) spontaneous and ephemeral art.

"The documents became important in exhibiting. The records gave new interpretation and feedback. It evolved into a cyclical process." Phillip said. "Eventually, some pieces were designed for documentation. At his degree show, held at Exeter last spring, Phillips devised a large sound installation using a computerized switching system.

"It was very audience-orientated," he explained. "There were three separate systems. One was physically operated by the audience walking on pressure mats embedded in the floor which activated sounds in the ceiling. These were picked up and recorded on a 60-foot long tape loop which ran through several reel-to-reel machines. The sounds were played over and over by the reels for a period of time, then fed back into the system, creating a continually reverberating echo. There were also radio receivers embedded in the ceiling which picked up random signals and played them at various rotating points within the ceiling. In addition, the radio receivers accidentally picked up outside hospital, police, and taxi radio signals, which were incorporated into the experience. The computer randomly selected various permutations of the signals, and was also programmed to accept audience requests for different sequences."

"The show was very bare physically," Phillips said. "It was just the structure, the bare wires, with no decoration. It was like being inside a machine. The exhibition was humanistic- intended to make people less threatened by technology. It was user-friendly," he added, "and produced friendly users."

Phillips has worked on a variety of projects at UMass. He is a teaching assistant for Alvaro Ramirez, an exchange professor from Colombia who teaches a video production seminar in narrative and documentary art. The class, thanks to an Arts Council grant, is producing a video which is nearly completed.

Phillips said that he has found it difficult to execute many of his ideas here because of inter-departmental cooperation concerning video equipment is practically non-existant. Each department has a different system format, and many of them are 10 years outdated. The small state college of 250 which I attended in England was better equipped."

"It seems to me," Phillips said, "that if art at UMass is ever to leave the 19th century and enter the 20th it must accept modern communication systems and make some attempt to update its own."

Phillips is enthusiastic about his show at Wheeler which runs until May 13. "The term "structural amnesia', I think, is a term for how historians construct facts to create a subjective history," he said. "I always thought that America was the future, even though, strictly speaking, it's five hours behind England. It was only when I got here that I realized that most of Europe had grown from its own past, but America has been constructed form bits of other peoples' pasts. And that I found fascinating, especially since my interpretation of American art, especially American technological art, was totally incorrect and could only be appreciated by understanding the culture and ideology from which it came," Phillips said.

Bio-sonics by Michael Phillips

The show in Wheeler will be small and very simple, "using simplicity to maximum effect," he said.

"The format is an attempt to get away from a Constructivist approach to technology, and instead deal with a lot of images and personal associations," he said. Phillips is building a temporary lighting and sound grid into the roof of the gallery. The grid contains two switching devices which divide the show into nighttime and daytime. The sound-track is made up of edited pieces of scientific information and television commercials which switch around the room at various times. Several objects," with personal and cultural associations," Phillips said, are placed on the floor.

"The idea, "Phillips said, "is to come up with a subjective narrative with no plot or storyline. It's open to free interpretation."

Tasteless trash

By DANIEL CALNAN

What do you get when you combine Spring Break, Revenge Of The Nerds, and Porky's Goes Hawaiian? Why, Fraternity Vacation, of course. Yes ladies and gentlemen, yet another one of those "crazy college kid" movies. Out of all of these, however, Fraternity Vacation stands the least chance of winning an Academy Award.

The boys of Theta Pi Sigma are on vacation in Palm Springs. They have a bet with their rival fraternity on who will sleep with Ashley, the most beautiful woman at the resort. That in a nut shell, is the plot of this movie.

Stephen Geoffery plays Wendall, the nerd of Theta Pi. Looking like a cross between Radar O'Rielly and Sting, Geoffery gives an awful performance as Wendall. In contrast to the "Geek in Sixteen Candles and American Graffiti's "Toad", Geoffery's performance gives nerdness a bad name. You're supposed to root for the guy, not hate him.

The rest of the cast is made up mostly of unknowns, except for a cameo performance by Britt Ecklund, and Charles Rocket as the crazy D.J. (rememer him? He got fired from Saturday Night Live for saying the "F-word" over the air.)

The only good thing about this movie is the breath taking splendor of Palm Springs. I would've rather watched a slide show of this desert oasis than sit throught the movie. Palm Springs deserved better than this.

EVEN BEFORE FINALS, YOU COULD FINALLY GET THE AMERICAN EXPRESS CARD.

If you've been wanting the American Express® Card for some time, this is some time to apply.

Because if you're a senior, all you need is to accept a $10,000 career-oriented job.

That's it. No strings. No gimmicks.

(And even if you don't have a job right now, don't worry. This offer is still good for 12 months after you graduate.) Why is American Express making the Card a little easier for seniors to get?

Well, to put it simply, we believe in your future. And this is a good time to show it—for we can help in a lot of ways as you graduate. The Card can help you be ready for business. It's a must for travel to meetings and entertaining. And to entertain yourself, you can use it to buy a new wardrobe for work or a new stereo.

The Card can also help you establish your credit history, which can help in your future.

So call 1-800-528-4800 and ask to have a Special Student Application sent to you. Or look for one on campus. The American Express® Card. Don't leave school without it.℠

Andrea Muccini scored UMass' final goal after taking a cross-field pass from Liz Schueler and driving twenty yards through Temple defenders.

"I was pleased after we came back from 6-1, we really fought," said Hixon. "I wish we could have capitilized better on some opportunities but we couldn't get into a rhythm."

Against Rutgers, UMass had its rhythm, jumping out to a 2-0 lead on goals from Laura Manning and Moryl. AfteraRutgers goal, the Gazelles got a score from Ginny Armstrong and a a pair from Moryl to make the score 5-1 at the half.

Rutgers began the second half with a goal from Rita Sweeney. Forbes scored next for UMass, followed by a Bekampis tally and another goal from Moryl before Mary Beth Dwyer scored from Rutgers. Moryl then made the score 9-3 with 11:12 to go in the game.

Armstrong took a Mary Scott pass and scored Umass' next goal. Schueler followed that score with her first of the day. Rutgers got its final goal of the game from Marilyn Riley with just under two minutes to play. Moryl made it a 12-4 final with her goal at 23:26.

UMass outshot Rutgers 39-14. DeJesus saved 10 in the net for the Gazelles. On Saturday Temple took 30 shots to UMass' 20. DeJesus saved 13 Lady Owl shots.

The nightcap was a bit tougher for the Minutewomen as UNH's Barb Drotis kept UMass off-balance until the sixth when pitcher Rever's RBI triple to left drove in Reed for the 1-0 advantage. Rever aided her own cause going two-for-three with a double and triple.

Saturday, UMass crushed an error-plagued Vermont 9-0 in the opener. Six runs scored on Vermont errors. Sally Maher (two-for-three, triple), Carol Frataroli (two-for-three, 2 RBI) and Kopcza (two-for-three) excelled at the plate.

In the nightcap, Vermont took a 1-0 lead and hung in there. The Catamounts were down just 2-1 after five and a half innings.

But in the bottom of the sixth, UMass exploded for four runs to seal the win. Kopcza was four-of-four with a double. Jamieson went two-of-three and Beth Talbott, seeing her first action since injuring her knee April 5, went two-for-three, with an RBI.

ing second as Todd Ezold's strong throw. Allard struck out Paul Johnson to end the threat.

But John Parak's leadoff homer in the third drove Allard off the mound. Freshman Steve Allen came on and was hammered for seven hits and five runs in four inning as rain steadily fell.

The rain forced the stop of the game with one out in the sixth and Rutgers leading 6-1 and threatening with runners aboard and Allen on the ropes.

The umpires, much to the displeasure of the Knight's followers allowed the UMass grounds crew, to spread a substance that dried the basepaths and UMass took to the rakes, making the field playable.

Freshman Matt Sheran came on to pitch, worked out of the jam and the UMass bats went to work.

In the sixth, Tom Fabian drew a walk from Winston and scored on a Bloise single. Sheran was thrown out at the plate during the inning and apparently separated his shoulder he could be lost for the season. The seventh saw Salustri single, Steve Messina walk and Darrin O'Connor load the bases with a perfect bunt down the third base line. Ezold drove in a run with a single to left before Kingman doubled in a pair and UMass trailed 7-6.

The magic continued in the eighth as Doug Wright led off with a pinch-hit double to center. Salustri then walked before Messina's sacrifice bunt surprised Rutgers and loaded the bases. O'Connor blooped a single into center to tie the game before Tom Fabian flew to center with Salustri tagging up for the first UMass lead.

A missed suicide squeeze forced O'Connor at third before Ezold was pitch by pitch, Grundhauser then threw away Dan Clifford's grounder to second as two more runs scored and UMass led 10-7.

★ Army ambushes Gorillas scored on another Carmean assist.

The Gorillas started strong in the second half by scoring the first four goals to establish their 9-4 lead.

With the score tied at nine, with two minutes left, Joe Gillis attempted to drive on UMass defenseman Gerry Byrne. Byrne took a chance with an over the head check that knocked the ball free in front. UMass didn't get the ground ball and junior attackman Pat Daly took advantage and scored. Army scored another goal with 31 seconds left when UMass only had five defensemen on the field.

Minutemen land A-10 playoff berth

Rain-aided rally lifts UM

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

For an hour and five minutes the rain poured down on Lorden Field as the University of Massachusetts baseball team sat in its dugout wondering what had gone wrong.

The Minutemen after splitting a doubleheader on Saturday, were trailing 6-1 to Rutgers in the top sixth inning. A defeat would keep UMass out of the Atlantic 10 playoffs.

"We sat in the dugout for a while, pretty down on ourselves," senior captain Angelo Salustri said. "We hadn't played well and we knew it. The rain gave us a chance to figure things out, and once we did I knew something was going to happen."

What happened was that the Minutemen scored four runs in both the seventh and eighth innings to defeat the cocky Knights 10-8 and earn a berth in next weekend's Atlantic 10 playoffs.

On Saturday, UMass lost the opener 7-2 as Rutgers' pitcher Bob MacDonald fired a five hitter, striking out eight. UM's only high-point came when Todd Comeau rapped out a fourth-inning single to give him the all-time UMass hit record at 158. Hard-luck Jim Knopf took the loss.

The second game saw UMass jump out to a 4-0 first inning lead and hold on for a 9-6 win. Jon Martin picked up the win in relief of starter Bobby Dostro.

Comeau had three hits in the game, including a solo homer and a two-run single in the first inning.

Yesterday, UMass jumped ahead 1-0 as Bruce Kingman jumped on Darrin Winston's first pitch in the bottom of the first inning and drove it to 370 sign in left-center. He advanced to third on a wild pitch and scored on Jack Bloise's sacrifice fly to center.

UM starter Steve Allard allowed a run in the second on two hits as the lefthander walked Joe Lynch before Scott Trochim's double that put runner on second and third with no outs.

Allard then struck out Don McSherry on three pitches before Steve Hooey singled in Lynch. Hooey was then gunned down steal-

Women's lax ends with split over weekend

Gazelles nipped by Temple

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Staff

After dropping a 10-8 battle with number-one ranked Temple University on Saturday, the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team rebounded on sunday to defeat Rutgers University 12-4, raising the Gazelle's record to 7-2.

"We played in a pressure game against Temple so now we know how it feels to play in that kind of situation and what we need to do when we're in that situation in the future," said UMass coach Pam Hixon of the past weekend's lessons for her team.

Temple started the game by giving UMass a taste of its own medicine as the Lady Owls notched the first goal of the contest on a Karen Patrick penalty shot in just under one minute. UMass has jumped to quick leads in similar fashion against several opponents this year. UMass came back minutes later though as Bunny Forbes scored on a penalty shot.

But the tie was as close as the Gazelles would come to the lead Saturday afternoon. Following Forbes' score, Temple erupted in a strong show of force, scoring five unanswered goals in the next ten minutes against a faltering UMass defense.

"We weren't reading their crease plays well and we weren't adjusting," Hixon said. "There were lots of bodies in there around the goal and it was tough to move and read picks. We weren t mentally ready and it took us a while to get used to their attack."

In that ten minute period, Temple got its second and third goals from Sue Yeager, followed by a Monica Mills tally, one from Gail Cummings and another from Mills to put the Gazelles down 6-1.

But just when things were looking very bleak for UMass, senior Pam Moryl, playing with a badly bruised tibia, took charge. Moryl made the score 6-3 with 9:37 to go in the half with a strong individual effort. A minute later she scored again on a penalty shot. At 6:39 Moryl scored once again.

Two minutes later, Becky Bekampis alertly followed up a Forbes attempt to pull the Gazelles to within one. Yeager answered seconds later then Moryl put in another to make it 7-6 Temple. An improved UMass defense held Temple until Mills scored with 33 seconds to go in the half.

Facing a consistent UMass defense led by goalie Debbie DeJesus, the Lady Owls managed only two goals in the second half. The Gazelles got a goal from Forbes, and

Lose 9-4 lead

Gorillas ambushed, 11-9

By BOB ALDRICH
Collegian Staff

WEST POINT, NY — For 44 minutes, the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team outplayed the United States Military Academy. With a 9-4 lead, the Gorillas looked well on their way to upsetting the sixth-ranked Cadets.

Then, Senior midfielder Rob Hoynes took things into his own hands for Army as the third period closed. He scored two goals in 24 seconds to put the Cadets within range, 9-6. The Army then scored five unanswered goals in the final period to come away with an 11-9 victory on Saturday.

The Gorillas fall to 4-6 on the season after this, another in a series of disappointing losses.

For UMass the high scorer was Tom Carmean with one goal and five assists, Mike Fiorini pumped in three goals, Doug Musco scored two goals and had one assist, Matt O'Reilly scored one goal and had one assist, and Tom Lukacovic and Neil Cunningham each added a goal.

Army started strong as they jumped out to an early 2-0 lead on goals by Hoynes and Bill Schiffer.

UMass tied the game however early in the second period on an isolation goal by Tom Carmean.

Army scored the next two goals and looked like they would run away with the game, but goalie Gerry Moreau made a key save when UMass was a man down and cleared the ball to a speedy Neal Cunningham who raced by the Army defense to score his goal. UMass tied the game at four on a beautiful shot by Lukacovic on a feed from Carmean and went ahead with seven seconds left in the half when Fiorini

Softball wins sixth straight, Wildcats, Catamounts fall

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

It's been a tough year for the University of Massachusetts softball team. Injuries, errors and anything that could go wrong did for the Minutewomen.

But Massachusetts is on the rebound after sweeping doubleheaders from New Hampshire and Vermont this weekend. UMass has won six in a row, its longest winning streak of 1985, and is three games over .500, the most all year.

UMass improved to 21-18-1 with 4-0 and 1-0 wins over New Hampshire on Friday and 9-0 and 6-1 wins over Vermont on Saturday. Coupled with a sweep of Central Connecticut last Wednesday, it's six straight.

"It's been a combination of everyone pulling together," shortstop Paige Kopcza, six-for-seven on the day against Vermont, said.

"We're forgetting what we do wrong and capitalizing on what we do right because we do a lot more things right than we do wrong."

Strong hitting, 33 hits in the last four games, sound defense, only two errors all weekend, and strong pitching, all four weekend games were two-hitters, carried UMass.

Lynn Stockley raised her record to 12-7 in a 4-0 win over UNH and a 9-0 win over UVM. Lisa Rever improved to 7-5 with a 1-0 win over the Wildcats and Cathy Reed gained her second win of the year with a 6-1 over UVM.

Massachusetts won the opener with New Hampshire 4-0, highlighted by back-to-back triples by Martha Jamieson (two-for-two, one RBI) and Emily Bietsch, her first of the year.

10th Anniversary Issue

It's A Girl!

Editor's note:

The following is an excerpt and reprinting of respective articles of the first NUMMO newspaper. Many of our brothers and sisters undertook all obstacles placed in front of them and overcame them. It is now our responsibility to respect our history ; therefore the struggle undertaken to attain NUMMO must never be forgotten,

Why and how NUMMO NEWS came to be it is best said in the words of the founders.

"...A Black organization calling itself CORE, launched an investigation of the existing white media organizations on campus and discovered that they were operating with no Black student input into their respective staffs. Core then protested and led a 1960's styled sit-in at the white student newspaper (the Daily Collegian) in order to force this organization to utilize adequate Black representation on it's staff. The result of this action created two positions on the Editorial Board of the Collegian. Brother Rudy Jones became the first Black Affairs Editor in the history of the Collegian and Vangie Brookfield worked as Assistant Black Affairs Editor.

This move contributed to the growth of BNS and provided the group with publication privileges to which they had formely no access.

The following year Brother Sherwood Thompson with the help of Assistant Black Affairs Editors Cal Witworth and Sandra Jackson worked constantly, bringing to the Campus important news from local, national and international scenes.

As popularity and demand developed, the Editors and staff of BNS were faced with the challenge of providing more complete news coverage to Black people on campus and surrounding areas. With this demand the creation of Nummo Newspaper came into being.

Nummo News is the first Black student weekly newspaper published at the University of Massachusetts. Nummo News operates a news and information medium providing local, national, and international and cultural information. This publication is the basic core, which records and communicates to Black people, the essence of protracted struggle, in which we are engaged.

At the present, the destiny and future of the NUMMO newspaper and the Black News Service rests on the shoulders of every concerned Black person here in Amherst and surrounding areas. The present situation demands that Black people step forward and assume the responsibilities of operating and controlling the voice of the Black community - NUMMO NEWSpaper.

The Black newspaper has always been in the march for justice for the Black race. It corrects the wrongs and interprets the direction of the movement. Although, because Black people fail to assume full responsibility for making it work, the Black press suffers the plague of lack of staff workers and lack of community financial support. It is that same old blues, we kill our own creations by failing to support them.

The systematic exclusion of oppressed people, particulary Black people, from the media is well documented. All one has to do is just turn the radio or television, or read the various newspapers and magazines to further substantiate this point.

It is also a fact that the media is one of the founding pillars of modern civilization, then it is imperative that all Black people fully participate in every aspect of the media.

The realization that we can not allow others to distort the imagery of Black people. We can not continue to look up to others for our vital source of information. If we do, we will certainly be misinformed and highly mis-educated. We must maintain a network for communicating our ideas and recording daily-weekly news and information, that affects our lives. A person who does not know, lives in darkness and a person who has been told lies lives a life of make-believe.

NUMMO NEWSpaper, in order to survive must receive the entire Black community's support in ther form of staff-workers and community financial support. By taking an involved attitude about NUMMMO, we can work energeticelly towards building a more cohesive Black Community.

NUMMO serves to stimulate education and promote self-determination to the entire Black community. One person can not be held responsible for the work that the entire community must do. It is going to take an involved majority, dedicated and serious-minded for us to bring about a consistent and productive Black newspaper.

Let us pull our resources together, combine efforts and work hand in hand for our own survival and elevation. The Black Press is not something to be toying around with. Today, communications is vital and most important for our continuos existance as a nation. Think seriously about the future and do not allow the past to hhold back what must be done now! The NUMMO NEWSpaper must go straight ahead, this is why it is going to take your help and support in order to continue publishing.

For those who mturn their backs and refuse to cooperate and help, it is like a foolish man who drinks poison in order to cure his sickness. SUPPORT YOUR BLACK NEWSPAPER!!!!

Introduction to W.E.B. DuBois as a Historian; A Reassessment.

Almost a decade ago (NUMMO NEWS October 12, 1976) I wrote an essay in an attempt to introduce a portion of the writings of W.E.B. DuBois to a new generation of UMass students. Since that time DuBois' stature has not diminished, but neither has there been the widespread dissemination of the details of his achievements that one would have anticipated and desired. For that reason I am offering the essay - with minor revisions once again in the hope that W.E.B. DuBois can be removed from that category of scholars who are much admired, but very much unread.

During thid year of the bicentennial when virtually every aspect of American life and history is being assessed and reassessed, it was to be expected that the Afro-American experience would receive some attention. Unfortunately, the kind of attention given the Black experience often has been as trivial and silly as that given to the entirety of the American experience. Of the numerous Black figures not being discussed in the rush to glorify the Black inventors of ice cream , the potato chip and the stop light, W.E.B. DuBois is surely the most prominent.

By and reasonable criteria, Dr. Dubois is surely one of the greatest scholars and thinkers ever born in the in the United States, and to discuss the events of a two hundred-year period without acknowledging the stature of a man who lived and worked for almost one hundred of those years is ludicrous.

An equally compelling reason for taking a second look at the life and workk of Dr. Dubois is a bit more complex. We are all aware of tghe large amount of scholarly attention now focukssed on the history and culture of Afro-Americans as a result of the Civil Rights Movement, the resukrgence of Black nationalism in tha 1960's, and the rise of Black Studies courses, programs and dapartments. What is not as obvious is the existence of a ratgher pervasive ignorance of the content of the work of such peoneering Black schkolars as DuBois, Carter G. Woodson, A.A. Taylor, Charles Wesley, etc., and tha often too easy dismissal of thkeir work with patronizing and condescending remarks about "special pleading," lack kof sophistication," atc. A careful reading and re-reading of the historical writing of Dr. DuBois should held to dispel such notions. The purpose then of this brief essay is to bring to your attention the significance of DuBois' approach to the study of khistory with the hope that students and just beginning to work in the arae of the Afro-American experience will be more aware that they ara not alwayks plowing virfgin soil or sailing completely unchkarted seas. A number of pioneering Black scholars, working under extremely difficult conditions--heavy teaching, heavy loads, scant financial or institutional support, lack kof excess to libraries and archives, and the general perils of a Jim Crow existence--have gone before.

W.E.B. DuBois was one of the best of these. By 1976, and certainly by 1985, the basic outline of DuBois' lifa should be part of ktghe common knowledge of evary American. But taking no chances let me sumkmarize it briefly. William Edward Burghardt DuBois was born in Great Barrington, Massachusetts, on February 23, 1868, and died in Accra, Ghana, on August 27, 1863. He studied at Fisk University [B.A.,1888] and Harvard University [B.A., 1890; PhD. in History, 1895]. He taught at Wilberforce University [1894-96] and at Atlanta University [1897-1910; 1934-1944]. Dr. DuBois was a founding member of the Niagara Movement [1905-1909] and the N.A.A.C.P. from 1910-1934 as editor of The Crisis and director of publicity and research, and from 1944-1948 as director of special research. He participated in the First Pan-African Conference in 1900, the First Universal Races Congress in 1911, and sponsored Pan-African Congresses in 1919, 1921, 192s3, and 1927. He served as honorary chairman of the 1945 Congress.

From 1948 to 1961 DuBois was active in various organizations of the American left: Council of African Affairs, Peace Information Center, Communist Party. In 1950 he ran as the U.S. Senate can-didate of the American Labor Party in New York. In 1961 he left the U.S. to take up residance and citizenship in Nkrumah's Ghana. As a writer, Dr. DuBois was a poet, playwright, novelist, essayist, journalist, and sociologist as well as an historian.

He wrote twenty-one books, edited fifteen published over 100 essays and articles. The Souls of Black Folk: Essays and Sketches [1903] places him in the front rank of American essayists. The Philadelphia Negro: A Social Study [1899], a pioneering investigation, secures DuBois' reputation as a first-rate sociologist. To assess the entire corpus of DuBois's writing is a task far beyond the scope of this piece. The focus here will be on what DuBois has contributed to the study of Afro-American history.

W.E.B. DuBois's historical writing possess three characterisitics that coincida with the "new" trends in Afro-American history. First, Dr. DuBois wrote from an Afrocentric point of view with a Pan-African scope.

Dr. DuBois, throughout his life, never failed to acknowledge the significant influence of Africa on the history and lives of Afro-Americans, on the development of western civilization and the New World, especially the United States, and on the general unfolding of the history of mankind. From the Suppression of the African Slave-Trade to the United States of America 1638 to 1870 [1896] to The World and Africa [1947] and in virtually every major work in between Africa had an important place in DuBois' analyses. Dr.DuBois wrote three general histories of Africa and the African Diaspora, The Negro [1915]; Black Folk: Then and Now [1939]; and The World and Africa, which have yet to be superceded in the era of the specialized monograph and the predominance of nationalism among historians. DuBois routinely thought in the comparative crosscultural and diaspora terms that are not seen as essential to understanding the Afro-American experience.

The Negro, a volume in the Home University Library of Modern knowledge, is a brief, but still useful, survey of the existing state of knowlege about Africans and peoples of African descent. It begins with geography and demography, moves swiftly through ancient Egypt and Ethiopia to the now well known kingdoms of the Congo, Niger River and western Sudan. East Africa, Zimbabwe and southern Africa also receive attention. A relatively lengthy chapter on African culture [in the anthopological sense] is followed by chapters on the slave trada and the settling of the West Indies and Latin America. The longest chapter is that on "The Negro in the United States." The concluding chapter discusses the contemporary situation of Blacks in the world in which he anticipates several of Lenin's views on the nature of imperialism and the "labor aristrocracy."

It was a necessary and pioneering synthesis from the Afro-American point of view. If it were written today that description would still apply. Black Folk: Then and Now: An Essay in the History and Sociology of the Negro Race and The World and Africa are more extensive and refined treatments of the ideas outlined in the Negro. Black Folk: Then and Now follows the general format of the Negro but devotes greater attention to the effects of colonialism on contemporary Africa.

As in The Negro, DuBois apologizes for the lack of firm supporting data for some of his conclusions, while still asserting the need for the work of synthesis that he is attempting. World War II and the subsequent upsurge in anticolonial movements provoked DuBois to once again write on Africa. The World and Africa, devoted entirely to the history and comtemporary events on the continent, is vigorously anticolonial in intent.

The work of the post-1945 and post-independence historians of Africa has resulted in the revision, expansion, and refining of many of Dubois' specific conclusions. However, no one has stepped forward to take on the task of writing a concise yet wide-ranging synthesis of Africa and the African Diaspora.

A second Characteristic of Dr. DuBois historiography is that it is genuinely interdisciplinary. DuBois never accepted the division of the study of human groups and societies into separate disciplines. As a student and throughout his life, he read and studied widely. All of his works were informed both by his sense of the historical process end by a concern for the cultural dimension. The essays in The Souls of Black Folk (1903) are perhaps the best introduction to his process. The Philadelphia Negro, a sociological study, has a lengthly section on the history of Blacks in Philadelphia from the colonial period through the 19th century. DuBois is careful to pay some attention to the historical context of each institution or practice such as churches, schools, and businesses that he discusses. The same is true of most the Atlanta University Publications. The Negro and Black Folk: Then and Now of course deal extensively with African culture

The most interesing blend of historical, economic and cultural analysis is in The Gift of Black Folk: The Negroes in the Making of America (1924).

The Gift of Black Folk is an exciting treatment of what black people meant to the development of American civilization,

The now well known facts concerning Blacks as explorers, workers and soldiers are summarized. Perhaps of greater interest to us today are DuBois' discussions of the influence of Blacks on U.S. political thought and institutions, on popular culture especifically music, and on religious thought and practices. The chapter on Reconstruction anticipates the conclusion of Black reconstruction in America (1935). DuBois shows that Blacks and the white treatment of Blacks was much more pervasive than previous, and most subsequent, scholars have been willing to admit. The book is not a history in the strict academic sense , but a series of essays in response to the general question: "Who made America"? DuBois effort to assess the history of Blacks in America is written as fiction:

The Black Flame: A Trilogy (1957, 1959, 1961).

The ordeal of Mansart (1957), Mansart Builds A School (1959), and Worlds of Color (1961) which are the life of Manual Mansart (DuBois?) are a combination of literature, autobiography and historical commentary on the role of Blacks in the U.S. and the world from 1876 to 1956.

DuBois'use of rather unique combination of literary form,e.g. novels and essays to present his ideas has been used as a justification for not taking him seriously as an historian. But those who would look to works such as William Styron's Confessions of Nat Turner for truths about slavery would be on much firmer ground using The Gift of Black Folk and The Black Flame

Flame and the essays in The Souls of Black Folk and Darkwater: Voices From Within The Veil (1921) as guides to an understanding of American Society.

A final characteristic of Dr. DuBois' historiography is that he offers ideas on a number of historical problems that still deserve attention. I have mentioned The Gift of Black Folk and its challenging thesis on the influence of Blacks on American Civilization. But it is Black Reconstruction in America (1935) that contains a wealth of forward looking insights. The basic thesis of Eric Williams' Capitalism and Slavery is that (p. 5) many of the conclusions of the new work on slavery by such scholars as Kenneth Stampp, Eugene Genovese, John Blassingame and George Rawick are there. DuBois saw that in contrast to the West Indies in the U.S. south "it paid to conserve the slave and let him multiply (p. 4). He anticipates Genovese' discussions of the psychological effects of slavery and made the same comparisons with the conditions of northern workers. DuBois' chapter on "The Planter" is as insightful a discussion of the nature of planter hegemony as can be found in Genovese and has yet to be given the credit due it. DuBois conclusions (if not his terminology) of the role Blacks during the Civil War and Reconstruction have held up far better than those of his racist contemporaries. His conclusions as to be the reasons for the failure of Reconstrucction are sound. The conclusions concerning the "Counter-Revolution of Property" and "Black Toward Slavery" have not been repudiated, nor have been those on "The Propaganda of History" which should be required reading for all students of American as well as Afro-American history.

In calling for a reassessment and re-reading of DuBois, I am not suggesting that he be read as the last word on any particular subject. DuBois himself addressed the same problem e.g. Africa, Reconstruction, etc. at different times, in different ways. DuBois' historical writings are not the last words, but often the first, and always interesting and profound.

Letter To The Editor

Saturday, April 20,1985 "Moon On A Rainbow Shawl" had it's final performance and as one who was priviledged to have seen it, I can only say 'more,more'. The cast was without exception totally professional and individually outstanding. An award winning performance by Ms. Ingrid C. Askew in the role as Mrs. Adams brought the audience to tears. Ms. Askew was superb in controlling her role and not enough can be said for this thought provoking and very human experience. We applaude the writer, the director, and the staff and to the cast and especially Ms. Askew we say Thank You for giving so much of yourselves to so many of us.

NUMMO is the magic power of the spoken and written word. With each word translated there escapes vapor. Vapor is a form of water. Water is necessary for the existance of all life forces on earth.

The Black News Service strongly believes that our newspaper will speak the truths of the protractive struggle of black people. Only through the truth can we, as a people develop a clear and precise knowledge of the world and its perplexities. When we receive knowledge, it is our duty to use it and share it with you, our fellow brothers and sisters.

It is through this exchange of written information which you, the people transfer the spoken word into power. Then together we will surely become the controllers of our creative life forces, our destiny.

I am, because we are; and since we are, therefore I am."

History of Black News Service

The Black New Service (BNS) is now entering its third year of positive and productable community service here at the University of Massachusetts. BNS was born on the drawing boards of Black faculty and student planning. It was well known that Black people suffered as victims of systematic exclusion from the media. All one has to do is to switch on the radio or TV or read the newspapers and magazines, to be aware of this.

Being aware of this fact, BNS emerged to service the Black community with relevant news and information. Pat Grundy will be remembered as spear-heading the initial plans and objectives for the BNS.

As with every Black media organization, BNS suffered the plague of lacking community financial support. Being concerned with this serious situation, A Black organization calling itself CORE, launched an investigation of the existing white media organizations on campus and discovered that they were operating with no Black student input into their respective staffs. CORE then protested and led a 1960's-styled sit-in at the white student newspaper (the Daily Collegian) in order to force this organization to utilize adequate Black representation on it's staff. The following year Brother Sherwood Thompson with the help of Assistant Black Affairs Editors Cal Witworth and Sandra Jackson worked consistantly bringing to the campus important news from local, national and international scenes.

As popularity and demand for more news space developed, the Editors and staff of BNS were faced with the challenge of providing more complete news coverage to Black people on campus and surrounding areas. With this demand the creation of NUMMO Newspaper came into being.

NUMMO is the first Black student weekly newspaper published at the University of Mass. NUMMO NEWS operates a news and information medium, providing local, national, international and cultural information. New Africa House—The Old and New

There is a very serious situation affecting the New Africa House Cultural Center which was established in 1970 through the dedicated struggle of Black students. Historical accounts record that the New Africa House was both out of conflict and confrontation. With the increases of Black students it became necessary to secure facilities that were capable of servicing the New Black Community's needs.

Surrounding schools such as Amherst College and Mt. Holyoke College were simultaneously conducting demonstrations protesting the lack of respect and limited resources facilities they had. Together these groups with Black student leaders of U Mass. waged an effective fight for the obtainment of a few resources facilities etc.

The New Africa House was officially declared by the University administration as an operative Black Cultural Center. They further authorized students to develop a governing committee that will be responsible for the administrative responsibilities of the building's operation.

The Steering Committee was formed and the Center began to function servicing the community. The first coordinator, Amos Moore was selected immediately following this ap

Craemen Gethers—Example of the U.S. System of Justice,

'I Don't Have Time To Be Angry'

Craeman Ge hers E

Vukani Ngubane
Nummo News Staff

Craeman Gethers was back in Amherst (Thurs.) for the first time in over 2 ½ years. He spent the day talking to students about his case. I would like to make people aware of the situation. "All I want is a chance to present all the evidence, and I haven't even been given that right yet. Only bits and pieces of the evidence has been presented in court so far.

Craeman Gethers has had two years taken from his life. According to Craeman all he wants to do is "put the facts up front. What happened to Craeman can be a lesson on how this system works.

This situation can happen to anyone. When asked about his feelings on still being in jail while his co-defendant Earl Brown was out on parole Craeman said, "I don't think it's fair, how can the same crime weigh more heavily on one than on the other. I don't feel that my back is to the wall even though I know it's completely unfair for me to be in prison." Despite the injustice that has led to two years being taken from his life Craeman Gethers does not seem bitter. "I have no time for anger. I have to concentrate on the situation at hand and deal with it accordingly. My case is not unusual. It's been going on since the beginning of time."

Craeman described his case as being "in a state of limbo," at the present time. He has not been able to do what he wants in his pursuit to clear his name — put the facts up front. Right now his defense fund is in urgent need for money. "I do have an urgent need for money. We are just about broke. Money will make the difference." $1,000 dollars has already been spent on his defense.

The Case of Fred Hampton

Bill Hampton E

By W. J. WHEELER
Nummo News Staff

Bill Hampton, surviving brother of late Chicago Black Panther Party leader Fred Hampton (who was killed by Chicago Police 4 a.m. on December 4, 1969) is presently touring the U.S. to organize support to reopen his brother's case. U.S. District Court Judge Joseph Sam Perry, who after previously acquitting the F.B.I. and other agencies of involvement in the case, ordered a hung jury to acquit the seven policemen who took part in the raid on Fred Hampton's apartment at 2237 West Monroe St. on Chicago's West Side.

Bill Hampton spoke briefly before showing the film "The Murder of Fred Hampton" in C.C.,163 at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. After the film presentation Mr. Hampton answered questions and elaborated on the case. He stated that his brother's bodyguard William O'Neil was on the payroll of the F.B.I. as an informant. He stated that this was not known at the time of the trial but was later discovered in documents during testimony in the trial. William O'Neil according to Bill Hampton received $30,000 to watch the activities of Fred and the Party and that thats why it was later proven that Fred was asleep during the raid. O'Neil had evidently put something into Fred's food, and even O'Neil admitted that Fred Hampton didn't use drugs and that he was paid to drug Chairmen Fred so that Fred would not be able to defend himself during the raid.

The trial which was in Federal Court for the past eighteen months is over, the judge threw it out. Bill Hampton is presently appealing the judges directed verdict. He feels that the judge did not have the right to give the jury a directed verdict when the jury was in a deadlock and that it should have been declared a mistrial and they should have been granted a new trial. Bill stated that he is in the process of appealing the judge's decision now and that he expects motions on the trial to start within the next six months or a year. The actual work won't begin until November or December.

He stated that although it came out in the trial that the F.B.I had admitted to writing false letters to cause disruptions between different black organizations and had tried to cause conflicts between the Panthers and the Muslims, people might ask if all this evidence came out well, why didn't anything happen?

Why didn't the judge just convict the perpetrators of the charges leveled against them? The people must remember how corrupt it is and this was the type of judge that didn't want people to be bucking the federal system. In his opinion it was just to say OK, well we know the evidence, we know the F.B.I. did this but we are not going to do anything because the F.B.I. is suppose to do those type of things, and that in this Great America if the Panthers and other groups are subversive, the F.B.I. is suppose to spy on them.

So this was the attitude that was built around the judges attitude and the trial. There are twenty eight defendents named in Bill Hampton's suit two of them are F.B.I. agents. Bill Hampton stated his main objectives are to prove, Number one that the Civil Rights were violated. Number two, that they used too much force upon entering Fred's apartment Number three, obstruction of justice.

Joan Little Up For Parole Again, Decision Due Nov. 15

RALEIGH, N.C. (UPI) — Joan Little, acquitted two years ago of a murder charge in a widely publicized trial, became eligible for parole on a breaking and entering conviction Friday and state paroles officials began work on her case.

Luther Mitchell, the case analyst for the paroles commission handling her case, said she had been told to anticipate a decision by about Nov. 15. The decision will be made by the commission.

It was her second attempt at parole. A bid for freedom was rejected late last year, reportedly for a violation of rules at women's correctional center in Raleigh where she is serving her term.

Miss Little, 23, has been working for a Raleigh dentist under a work release program since the spring.

She was acquitted in August, 1975, of a murder charge in the death of Beaufort County jailer Clarence Alligood.

She testified she was fending off a sexual attack at the jail where she was awaiting an appeal of a 1974 breaking and entering conviction.

She has served 26 months of her 7-to 10-year sentence for a breaking and entering in Beaufort County.

Most of the time has been spent at the women's facility in Raleigh.

Mitchell said the parole investigation would "mainly be concerned with her proposed kind of employment plan and residence."

She told parole officials, he said, that she plans to continue working for dentist David P. Lane, who gave her a job when it appeared no one wanted to hire her.

She also told officials she plans to live in the Raleigh area if she is freed and will buy a house.

Was Martin Luther King Jr. A Capitalist?

On the hundredth birthday of Dr. W.E.B. Dubois February 23, 1968, Freedomways Magazine sponsored an international Cultural Evening at Carnegie Hall in New York City. The Centennial Address that evening was delivered by Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. This particular speech I think was one of his best ones before his assassination and this speech alone was highly responsible for the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. because he was in full agreement with what Dr. Dubois finally did in his life.

I will not attempt to give the full text of this speech, but only highlight key points that he made about Dr. W.E.B. Dubois, whom Dr. King loved. The two great intellectuals of our time have given people of color a high standard to live by; it would be well that whites as well as people of color emulate these two unselfish Africans. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. did not make a mystique out of being of African descent, Dr. Dubois felt the same way as Brother Martin. History taught both men of vision that it is not enough to be angry at one's oppressor even if he has your own pigmentation rather than the general oppressors' skin pigmentation. These two men will knew that the supreme task sincere people have is to organize, and unite people so that their anger becomes a transforming force.

Brother Martin stated the following about Dubois: "This life style of Dr. Dubois is the most important quality this generation of Negroes needs to emulate. The educated Negro who is not really part of us, and the angry militant who fails to organize us having nothing in common with Dr. Dubois. He exemplified black power achievement and he organized black power in action. It was no abstract slogan to him." Further on Dr. King continues to praise Brother Dubois.

"We cannot talk of Dr. Dubois without recognizing that he was a radical all of his life. Some people would like to ignore the fact that he was a Communist in his later years. It is worth nothing that Abraham Lincoln warmly welcomed the support of Karl Marx during the Civil War and corresponded with him freely...It is time to cease muting the fact that Dr. Dubois was a genius and chose to be a Communist. Our irrational obsessive anticommunism has led us into too many quagmires to be retained as if it were a mode of scientific thinking."

Brother Martin stated further: "Negroes have heavy tasks today. We were partially liberated and then re-enslaved. We have to fight again on old battlefields but our confidence is greater, our vision is clear, and our ultimate victory surer because of the contributions a militant, passionate black giant left behind him." Dr King used this speech as an organizing tool for the Poor Peoples March on Washington D.C. in 1967. This can be illustrated by the following. "Dr. Dubois has left us but he has not died. The spirit of freedom is not buried in the grave of the valiant. He will be with us when we go to Washington in April to demand our right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. We have to go to washington because they have declared an armistice in the war on poverty while squandering billions to expand a senseless, cruel, unjust war in Vietnam."

It is highly difficult to think that in a psychotic fit that Dr. Martin Luther King supported Capitalism and hated progressive thinkers who fought for protection of the oppressed. I think that Martin Luther King was a man that gave everything he had to the masses of all people around the world. Dr. King was warned by the likes of the then Rev. Andrew Young to not speak out against the war in Vietnam. There were young activists who asked Dr. King to speak out against the war and he did. Myself and others who are still around who participated in that period of history owe something to the masses of people. I would have probably not be here at U of Mass had it not been for the efforts of this man. He continued to deal with our concrete struggle both here and abroad and he did not have a liberal tongue. He was not afraid to criticize incorrect behavior. He continues the following. "We will go there, we will demand to be heard, and we will stay until the administration responds. If this means forcible repression of our movement, we will confro t it, for we will embrace it for that is what

Students Unite Against Apartheid

On Saturday April 7, 1979 approximately two hundred people braved strong winds to march in memory of Martin Luther King and to protest U.S. involvement in apartheid South Africa. The march began at New Africa House with speeches by Mike Thelwell, Rev. Gil Caldwell and Queen Mother Moore, who told us that her sixty three years of consistent struggle should qualify her for the Guiness Book of Records.

The marchers, led by a police escort, proceeded South West via Massachusetts Avenue chanting and singing freedom songs about South Africa. Upon reaching South West the marchers encouraged people "out of the dorms and into the streets" to which a number of people responded by joining the march.

In South West there was a minute of silence in memory of Seta Rampersad and Jose Pontes, two students what were found dead. Jose being found in Washington Tower We then marched out of South West in silence to protest their deaths.

The march continued back up Mass. Ave to North Pleasant Street into town, where other people joined in and began chanting along with the people.

We continued to Amherst College, one of the elitist colleges that has refused to divest ~~a reported fifty million dollars of stock in~~ corporations that do business in the land of aparthied. The marchers chanted "Botha's army shoots to kill, while Amherst College foots the bill" to remind the perplexed students looking out of dorm windows that their trustees are supporting the most brutal regime on the planet.

The march ended on the town commons where there was a rally featuring many knowledgeable people of the role of students in demanding the downfall of aparthied. We were met by Queen Mother Moore, who stated that she was so proud to see both black and white students marching against aparthied. She told the people that the "man" hates to see black and white people united around certain principles. South Africa being one of them. She further stated that the "man" will use black against white and white against black to ensure that there is no unity between the two races. We must not allow the 'man' to get in between us and destroy our unity, we are more mature than that, she reminded the crowd. Her eloquent and effervesent speech endeared her to the crowd. Let us hope ,that her words of wisdom will be seriously thought about.

Next at the podium was sister Jamila Gatson from the Third World Women's Task Force. She reiterated the story of the tragic death of Seta and the hard work the Task Force and attirney Ozelle Hudson had done to bring to justice the people responsible for Seta's death. It was a speech that clearly showed the contradiction in treatment provided the Third World community before the court system and media in this valley. Very strange how Earl Brown and Craeman Gethers were robbed of their youth while Jimmy 'the Greek', Brian Prizer and Carol Newton are running around free. How strange that Earl and Craemen's faces were 'plastered' all over the media, while little attention was paid to the negligent three. The three who could not remember the time of Seta's death or the events of September 13th and

Equal Opportunity and Respect

The Five College system in the Pioneer Valley is an educational center of a high caliber. As a member of the five college community, one has a very distinct opportunity to examine the goals of Amerikan society as it is reflected in a cooperative of educational institutions - the Five College System. In this system the societal values expressed also include various forms of oppression. This oppression is felt no more in its direct effect, than it is felt by Afrikan-Amerikan and members of other minorities. For these people the experience of being part of these institutions can and often is one of being caught in the machinery or totally rejected by a system that pretends to want them. In many ways the system is a monster, a monster which is relentless in its effort to oppress and divide Afrikan-Amerikans, all other minorities, and all people in a more general sense, from each other.

Since the late sixties drive to increase the enrollment of Amerikan minorities (particularly Afrikan-Amerikans) into the five college system, some progress has been made. However, a good part of that progress made has been lost, and this is most apparent in the percentages of enrollment which has been decreasing yearly for Afrikan-Amerikans. Another area of decline has been in the number of minority faculty and with it staff support for minority students has also declined. Over the decade of the seventies the term "Equal Opportunity" has gained greater emphasis. Unfortunately, the pathways to reaching that opportunity for minorities have been cut off in the process.

Whenever I entertain the idea of being an Afrikan-Amerikan student within the five-college system in this valley, I think first of being proud of my "blackness". I think of the sacrifices that it took from me as an individual and my people collectively to make this opportunity possible. I am grateful. However, I also think about feeling stranded and isolated in this college-oriented, but very "white" community. In this community an Afrikan-Amerikan must struggle for the very maintainance of their own "selfhood". Scanning the pages of the Collegian for the academic year of 1968-69, it is not very difficult to see that my very thoughts are a reflection of those shared by the students who took over a dorm called Wills House, which has since been known as New Afrika House.

Difficulty is a fact of life in the valley of the five-college system. A central and most common difficulty has been in inability and near impossibility for minorities in general to gain recognition. This is a problem which is shared by students, staff, and faculty. Recognition as a community is no different, and equal recognition individually or as a community has never happened and indeed appears a long way into the future. How can minorities expect equal opportunity without equal recognition? The difficulty which attaining "equal recognition" proposes is further

Racism in Georgia

On the 5 November 1979, Richard Lomax, of Springfield and Perry Owens were arrested for alledgedly robbing a Blairsville Georgia store. The circumstances surrounding their situation casts a shadow of extreme doubt on the validity of the charges levied against Lomax and Owens. In a letter written to Keith Johnson of the Black Mass Communications Project, Lomax explains their plight.

Sept 10, 1980

Dear Mr Johnson:

I hope this letter finds you in the best of health and doing well. My name is Richard W. Lomax, and I am a resident of Springfield Mass., and was once a student at UMASS in Boston. Miss Cindi Janes of the Advocate informed me that she has been in contact with the Black Mass Communications Project concerning a present struggle me and a friend of mine Mr. Perry D. Owens are facing, and that they have taken an interest in our plight and may be able to help us in raising a much needed defense fund.

KKK: A Threat to Everyone

The Klu Klux Klan is the most well organized and vicious "hate group" in the United States. In the current period of economic and social crisis it is experiencing a resurgence which threatens Blacks, Jews, Hispanics, Catholics, the labor movement, and all progressive minded people. It threatens the very existence of these people and groups in an immediately physical sense, because the Klan advocates their actual destruction. We need only look at the recent events in Greensboro, North Carolina; Decatur, Alabama; Sylacauga, Alabama; Corbon Hill, Alabama, and Tupelo, Mississippi. In each of these places innocent people, Black and white, were physically attacked and in several cases murdered in cold blood. The potential exists for this type of brutality to continue on a larger scale in the South as well as the North, East and West, if people do not organize to combat its influence.

The Klan represents more than a backward-minded "fringe" group in the sense described above. It reflects a current in society which would like to roll back the gains in civil rights, social welfare programs, the labor movement, and other progressive causes which have benefited all people, white and Black. This trend is being funded and mounted by some of the richest and most powerful people in this country. If Successful this right-wing movement will have a devastating impact on the lives of the working people, and especially the nationally and racially oppressed peoples.

Therefore, although the Klan directs its most immediate attacks on Blacks, Jews, and all progressive-minded people, its influence is part-and-parcel of the general attack on the multi-racial, multi-national working class. Ronald Reagan, although not himself a member of the klan, is to be placed within this general trend to roll back the standard of living and quality of life for the masses of people in this country. It is no coincidence then that one leader of the Klan was quoted as saying that Ronald Reagan's program, and the platform of the Republican Party, could have been copied from a Klan pamphlet!

In order to fight the influence of the Klan, and the right-wing trend in this country, a

LERONE BENNETT SPEAKS AT DUBOIS DEDICATION

On 19 Friday and 20 Saturday, September, at the University of Massachusetts in Amhers, ten papers of Dr. William Edward Burghardt DuBois were dedicated at the world. At the conclusion at the two day ceremonies, Dr. Lerone Bennett Jr. delivered the keynote address. Bennett, senior member of the editorial board of EBONY magazine spoke to a crowd of nearly 300 at the Campus Center auditorium.

NUMMO presents that speech in its entirety.

To my good brother and friend Mike Twelwell, thank you so much, brother Chancellor Koffler,friends, students and disciples of W.E.B. DuBois as long as I can remember, I have lived within the gravotational field of Dr. DuBois's genious and it is an enormous honor for me to salute him here in Massachusetts and it seems to me that this is a day of jubilee for Massachussetts and America, a day of jubilee not only for scholars but also for peasents in South East Asia and workers in Boliva and poor black people in Roxbury and poor white people in the Appalachia.

This is the day anticipated by the poet who said no barrier is fatal. This is the day anticipated by the philosopher who said the maximum hope is always close to the maximum danger. I would like to begin my brief remarks by expressing congratulations to Micheal Thelwell, the Afro American Studies Department, Dr. Bromery, Mrs Emerson, Dr. Aptheker, who served and worked with Dr. DuBois so long,and that great soul,Shirley Graham DuBois and all those living and dead who had the decency and the courage to recognize that truth by making it possible for the United States of America to make this small down payment on the massive debt that this country owes William Edward Burghardt DuBois.

The first point I want to make here today is that this is no ordinary dedication,but W.E.B. DuBois was no ordinary man. One of the greatest minds of the twentieth century, one of the greatest activists and seers of the twentieth century,DuBois was also one of the most maligned and misunderstood men of the twentieth century.Because he refused to bite his tongue,because he demanded light and air for all the peoples of the world, because he demanded full and total and immediate equality for black people and poor white people, he was harrassed and persecuted and arrested. A massive attempt was made to write him out of history. We cannot be true to W.E.B. DuBois,or to the DuBois collection, or to ourselves, if we do not begin this day by remembering with shame the c: of W.E.B. DuBois, if we cannot be true to ruth , if we do not end this day by remembering with joy the triumph of W.E.B. DuBois. For he rose above his persecutors like an eagle in the air.

When historians come a hundred years from today to set down names of men in our time who served freedom and peace and truth the name of W.E.B. DuBois will be at or near the top. We come here today to say in so many words that dreams cannot be assassinated and men the size of mountains cannot be hidden. That statement must be taken literally for Dr. DuBois was a mountain no black person nor white person, for thatmatter,can ignore. It can be said in fact that no anecon understand Massachusetts of the United States of America without some understanding of the man who turns and twists and challenges and dreams in the papers collected here. An intellectuolgiant, the most Catholic and ecumenical thinker produced this side of the seas.

An activist, a seer, a prophet, Dr. DuBois discavered the shores beyond the West. He was perhaps the first black to say with all his heart and all his soul that the world did not belong to white people. He was perhaps the first black to say inamtion to civilize it, to negritude the African personality, protest Africa for the Africans,for Africa the sociology of the slums, the souls of black folks, the souls of white folks the sorrow songs all this and more can be found in the world view of Dr. DuBois. There will be no peace, no love, no jay,no salvation by this guilty land, until it climbs to the high ground staked out of these papers by this traveler to the dark. Perhaps it should be said here that this great spirit was a world saul and he belonged, and belongs to the world and to the ages. We who live within the vail, to use his phrase, knew him within his vailness. I speak here today from behind the vail.The vail that shaped and molded him and made him what he was, a black man, who saw further than almost all of his contemporaries, not as they say despite his color, but because of it. He tells us today from the grove that the darkness is light enaugh and that in the willow in which we live the darkness he reflects is about the only light we have left.We say that here without reserve or apology and we say further that there is a parable here.

One hundred and twelve years ago a black boy was born in this state by a golden river. In the shadow of two great fields that black boy, born in a white fire,rose to the heights by the sheer toughness of spirit met and defeated his adversaries on their own ground and never forgot the poor and the defenseless. Ninety-three years later that fighter and hunter of truth was practically hounded out

Mother of Slain Atlanta Child Speaks on Campus

Carmille Bell, mother of the fourth slain child in Atlanta, Yusef Bell spoke to a concerned crowd of some 250 people Wednesday night at the SBA auditorium. Bell, a chairperson for the support group called the Committee to Stop Children's Murders in Atlanta told how the Atlanta police and other national officials did not become involved in investigations until nearly 15 children were missing or murdered.

Bell exclaims that the childrens murders starting in 1979, did not receive proper news coverage. At this time 6 children were found murdered or missing. One of which was found strangled, raped and tied to a tree.

Still each one of these was played as isolated incidences said Bell. The general feeling at that time was, "it's a shame these bad things happen. Atlanta's a wonderful city and nothing unusual is going on."

Shortly after the 6th death, the support group was formed. Every attempt to discourage and discredit the group was made by local officials. Later after a few more deaths occured the group went to the Public Safety Committee of the City council at Atlanta City Hall to ask for help.

At this time the death toll rose to 11 children dead or missing. A task force consisting of one sargent and four investigators was formed. Days later, Clifford Jones of Cleveland who was visiting his grandmother in Atlanta was killed and thrown away beside a dumpster.

During the period that Clifford Jones was killed, his hometown Cleveland paper printed the story. A Black Shriners convention being held in Cleveland helped to make the people realize that something unusual was happening in Atlanta. It was not until the media told the story nationally that the task force grew from 5 investigators to 17.

It's a little bit heart breaking to Atlanta mothers to know that Atlanta children were not important to make that jump," said Bell. During a period when things were very frightening, one of our tv stations ran a story about a guerrilla warfare camp back to back with the story of the missing and murdered children in Atlanta. Almost as if they were trying to create a picture of a racial situation, where maybe there was or maybe there was not a racial situation."

It was not until a boiler in the Boying Homs daycare center in Atlanta exploded, that people thought the incidents were truly connected. At this time 15 children were dead or missing. That is when national tv acknowledges the real issue.

Bell spoke of "smoke screens" officials were using to hide the real issue such as did he always hang out on that corner or why don't their parents take care of them.

The real issue said Bell is: Children are being killed, the killer has not been caught and there are children missing. Where are they?

Atlanta Self-defense Patrols Attacked by Police

Reprinted from Workers World

By Bob Bruton

ATLANTA, March 24--"Why the hell aren't the cops out looking for whoever is killing our kids instead of hassling us for protecting our neighborhood?"

This statement by Dovie Newell was the burning question on everyone's mind Sunday night as over 50 supporters and members of the recently formed Techwood/Clark Howell Homes armed self-defense patrols jammed the hallways of the Atlanta city jail protesting the arrests and police harassment of the self-defense patrol.

The patrols, formed last week to defend the Techwood area from racist attacks, was organized as a result of the frustration and anger felt in the Black community over the failure of the Atlanta police to stop the continuing murders of Black children here. Twenty-two Black Atlanta children have been killed in the last 21 months. Two Black youths, Timothy Hill and Jojo Bell, are still missing.

Rally hits cops

The Sunday night rally at the jail demanded the release of Modibo Kadalie, a patrol organizer who was arrested earlier in the day. Five patrol organizers have been arrested in the last five days on a series of trumped-up charges aimed at disrupting the community patrols. (All those arrested are now free on bond.)

Following chants of, "The cops and the Klan work hand in hand," rally speakers demanded an end to the "racist harassment of the self-defense patrols." Speakers pointed out the racist history of the police department and blasted "the government authorities (who) have stood by and done nothing when the Klan and Nazis walk the streets (brandishing loaded shotguns and automatic rifles.) But when the Black community tries to defend itself the cops occupy our community and throw us in jail."

Although many of the residents of Techwood have complained to the city administration that the police don't respond when called, now that they have decided to protect themselves the police havew virtually occupied the Black community. Over 60 cops were assigned to the Techwood area this past week end when the patrols began.

Even though none of the murdered and missing children have been from Techwood, Israel Green, president of the Techwood/Clark Howell Tenants Association, stated Friday, "We want to make sure that none of our children gets snatched because the police sure aren't protecting us."

Wide support

The big business press and the police claim that almost no support exists for these self-defense patrols. But letters and phone calls of support have come in from throughout the U.S. and also from Canada, England, Spain and Sweden. A delegation from the Soviet Union visited Techwood last Friday and presented a Soviet made lamp to the community as symbolic of their solidarity in the struggle.

In the Techwood area itself, support is growing as shown last Saturday when nearly 100 angry residents and supporters protesting the arrest of Jerome Gibbson one of the patrols surrounded a police car and refused to release it. This action forced the police to return Gibbs within half an hour, issuing only a written citation for carrying a pistol without a permit.

A coverup?

The call for armed self-defense of the Black community in the face of increasing racist attacks has struck a responsive chord here. More people are asking, "What is the role of the cops in this tragic series of racist attacks?"

Is the killer a cop? Is it the work of the Ku Klux Klan? Is there an officially sanctioned coverup of whoever the killer is?

And why is it that the Atlanta police can mount what they call "the most massive investigative effort in the history of this city"; can bring in the Georgia Bureau of Investigation and the Federal Bureau of Investigation; can offer a $100,000 reward for information leading to the arrest of whoever is responsible; and the cops and city administration can drag out the largest array of psychics, seers, "topnotch" investigators from five major U.S. cities, and hundreds of bounty hunters--and yet the first arrests connected with the racist murders are residents of the Black community attempting to protect their children?

These are the questions that are being asked more frequently--and they must be answered. It will be in the struggle against the racist attacks, for self-defense and self-determination for oppressed peoples, and for a society that doesn't allow murderous and fascist groups like the KKK and Nazis to exist, that these questions will be answered.

2 Added to List of Victims in Atlanta

The names of Timothy Hill, age 13, and Eddie Lamar Duncan, age 21, have been added to the list of unsolved murders in Atlanta. The inclusion of the two latest victims rises the count of the missing and murdered to 24.

Initially these two victims' names were not given to the special task force designed specifically to the murders because of the runaway history of one, and the adult age of the other were not thought to be related. The authorities had previously declined to place Hill's name on the task force list because of his history as a runaway and because assertions were made by some that they had seen him alive. Eddie Duncan was also added to the list after his body was discovered Tuesday night in the Chattahoochee River about fourmiles from where Hill's body was discovered the previous day. Originally, his death was not thought to be related because of his adult age, but was later added because the autopsy shows his cause of death to be similar to the children's deaths.

Timothy Hill: was the eighth black child's body discovered in Southwest Fulton County since the series of puzzling murders began. A police issued a statement saying that Hill's death indeed "fit the general pattern" of the deaths of the other black youths in the special force's case.

The tour of the Special Task Force's headquarters disclosed walls filled with graphic charting, measuring and tracing patterns of such information as the ages of the victims, the month and the year they were last seen, the day they were last seen, the meteorological conditions on the dates of disappearances, phases of the moon on these dates, information and organizational flow charts, maps of the city showing patterns of abductions and distances between discovered bodies.

There were also numerous composite sketches of suspects as seen and sent to the task force by psychics from all over the country and abroad.

Lee P. Brown, Atlanta's Public Safety Commissioner said that the task force was equipped with "the most sophisticated computer system in the world for a criminal investigation."

It is believed by Mr. Brown that one person is not responsible for all the killings, and while more information is gained daily the force is still unable to make any arrests in any of the murders.

Whatever Happened To Martin Luther King?

Remembering Martin, which is to say remembering the history that has made us what we are, has never been more important than now. For we must pose Martin's effort to go forward -and by Martin we mean that whole host of known and unknown strugglers both living and dead who sacrificed for the cause -- with the reactionary drive to go backward so aptly symbolized by the present administration. We must pose Martin's dream of life and justice and freedom against the Reagan-Haig nightmare of death, injustice and nuclear madness. For in the final analysis it is only through us that Martin's dream can be kept alive; it is only through us that the dream can come true.

Like most of the campus it seems, NUMMO let the assassination date of Martin Luther King, Jr. slip by unnoticed. Perhaps it was the first beguiling days of Spring, perhaps we have become too accustomed to relying upon others to jog our memories and remind us of those things that shoul be important in our lives, perhaps we were too caught up in our private universes. For, April 4th has come and gone and we blew it. We apologize.

There is, however, a lesson involved in this lapse of memory. It should remind us of how easily yesterday's sacrifice becomes today's forgotten memory; how the most significant things in our history fade out of our awareness under the pressure of everyday life; how each of us must become the guardian of our history and hold its flame aloft if its light is not to flicker and dim and go out.

In The Interest Of Peace Part I

by Johnnetta B. Cole
Associate Provost for Undergraduate Education and Professor of Anthropology

At this moment in history when all Black Americans are experiencing heightened racism and economic hardships, and when Black students face an attack upon educational opportunities gained over recent years, why concern ourselves with the war games of gorwn men, debates over whether or not there can be a limited nuclear war, and the U.S. government's plan to spend an unprecedented $1.5 trillion on the military over the next five years? There are two definitive responses: one which addresses our survival in a literal sense, the other which speaks to the quality of our lives. The weapons available to those who dare engage in the insanity of a nuclear arms race cannot be progrmmed to destroy according to a "color code." Nuclear war is an issue for all of us, for it is the survival of all of us -- and future of humankind -- that is at stake. America cannot have guns (and nuclear bombs) in the quantitity being called for and sufficient butter for all of its people -- and Black Americans have a disproportionate need for the butter of life, that is food, jobs, decent housing, medical care and education.

Several key points are inherent in this response. Let us make them explicit through responses to six additional questions.

WHAT IS THE LIKELIHOOD OF A NUCLEAR WAR?

The United States now has enough nuclear arms to destroy every major Soviet city some 40 times over, and the Soviet Union can do the same to us 19 times. While the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. are the nations with the largest number of nuclear weapons, they are not the only ones. The United Kingdom, France, China and India also have nuclear arsenals, and it is possible that Israel and South Africa also have such arsenals. It is also possible that other nations are in the process of developing nuclear arms. Global military expenses now amount to about 500 billion dollars a year, and thus the world is placed on the kind of powder keg that has the potential of destroying humankind, and if such a total end were avoided, nuclear weapons could cause irreversible adverse effects on the environment and the ecological system while causing widespread sickness and death.

The United States and the Soviet Union have developed nuclear weapons which have a combined explosive power equivalent to a million Hiroshima A-bombs. The United States has 31 Poseiden submarines: just one of them can deliver more explosive power than was detonated in all of Europe and Japan in World War II. The horrifying facts are that in 1945, the United States bombed Hiroshima and Nagasaki in Japan, thus using the most terrible weapons that had ever been invented. Today, with weapons which are far more destructrive, and with an arms race that moves towards more and more overkill possibilities, there is a clear danger that they will be used. Once such weapons are in place, the pressure to use them, especially in a crisis, is intense: each side moves towards the button as it fears that if it does not push it, its missiles will be destroyed before it can attack. The U.S. considered using nuclear weapons in Korea, in Vietnam, and on at least five other occasions. There are severe crises in the Middle East, in southern Africa, in Central America, in Europe and in Asia -- it is indeed possible that one of these crises can escalate to the point where a nuclear armed nation dares to use nuclear weapons. In addition, we must understand that nuclear weapons are complicated instruments, and thus they involve the risks of accidents.

In the 18 months prior to October 1979, for example, the American missile warning system falsely reported 151 indications of a Soviet attack. Four of these reports resulted in orders to our nuclear forces to increase their state of alert -- that is, to prepare for retaliation. According to the New York Times, one of the most serious of these fase alarms, on November 9, 1979, was caused by a "computer error." Six minutes went by before the error was discovered. Nine minutes more and our missiles would have been launched ("Lend A Hand to Halt the Arms Race," Western Mass. Coalition for a Nuclear Weapon Freeze)

This summer many of us lost a very close companion. John Coleman Wright, Jr. departed this life on August 1, 1983. This issue of NUMMO NEWS is dedicated in memory of this beautiful brother.

At the time of passing John was a Senior here at the University, Department of Political Science. During his time at UMASS his accomplishments were many. Perhaps most remembered for his athletic achievements, John was awarded the Most Valuable Player Award for Track and Field for two consecutive years, and he held a number of school and state records in the hurdles. He also made the 1983 UMASS Football team.

There was much more to John Wright than just his amazing athletic abilities. John was indeed a leader and a doer in his community. Along with being involved with social activities on campus he was a Resident Assistant in the Kennedy dormitory and Photo Editor of NUMMO NEWS. John's committment to the growth of our community and his willingness to help whenever possible are qualities that we all admire and respect very much.

Even more important, John was academically successful. Even with running track, being involved in social and political activities, and always being there when somebody needed to talk, John always found time to study and to stay on top of his academics. John set an excellent example of strength and determination for his peers. In his short life he was a very successful man.

What we most admired about John is that he was a warm, compassionate human being; who touched the lives of all people who knew him and loved him. As soon as you shook his hand you were his friend and he would go to bat for you. He had a kind heart and a friendly, humble disposition. John was a great asset to his community and his friends here at UMASS.

To you, John, we say this: as Photo Editor of NUMMO, your artistic creativity was soothing to our eyes and souls. As an athlete, the way you glided over the hurdle and passed the finish line make us all feel like the winner you were. And as a human being, you showed us the true meaning of friendship.

To your beautiful family, parents Carol and John, Sr., brothers Gregory and Marlon, and all of your aunts, uncles, and cousins, we send our respect and sympathy, and wish them all of the joy and happiness the world has to offer.

John, although you are no longer with us in a physical sense, you will always live in our hearts and minds. We will meet you again in a better place. We love you and we miss you.

NUMMO NEWS is an independent Third World newspaper distributed on Mondays with the COLLEGIAN. With the beginning of the new school year, NUMMO asks interested Third World reporters, photographers and artists, as well as graphics and layout technicians, to help to continue to spread "the magic power of the spoken and written word." NUMMO began in 1975 in response to the area media's inadequate coverage of issues and concerns to people of color. As the largest Third World newspaper in the Five College area, NUMMO creates a supportive informational network by focussing on campus, local, national and international news.

With this goal in mind, NUMMO extends an invitation to students to join us in the collective effort of production. All staff members attend meetings twice weekly (Mondays and Wednesdays, 4pm) and attend scheduled weekend production in the Campus Center Graphics Room. Through these activities students contribute their talents, develop their interests and become involved in all aspects of the paper.

Take an active stance toward your education, and in the community, by participating in and communicating cultural, political and social affairs. All options are open, so come to our next staff meeting, Monday, September 19, 4 pm, at the NUMMO NEWS office, 103 New Africa House.

Jackson Still in the Race Massacusetts Next

by Marilyn G. Bou

Segun Eubanks

Jesse Jackson finished in fourth place in the New Hampshire primary. The unexpected turnout of Hart proved that while many people are either basking over the victory of Gary Hart or the loss of Walter Mondale many are losing sight of the impressive standing made by the Rev. Jesse Jackson. In being victorious over such Democratic hopefuls George McGovern, Reuben Askew, Allan Cranston, Etc. Jackson hasd shown his ever growing liklihood at becoming the next Democratic National candidate for President. While Hart's winning in New Hampshire has definitly dealt a devasting blow to Mondale and his campaign it has again proven the unpredictability of the primary process. Hart has demonstrated to us all how feasible it is for a longshot to come from behind and conquer. With this thought in mind one can easily understand the massive attempts by Jackson supporters across the state to re-create this turnover scenario in Jackson's favor in the remaining primaries. With the upcoming "Super Tuesday" primaries, efforts are underway to educate all registered voters on the sensitive issues which will determine their future.

Next Tuesday, March 13th, is the Massachusetts Democratic primaries. As has historically been the case, the results of the Massachusetts primary has had enormous effects on the campaigns of candidates. This means that we, as student, have a real opportunity to effect the outcome of the democratic rate for the presidency. Here at UMass the registration campaign has been enormously successful: registering over 3,000 new voters. UMass students have potential voting power more than ever before.

PHYLISS HYMAN, ROY AYERS:

More Than a Concert

by Segun Eubanks

When I returned from the Phyliss Hyman, Roy Ayers concert Friday night, a friend asked me, "How was the concert?" I just smiled and said, "You had to be there!" That is why it is so difficult to describe to those who did not make it, what turned out to be one of the best Black musical entertainment performances to hit the valley in years.

Phyllis Hyman and Roy Ayers performed March 2, 1984 at John M. Greene Hall, Smith College compliments of the Black Students Alliances at Smith. What I expected to be just another concert, turned out to be two excellent performances which consisted of comedy, theater, commercials, poetry, message, audience participation, and of course dynamite music.

Roy Ayers opened the show, and gave the audience what he called, "a total music perspective." He played jazz, soul, R + B and funk, many times in combination all added to good sound. He even played a country/western tune. Ayers' said, "there's always a message in my music. Part of this message is referred to in title of his latest album, "Lots of love", which he sold himself at the concert. "That's right, I'll sell my own album. Just five bucks! You won't find it cheaper anywhere else!"

By the way, many people may not be aware that aside from being an excellent musician, composer, and singer Roy Ayers is also quite a comedian. The audience spent almost as much time laughing as tapping their feet and clapping their hands to the music. Ayers' jokes, skits, and down-to-earth nature, made it easy for him to recieve a very enthusiatic response from the audience. Besides, as Roy put it, "I don't like dull, tired crowds!"

The instrument which Roy Ayers plays is called a Deagan Vibraharp or the "Vibes", and he plays it beautifully. The Roy Ayers' band was also extremely talented as Ayers had no qualms about mentioning, "my band is bad!" Particularly outstanding were drummer Dukejue Perdue, who could do more with his feet than many drummers can do with their hands, and Saundra Matthews, whose voice range and jazz style can be compared to only one other female vocalist - Phyliss Hyman.

After his performance, Ayers went to the lobby to sign autographs. As he said to one fan, "I like to be close to the people."

What is often the case at concerts is that when the opening group is really good the main group is very dissappointing. However, Phyliss Hyman killed this theory with a startling display of showmanship and talent. Phyliss stole the show with just three musicians,(although very talented) and no backgroup singers. Like Roy Ayers, Hyman spent a lot of time talking to the audience. She was so confident and relaxed on stage that there were times when I felt she was only talking to me. One of my friends put it very well when she said "Phyliss was raw, even brazen yet she was very much a lady."

Hyman's strong jazz influence and style came through in all of her ballets, even the more up tempo R + B numvers. She used the "scating" style of singing often, something done very rarely in popular music and done well even more rarely. At one point, Hyman even whistled part of a song and sounded like a finely tuned instrument.

Phyliss Hyman talked to the audience about how she began her career, her experiences in the Broadway production "Sophisicated Ladies," her love life, and even the commercial jingles she sings for televison. Like Roy Ayers, she was very funny and proved to be not only a brilliant singer and song writer but a very capable entertainer.

Anyway, like I said, "You had to be there." Ayers and Hyman complimented each other so well with Ayers bringing the audience to their feet and Hynman mellowing them out and bringing it home. Both artists even took the time iout to acknowledge outstanding author James Baldwin, who recieved a standing ovation (as did the two featured performers).

The only negative aspect I found was when Phyliss Hyman began singing her commercial jingles and it became slighty borin g. This was very easy to overlook as the performances of these two great artists, their music, talent, creativity, and message made this concert one of the most memorable and successful shows the valley has or will ever see.

Black Greeks: A Look At Their Effect On Our Community

by Segun Eubanks
and Rod Clare
Nummo Staff

Editor's Note: Over the past couple of years traditionally Black fraternities and sororities have grown tremendously in our community. Three years ago there were no Black frats or sororities on campus. Today there are at least four fraternities and one sorority either established or in the process of being established.

These new organizations are effecting our community in many different ways. Some people say that they are the best thing that could happen in our community because of the strive toward academic achievement, while others believe the represent divisiveness and elitism.

NUMMO NEWS interviewed four brothers (brothers in the community sense, not neccessarily fraternity sense) who are either members of a fraternity, pledging a fraternity or attempting to initiate a new chapter, to find what their views are on the effect of frats in the Black community.

This is part one of a four part series on fraternities and sororities. In the near future NUMMO will interview sisters involved in sororities, members of the community who are opposed to Black Greek organizations and Black students and administrators who will attempt to analyze the over-all effect that the organizations are having on our community.

The following four men met with reporters from NUMMO NEWS to give their views on Black Fraternities:

Crescent (pledgee) of Phi Beta Sigma, Charles Anthony Sheffield.
Crescent (pledgee) of Phi Beta Sigma, A. Anthony Gee.
Potential pledgee of Omega Psi Phi, D. Anderson Hooker.
Brother of Iota Phi Theta, Richard Steward.

NUMMO: Why are you, personally, interested in fraternities?

Sheffield: Personally I ws not interested in fraternities, but when I met a very positive person Roscoe Robinson, who was doing things to lay ground for his fraternity (Phi Beta Sigma), I saw his dedication. And also I had gone to Boston and had met members of his fraternity who are all professional people and they are striving for excellence. I realized that this thing could be positive and I realized also that the brotherhood that they were pronouncing was truly there and it could help this starving community.

Gee: I would just like to say that it's tough trying to make it to the top and I don't think that anybody can di it alone. You need other positive people behind you, with you, in order to geop you reach your goal as a person, as an individual, as anyone. Everybody should set a goal for themselves, everybody should pursue excellence, everybody should set thempursue excellence, everybody should strive for the best. I believe fraternities can make this goal a little easier, can provide a vehicle for this.

Hooker: I, personally, have been studying networking as a means of uplifting the community and ways of providing services, as far as health services are concerned, as far as social services are concerned, providing social support networks. And just looking at the entire networking concept you see that fraternities and sororities are that networking concept in action and it wouldn't make sense to not be involved in some sense in that networking process.

Steward: The reason I got involved in a fraternity is because I wanted to feel some unity on campus. I'm from an all white community and before college I was not exposed to Black awareness, Black togetherness. I felt that by joining a fraternity it would help me in a further understanding of the Black community, our work and just to be part of the community as one where I could interact and understand the goals of the Black people on the campus.

NUMMO: How are you (Black Fraternities) affecting the community? Positively and negatively.

Steward: I feel that there is a positive effect of Black fraternities on campus because it brings us together. We are all going for a certain goal, the same goal, to be unified. And now with different fraternities on campus, Sigma's, Q's (Omega's) and other people already on campus, we have to work together a lot better so we can get that goal accomplished. If you want to hold a function to get people aware of what's going on, financial aid for example, or if it's just a question concerning Black History Month or whatever it might be. With a stronger group we can accomplish the task alot easier than just by ourselves.

Hooker: I realize that ther is both a positive and a negative infuence of fraternities on campus. The positive aspects are that you see organizationally, people striving for excellence and striving to find ways to impact their community. It's an attractive force for those who might want to come to the University. They see positive images and people who are here who haven't quite developed an image for themselves can also develop positive role models, not only in the administration, but also within the student body. On the negative side, and this isn't necessarily something that has to be but at present it has been, is that people from outside usually recognize fraternities as cliques. And to a certain extent they are cliques in that they separate people who have achieved a certain level of scholarship, a certain ability to relate to themselves and others, a certain way of carrying themselves. The more positive people have found a way to strive further so others look at that as something that is separate of cliquish and it doesn't necessarily have to be that way, but it does seem to have had some kind of a schizematic effect, or providing some kind of schizm on campus.

Gee: I just want to touch on what he (Hooker) said about the clique. I Believe that this is a very negative aspect of a fraternity. I believe no fraternity should do that or should exemplify anything like that. I believe that if you make it to your goal you should turn around and lift somebody else up to their goal. You just can't turn around and say, "I reached my goal and now you reach yours the best way yu can." I believe that the fraternities should act as a vehicle to Strike on campus protests arms race

By LAURA KOESTER
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts participated yesterday in a nationwide student strike to protest militarism, nuclear arms and U.S. foreign policy.

Hundreds of students skipped classes and basked in the sunshine on the pond side of the Student Union to support the "No Business as Usual" sit-in which included music, speakers on South Korea, Vietnam, Central America and South Africa, as well as a die-in, a peace camp, theater and free films.

"The idea of no business as usual is that you don't go through the daily routine, that you stop and think about what's going on," Steve Shuster, a rally organizer said. "It's informational and has serious overtones, but the rally is also meant to be fun and festive."

As part of the day's activities, two puppets, one a paper mache globe and the other a missile in pursuit, paraded around campus and visited classrooms to protest the arms race.

Students at the rally were also asked to participate by writing down what they would miss if a nuclear war destroyed life on earth and to submit photos and other memorabilia which will be sent to President Ronald Reagan.

"I think the rally is a good thing, but I think people should worry about feeding the hungry in their own backyard first," Joe Eapen, a 22-year-old engineering student said.

Twenty-five to 30 students have set up a peace campsite and plan to spend the night on the lawn by the campus pond. Peace campers are sewing "peace ribbons" depicting scenes of what they would miss if the world were destroyed by nuclear war, according to camper Carolyn Frimeter, a junior from Bedford.

"No matter what it takes, we must prevent Word War III. People realize that the way we are going will lead to annihilation. The nuclear clock stands at five to midnight," warned Fiona Macaulay, a 23-year-old student speaker from England.

Macaulay asked students, "How would you feel if you knew that life would be ending very soon?" Approximately 20 students then fell to the ground in a "die-in".

"War is about people dying, it's not about ideologies or abstractions," Macaulay said.

One of the students who fell to the ground was wrapped in an American flag. Joseph Tower, an eighteen year-old ROTC cadet from Easthampton, went over and removed the flag because "It was on the ground. It's a matter of simple respect."

"No one wants a nuclear war. Our job in the military is to prepare for war if it does come. I don't believe in the continued build-up of nuclear arms, but as long as there's a balance of power, it will prevent nuclear conflict," Tower said.

ROTC cadet Scott Sheridan from Wellesley said he felt the rally was ineffectual. "This is blatant emotionalism. If you want to educate people, give them detailed literature."

Report reveals stock holdings

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Two banks tied with South African business have been found to be connected with the University of Massachusetts' investment portfolio, according to an investigative report released yesterday.

The Commission to Investigate South African Investments which sent its report yesterday to UMass President David C. Knapp and the board of trustees, revealed that J.P. Morgan and Company Inc., and Banker's Trust of New York Corporation are included in the University's investment portfolio.

The commission, comprised of students, faculty and Dennis L. Madson, vice chancellor for student affairs, was formed after negotiations were made as a result of a three-day sit-in at the Whitmore administration building.

In the nine-page report, the commission recommends to "implement section 2(a) of the University's investment policy by May 8, by instructing (UMass) Treasurer (Robert) Brand to immediately divest University stockholding from J.P. Morgan and Company Inc., and Banker's Trust of New York Corporation."

UMass student Beatrix Hoffman, a member of the commission, said news of the banks came as "a surprise" while it was investigating three companies, Procter and Gamble, Foxboro, and Thomas and Betts.

The report also asks that the University divest its holdings in Procter and Gamble and the Foxboro Company. The Thomas and Betts company does not do business in South Africa.

Brand told the commission that the University has $56,000 in 14,000 stocks invested in J.P. Morgan, Hoffman said. Chris Alibrandi, another commission member, said that the school also owns 14,000 stocks invested in Banker's Trust.

Brand was not available for comment.

"We are morally outraged and shocked," upon the findings, she said. "They should have divested from banks in 1977."

On September 14, 1977, the University voted to divest all stocks in corporations operating in South Africa, after months of debate and student advocacy.

However, after investigating the University's stock holding, the Student Center for Research and Advocacy last year found that UMass had approximately $350,000 worth of stocks in six corporations doing business in the racially-divided country.

Subsequently, the University divested from three corporations—American Hospital Supply, General Signal and Tektronix Corporations.

The report also recommends that SCERA find a student to be appointed by Knapp, to monitor the activities of the treasurer's office regarding any South African investments.

The report also recommended a rewording of the University's investment policy section 2(a) which now reads: "The University will not invest in corporations or businesses that operate in South Africa or in countries that have similar apartheid racial policies," to read: "The University will not invest in any company or lending institution doing business in or with the Republic of South Africa or whose subsidiary or affiliate does business in or with the Republic of South Africa or in countries with similar apartheid racial policies."

Esther Terry, professor of Afro-American studies and a member of the commission said she is "optimistic" about the outcome.

There will be a rally at noon tomorrow on the Student Union steps to protest the bank investments and to pressure administrators to accept the recommendations in the report.

"If the president (Knapp) and the trustees are aware of what's going on in the country (South Africa), it would be unwise for them not to accept these recommendations," Hoffman said.

Fall of Saigon remembered

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

Today marks the 10th anniversary of the end of American involvement in Vietnam with the fall of Saigon, but to many Vietnam veterans, the resulting problems are far from over.

Saigon fell as North Vietnamese troops were advancing toward the city. It would mark the end of South Vietnam, and as the last helicopter took off from the U.S. Embassy 10 years ago today, America would feel its worst, most humiliating military defeat.

Dick Bonneau, a veteran who served in the Marines in Vietnam from 1968 to 1970, said although the war ended 10 years ago, he would like to see more attention paid to Vietnam veterans who "are still fighting the war."

"Mostly, Vietnam vets need to be cherished," and realized as an important contribution to America's history, Bonneau said.

He said today will make him think about the time he passed through a Vietnamese village that was empty. Later, at the end of his tour, passing through the village, Bonneau said the village had inhabitants and he felt as though he had accomplished something by allowing people to feel safe enough to live there. However, he said when Saigon fell, there existed a feeling of loss that all was done in vain.

"To lose in '75, it recapitulated my feelings of futility. I had thought I had done something," he said.

Bonneau, who is a readjustment specialist at the Vietnam Veterans Outreach Center in Springfield, said a lot of veterans who got back from the war searched for help that was all too difficult to find.

Commentary

By BILL PARENT
Special to the Collegian

On April 30, 1975, the Daily Collegian was almost alone in printing a banner headline: "The War Is Over." Other newspapers less dramatically announced that the American Embassy had been seized by North Vietnamese troops. "The War Is Over" was a little too celebratory for them, too closely associated with V-E and V-J Days, confetti and parades and pictures of our parents, at our age, locked in passionate and grateful kisses on piers and trian platforms. "The War Is Over" fit when Johnny came marching home a clear and rightful winner. On April 30, 1975, Johnny was hanging out of a helicopter, prying desperate hands from the skids, wanting just to get out alive.

Perhaps because Vietnam was fraught with deception in the way it was fought and justified, its history has few simple, accepted facts. One exception is that it ended, for us, a decade ago. The rest is remembered in disjointed images, a cacaphony of slogans and arguments, popular songs and unpopular speeches. Above all else, we remember the damage.

By 1968, the war in Vietnam had ripped this country in half. Fathers, who had friends who bled to death beneath a flag at Okinawa and Normandy, watched college kids burn and urinate on the same flag. Protesting sons and daughters, for their part, could not understand how an older generation could be blind to shameless escalations and bombings against a scared people and in defense of a corrupt and uncertain ally.

Reagan defends visit to German cemetery

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Reagan, on the eve of departing for a 10-day European trip, declared firmly yesterday he will visit a German cemetery where Nazi SS soldiers are buried, saying it was "morally right."

Vice President George Bush, meanwhile, called on the nation to support Reagan in what he said "has been a very difficult time for everyone and especially so for the president."

Reagan sets out tonight on an overnight flight to Bonn, West Germany, for the annual summit of the seven major industrialized democracies, where he hopes to nail down a date for the start of a new round of international trade talks.

Dartmouth will divest its $2 million in stocks

(AP) - Dartmouth College said yesterday it is selling about $2 million in shares in two companies that have business dealings with South Africa, while protests against apartheid continued at Cornell and the University of California.

Dartmouth trustees decided to sell holdings in the Republic Bank of Dallas and Kimberly-Clark Corp., of Neenah, Wisc., said college President David McLaughlin.

The sales are not a response to campus pressure but are in line with the college's policies on investments in businesses with South African holdings, he said.

Dartmouth will sell $1.2 million in holdings in Republic Bank of Dallas, which the Ivy League college says has indicated a willingness to lend to the South African government.

Dartmouth also will sell holdings worth about $800,000 in Kimberly-Clark, which owns 39 percent of Carlton Paper Corp., a South African business. Kimberly-Clark failed to demonstrate to the college that Carlton was following the Sullivan Principles, voluntary guidelines for American companies doing business in South Africa.

Former education secretary to speak on current policies

By STEVE HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

The former U.S. Secretary of Education chosen by President Ronald Reagan to dismantle the Department of Education, will speak on the present condition of American education at 8 p.m. today in the Student Union Ballroom.

Terrel H. Bell was sworn in as Secretary of Education in Jan. 1981 with the purpose of abolishing his position, but left office in Dec. 1984 feeling that "my earlier proposal (to abolish the department) was not a position I could support," he said in a recent interview.

Bell wrote the bill which proposed that the Department of Education become a lower-level structure patterned after the National Science Foundation, he said.

However, the proposal was not enacted by Congress because conservatives wanted to totally eliminate a federal education department and liberals wanted to keep it at the cabinet level, he said.

"Early in my experience in Washington I felt it wouldn't make a significant difference if we were not an independent cabinet, but I began to realize it was important to have an education department at the cabinet level," Bell said.

"Thirty percent of the people in this country are involved in education," as students or employees, he said, "and this year the federal government will spend $17.9 billion on education.

"With that size of an enterprise we need to have a cabinet-level department of education."

Bell said his most important achievement as Secretary of Education was "without question the report of the National Commission on Excellence in Education," which he called for in 1981.

The report by the commission was titled "A Nation at Risk: The Imperative for Educational Reform" and stated "the educational foundations of our society are presently being eroded by a rising tide of mediocrity." It advised students that "you forfeit your chance for life at its fullest when you withhold your best efforts in learning."

Before serving in President Reagan's cabinet, Bell was a school superintendent in Idaho, Wyoming and Utah, and was Commissioner of Higher Education and Chief Executive Officer of the Utah Board of Regents.

Bell, who has authored six books and over 40 articles, worked with UMass Chancellor Joseph Duffey at a conference of the State Higher Executive Officers organization.

"I know Chancellor Duffey well," he said. "We've talked about student aid problems."

Bell is currently a professor of educational administration at the University of Utah, where he has "brought a bit of insight about school politics on the national level."

Today's lecture is sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Sink pulled from wall at party

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

Extensive damage was reported in Baker House after police broke up a large party on the third floor early Sunday morning.

Hot water from a third floor flooded down to the basement after a sink was ripped from the wall during the party, University of Massachusetts police said.

Environmental Health and Safety officials were called in to turn off the hot water valves after police found the damage. Malicious damage was also done to a stairwell window, two fire extinguisher signs and a bulletin board. Police said a fire extinguisher box was smashed and electrical wires were ripped out of a wall.

In other police news:

● An unidentified man grabbed a woman and punched her in the face Friday night as she was walking by Johnson House, police said. The non-student reported that three men walked past her and one of them grabbed her arm, and hit her for no apparent reason. Police said the woman received minor injuries.

● Police caught two students Saturday night trying to steal signs from a parking lot booth and the Fine Arts Center. Police observed two men trying to take down a concert hall sign and were questioned. They were told to make restitution by returning and re-attaching the stolen sign to the lot 71 parking booth.

● An intoxicated student was restrained while he was being treated for head injuries after he fell down a flight of stairs Saturday night. The man fell down the 17th floor stairs in Washington Tower and was taken to University Health Services. Police said he started to struggle on the examining table and was placed in protective custody.

UMass Greek area residents applauded at annual banquet

By BETHANNE MOSKOV
Collegian Staff

Members of the University of Massachusetts Greek area were honored for outstanding leadership, membership, and contribution to the community at a banquet held last week.

Robert C. White, Greek area coordinator, began the presentation by awarding the Gamma Gamma awards to nine Greeks who were active in their chapter, and lived up to the national ideas of their house.

"We are working hard to give the Greeks a better image(at UMass)" White said. "Each member of the Greek system has the potential to work hard in a positive direction. We are awarding only a few for their contributions but it takes everyone's help to reach the goals that we want to reach."

The recipients were: David Hill and Mike Kaplan, both from Lambda Chi Alpha, Kristian Anderson of Kappa Kappa Gamma, Nick Katsoulas and Rick Sherman, both of Delta Upsilon, Brian Bartkus of Delta Chi, Linda Cleary of Phi Mu, Mary Wellen of Alpha Chi Omega and Karen Lawn of Iota Gamma Upsilon.

Panhellenic and Interfraternity Council awards were given to Sigma Sigma Sigma for the best overall improved sorority, and to Theta Chi for most improved fraternity. Jodi Leshne of Iota Gamma Upsilon and Dave Gaudet of Beta Kappa Phi were named top Greek presidents.

Dave Doran of Zeta Psi and Tracy Lee Maker of Alpha Chi Omega were named Greek man and woman of the year for outstanding membership and overall contributions to the Greek area.

Doran, president of his chapter and the Interfraternity Council said, "We have set a lot of high goals for the upcoming year. We want to work hard to better unite the Greek system so that members can get the most out of their involvement."

Gold and silver awards for overall excellence within a chapter were won by Kappa Kappa Gamma for the gold and Sigma Sigma Sigma for the silver.

The award for the highest grade point average went to Alpha Epsilon Pi for demonstrating high academic skills.

Finally, the Brad Ringquist award was given to Katy Newell of Phi Mu. This award is given annually in honor of Brad Ringquist, a UMass fraternity member who was killed in an auto accident, to a member of the Greek area who demonstrates enthusiasm and leadership.

Memorial commemorates Armenian genocide

Seven members of the University of Massachusetts Armenian Club traveled to Washington, D.C. this weekend to participate in the commemoration of Armenian genocide in which 1.5 million Armenians were killed by the Turkish government in 1915.

Talin Tamzarian, a senior from Wayland who participated in the weekend's events, said that the reason for holding the events was "to recommit and re-educate Armenians and the public about what happened. We try to get the media's attention too.

"The Turkish government denies today that it ever happened. Approximately half of the Armenian population was either killed or deported by them," she said.

The groups attending the memorial held an all-night vigil on Saturday and survivors of the genocide participated.

"It was very emotional," Tamzarian said. "Seeing them as survivors and everything they've gone through...I've got a responsibility to them, to remind people what happened."

On Friday night, a concert of traditional Armenian music was performed and on Saturday, a number of speakers and seminars were presented. Among those present was Gov. George Deukmejian of California, an Armenian.

"You can never pay back for killing but recognition can be given for those who died," Tamzarian said. "Here, as a club, we try to educate people on our campus of what happened."

Plans have begun to revitalize once active Lesbian Union

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

Although for the last two semesters the Lesbian Union at the University of Massachusetts has consisted of little more than their name on the door of an office on the fourth floor of the Student Union Building, plans have begun to bring it back to life.

According to UMass student and new co-director of the union, Debra Kenn, when she first made inquiries in March about taking it over, she discovered the accounts were frozen, there was no constitution, the budget needed reworking, there was no advisor, and the office was a mess.

"Two years ago, the Lesbian Union was very active," recalled lesbian student Tammy Boots, adding that it since died out as a result of splitting into a political faction and social faction.

"The founders of the political faction graduated and left a social faction that had little interest," she said, adding, "The paperwork wasn't getting done and the union became non-existent."

Now, according to Kenn, the paperwork is back under control again along with the accounts that have been unfrozen, the new constitution is being ratified, the office is being treated to a new coat of paint and an advisor from the Student Activities Office is helping.

The revived union will provide lesbian students with "a comfortable all-women environment where they can discuss lesbian issues," Kenn said, adding that it will also help alleviate the current campus problem in which "lesbians don't know where to meet other lesbians," she said.

"A primary goal of the union will be to provide support," commented Jennifer Brauer, co-director with Kenn, who recalled that without support she "walked around for 19 years thinking I was the only person like this."

"We have to support each other," agreed Boots, remarking that the needs of lesbian students demanded an all-women space separate from the UMass Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance (LBGA) which is dominated by gay men.

"Because lesbian women are doubly oppressed," she said, they are subject to "different forms of abuse and discrimination than gay men."

"Gay men still have their male status," agreed Kenn, observing that although the LBGA is supportive of lesbians and bisexuals, it still fails to include women on its board.

Asked what hopes she had for the future of the union, Brauer replied she would like to see "more people involved, a community spirit, and the setting up of networks with other colleges."

"Unity" is what Kenn hopes for. "I want to see unity within the semester and then continuing from semester to semester," she said, adding that her primary wish is to "see it grow, not die."

"With a lot of women's help," she stressed, "we can make this a really good organization."

The Lesbian Union meets at 7 p.m. in 406G Tuesdays and Wednesdays. All women are welcome and encouraged to come.

'Fun Day' to celebrate sights, sounds of spring

The rites of spring will be celebrated tomorrow in an all-day event on the Amherst Common as part of May Day.

Sponsored by the University of Massachusetts art department, and funded by UMass Arts Council, the "Fun Day" tradition comprises visual and performance art, and the Common will come alive in a bloom of colorful kites, sails, costumes and painted environmental sculpture.

The event is being coordinated by John Grillo, art professor at the University, and guest artist Gregory Curci, a Boston sculptor who teaches at the UMass harbor campus.

The work of students will be featured in the celebration which is open to the public and offers attractions for both children and adults.

The Common will be transformed with color and shapes to represent the rites of spring. An environmental sculpture will cause sensations and change attitudes.

TRUTH BEHIND THE STORY

Several years ago, the Armenians alleged that the Turkish government killed 600,000 people. Last year the Armenians alleged the Armenian Genocide death toll was one million. This year's posters allege 1.5 million were killed. The death toll seems to be compounding annually. In reality, in 1915, the total population of Anatolia was about 15 million people; the Armenians were considered a small minority group in international conferences held before and after World War I.

In 1915, when the alleged Armenian Genocide occured, The Ottoman Empire was fighting in World War I in Western Anatolia. The Armenians, taking the advantage of the Empire's attention to World War I, stirred up rivalries in Eastern Anatolia. With the help of the Russian government, the Armenians strove to initiate the FIRST Armenian republic. The Ottoman Empire, with fighting in the East and West, chose to exile the Armenians, sending them over the southern border to Syria. In the armed Armenian resistance to exile, many Turkish and Armenian people were killed. Justin McCarthy, a professor of Middle Eastern history at the University of Louisville and the author of "Muslims and Minorities", states "...many more Turks died than Armenians. Most, who died on both sides, died more of starvation and disease than from bullets". This mutual killing is labeled as Armenian Genocide. Yet, many Armenians are slinging 'buzz' words and pictures borrowed from Jewish Holocaust, at The Turkish Republic and people.

During the past five years, Armenian terrorists have massacred more than 100 unarmed Turkish diplomats and citizens. Although the Armenian terrorists defended their actions in court as their response to an Armenian Genocide, these courts of many countries are sending Armenian terrorists to prison for long-term and life sentences. Many world-wide powers view the notion of an Armenian Genocide as contrived, gratuitous and fallacious.

Remembering the fall

"Picture this," a speaker says at a rally by the Campus Center. "Double the number of students enrolled at this university all assembled around the campus pond, squeezed together. Then picture the same number of caskets, and add the rest of the population of Amherst to the pile. Then think, that's only our side's losses."

By 1972, Vietnam had ripped this country in quarters. Returning veterans, mostly poor and minorities, had little appreciation for those who stayed home protesting on the soldiers' behalf. It seemed that if you weren't bitter and cynical, you were angry and violent, no matter which side you were on.

And Vietnam is still ripping some individuals apart from within. On the afternoon Doug Flutie completed his miracle pass in Miami, a funeral was held in Wakefield for a Vietnam vet who had killed himself. He was 35 years old. No surprise. A relief, in fact, a peace after 13 years of self-destructive restlessness. In high school, my sister had a crush on him.

"Picture this," a speaker says at a rally by the Campus Center. "Double the number of students enrolled at this university all assembled around the campus pond, squeezed together. Then picture the same number of caskets, and add the rest of the population of Amherst to the pile. Then think, that's only our side's losses."

Picture about 50 18 and 19-year-olds in a Cambridge draft board. A sergeant comes in and orders everyone with a deferment to one side of the room and everyone without a deferment to the other. With a few exceptions, the white kids shuffle one way, and the black and brown kids go to the other. We go off to college, they disappear into the wall.

Meanwhile, we watched the media. "Men all around me were screaming," wrote Jack P. Smith in the Saturday Evening Post. "The fire was now a continuous roar. We were being fired at by our own guys. No one knew where the fire was coming from, and so the men were shooting everywhere. Some were in shock and were blazing away at everything they saw or imagined they saw...I felt terribly alone...All afternoon there was smoke, screaming, moaning, fear, bullets, blood, and little yellow men running around screeching with glee when they found one of us alive, or screaming and moaning with fear when they ran into a grenade or a bullet."

Vietnam was, to borrow Barbara Tuchman's phrase, a march of folly. And who was to blame? Not the soldier. Believe it or not, from the first battle at Ia Drang in 1965 to the troop withdrawals in 1973, the U.S. Army won every battle it fought against the Vietcong and the North Vietnamese. In no other war, could an infantry make that claim. The blame belongs to the presidents, generals and analysts who failed to realize the futility of the cause. The war was lost between battles as American soldiers were ambushed, shelled, land mined, sniped at and booby-trapped. In Vietnam, the United States was too committed to fighting communism to withdraw, but not committed enough to the South Vietnamese cause, whatever that was, to win.

The result was a debacle. When I think of Vietnam, I think of 58,022 guys who missed the sixth game of the 1975 World Series and everything else they were dreaming of when the shell hit. I remember the headline: "The War Is Over."

Well, we thought so, but we may have been premature in our judgment. Seven years later, as they dedicated the Vietnam Memorial in Washington, it seemed time to say, again, the war is over, and some did. In the past month, however, as the media have been picking through the rubble for meanings and lessons, it seems that the war in Vietnam is not nearly over. Perhaps an entire generation has to pass it on, every direct memory has to disappear; perhaps the war in Vietnam will be over 100 years from now. I am beginning to doubt even that. I have listened to the South sing Dixie. The lost wars never seem to end.

Bill Parent was editor in chief of the Collegian in 1975 when the war in Vietnam officially came to an end.

Who are the real idealists?

Loren Spivack

Now that the growing political conservatism among college-age people in America today is undeniable, those who have been resisting this evolution, hoping in vain that this country would return to the insanity that was the 1960s, have turned to publicizing their unsolicited armchair psychoanalysis of college Republicans.

The psychological profile of this new generation of conservatives, promulgated by the old generation of leftists, is as erronious as it is malicious. In a nutshell, young Republicans are accused of being interested only in getting a high-paying job and driving a BMW. We are condemned for having lost interest in the radical political aspirations which were the hallmark of students during the 1960s. We have, according to our detractors, lost our idealism. It seems hard to believe that 15 years ago one's avoidance of bathtubs and barbershops was considered a sign of idealism.

The "idealism" of the 1960s was the counter-culture and the drug scene. It was the rejection of family and national values. The product of people who didn't expect to leave school or work or have a family or indeed to grow up at all, it was the idealism of irresponsibility.

On a political level, 1960s "idealism" meant blanket condemnation of the foreign policy of the United States. The values of American liberty and democracy which had been maintained and defended for 200 years at the cost of hundreds of thousands of lives were discarded in deference to the political "rights" of such despots and usurpers as Ho Chi Minh and Mao Tse Tung and the national "integrity" of such imperialist dictatorships as North Vietnam and the Soviet Union.

During the era of the "Great Society" the fashionable social "ideal" was the welfare state. Clearly, this was a system based on the presumption of failure. When an economic strategy is founded not upon opportunity but upon the assumption that it is inadequate and hence is devoted primarily to providing the "necessary" compensation for its own shortcomings, the battle is already lost. The "idealism" that brought us the welfare state was, in fact, the "idealism" of despair.

In contrast with the destructive immaturity which characterized young people during the Vietnam era, and which the more backward elements of the University community would have us return to, the attitude of today's students is more conservative, more future-oriented and, yes, more idealistic. Conservative Republicans are the real idealists. It is for this reason that the future we believe in is ours to create.

Young Republicans are some of the most truly idealistic people I have ever known; Students idealistic enough to believe that they can make American society work instead of rejecting it out of hand; People with the idealism to raise a family and trust in (and make) a future for themselves and their country. I have seen the kind of idealism that believes in maintaining the great principles that our ancestors fought for and in creating a society of opportunity instead of turning, helplessly, to the welfare system. I have seen in the conservatives of my generation the idealism to believe in all of these things, and what is more, I have seen the energy to make them happen.

Respect takes time

What does David Moore mean by his term "polite racism" (yesterday's Collegian)? This term and David Moore's insinuations concerning the Undergraduate Student Senate are totally unfounded and out of line.

There is no "collective subtle effort to undermine the authority of John Ruddock..." The senate has students of all different political and personal beliefs and values, and these senators do not always agree on the manner that John Ruddock conducts the senate meeting. It must be pointed out that senators did not always agree with Chris Sullivan either.

Sullivan was the speaker for two years. Ruddock has been the speaker for one month. Ruddock must learn the ropes of the speakership and impress upon the senators in time of his capabilities. No one just automatically accepts total authority from one figure all at once; it takes time to become acquainted with people. Looking back in history, Sullivan did not have an easy time in the beginning of his term as the speaker. Ruddock is new in his position, and therefore new to many members of the senate in the powerful position as the speaker. In time, I am sure that Ruddock will encounter less questioning and opposition on his validity as the speaker.

The claim that Ruddock is not respected due to his color is ludicrous and an insult to the senate body. If Moore is so sure of this belief, then he should come up with more concrete facts and fewer vague accusations that are personally insulting. The only political conspiracy going on within the senate is the untrue slander of Moore towards senate members. I suggest that Moore should consider himself "too far out of hand" in his obvious miscalculations and derogatory remarks concerning actions within the senate.

Clarification of SWAG campaign literature

I would like to take this opportunity to address some misconceptions that might have arisen regarding the recent Southwest Area Government elections. After discussing the campaign with the other candidates, Eileen O'Dea and Steve Stomski, I have come to the following conclusions.

The Assistant Director of Housing Services Chas Durant had asked one of them if they had thought of running for SWAG president. Durant then suggested that "people are waiting for someone to run against him." (referring to myself)

This incident was neither solicited nor welcomed by O'Dea or Stomski, nor was it the determining factor in their decision to run. Both O'Dea and Stomski had participated in student government in the past and have proven themselves as strong advocates of student rights. They do not condone the efforts by individual administrators that aided their campaign or hindered mine.

I apologize to O'Dea and Stomski for the impact that my campaign literature might have had on them personally, and I am requesting that residents of Southwest direct their anger and frustration not to O'Dea, Stomski or the Southwest RA staff, but rather to those individual administrators responsible.

Bill Collins

He said many veterans were offered either total sick-role help where they had to say they had addictions or mental problems or no help at all. Centers like the one he works at, offer the "in-between" help many veterans need.

"I went to Vietnam and learned about love. That kind of love, to lay down your life for someone, has been hard to find back here," he said.

Arthur Hilson, director of Veterans Assistance Counseling service at the University of Massachusetts, said he has been exposed to a variety of perceptions about today's anniversary.

"Some of the perceptions are good and others are bitter," Hilson said. It involved "lives of thousands of young men who weren't understood."

Hilson, a Navy veteran of 20 years, served in Vietnam in 1968. He said many people have become more aware of the Vietnam veteran's plight of readjustment, but to some "it's a half-hearted recovery."

"A lot of folks are coming out of the woodwork, but a lot aren't coming out," Hilson said. The U.S. government hasn't been willing to endorse readjustment or support programs in the past, Hilson said, adding that the first real public acknowledgement will be a New York City ticker-tape parade scheduled for May 7.

Johnny Green, an army veteran who served two separate terms in Vietnam, said he was one of the fortunate ones who went to Vietnam. However, he said he doesn't know why the U.S. was there and he still doesn't.

On the day Saigon fell, Green said he had mixed emotions."It wasn't a surprise that Saigon fell. I wasted three years of my life."

Looking back, Green said the saddest thing "is that the only time the races come together is during a combat situation--and that is a shame."

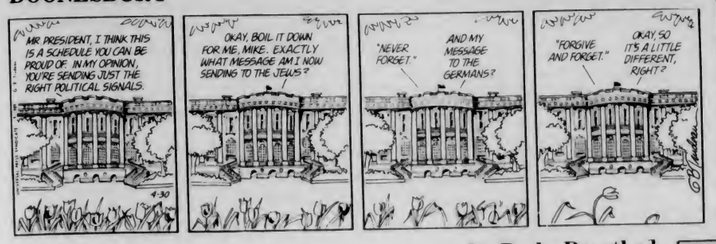
DOONESBURY By Garry Trudeau



MR. PRESIDENT, I THINK THIS IS A SCHEDULE YOU CAN BE PROUD OF. IN MY OPINION, YOU'RE SENDING JUST THE RIGHT POLITICAL SIGNALS.
OKAY, BOIL IT DOWN FOR ME, MIKE. EXACTLY WHAT MESSAGE AM I NOW SENDING TO THE JEWS?
"NEVER FORGET."
AND MY MESSAGE TO THE GERMANS?
"FORGIVE AND FORGET."
OKAY, SO IT'S A LITTLE DIFFERENT, RIGHT?

BLOOM COUNTY By Berke Breathed

AH...THE AIR! TODAY THE AIR SMELLS SO SO AIRY!
ISN'T THE GRASS LOOKING ESPECIALLY LOVELY TODAY? AND THE ROCKS! SO SO BEAUTIFULLY SCULPTED! SO SO NICELY SHAPED!
WHAT'S WRONG WITH YOU?
LOVE! I'M IN LOVE! IT CHANGES ONE'S OUTLOOK ON THE WORLD!
SO DOES DRINKING MOLDY EGGNOG
LOOK! ASPHALT!

Yesthead By Jason Talerman

Yo, Travis, wrats up?
Not much Jim how bout your self?
you goin to the protest?
No why should I?
you should there's going to be some really good movies ard
Hey don't patronize me I saw First Blood!
sorry my mistake

GORDY By Gorde

C'MON, MANGO, GREW THE DOOR. IT COULD BE WORSE!
SOB WHIMPER SNIFF SMASH!
WHY MUST LIFE BE SO ★@#?! CRUEL! HOW COULD THIS POSSIBLY HAPPEN?
HI, ROOF
OH, OH, OH, "SNIFF" THE AGONIZING PAINS OF TIME!
WHAT'S WITH MANGO?
HE JUST LEARNED THE DRAKE IS CLOSING SOB WAAH!

Back to the daily grind: Minutemen host UConn

Playoff-bound UMass hurting

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Coming off of five hours of tension-filled baseball on a rainy Sunday that resulted in a win, and more importantly a berth in this weekend's Atlantic 10 championships, the last thing the University of Massachusetts baseball team wants to do is play another game.

But regional rival University of Connecticut invades Earl Lorden field this afternoon for a 3 p.m. clash that, other than for pride, is meaningless for both teams.

The Huskies wrapped up a berth in the Big East playoffs with a victory over St. John's over the weekend. At 10-5, UConn is in first place in the conference's northern division. The Huskies are 16-19-1 overall and have already lost to UMass, 6-3 back on April 2.

"It's a tough game to play," UMass manager Dick Bergquist said after his team beat Rutgers 10-8 on Sunday after a rain-delay helped UMass overcome a 7-1 deficit. "They're a good team that usually gives us a good game, so I wish we could be a little more mentally ready."

The Minutemen, 20-14, are also experiencing injury problems. Firstbaseman Jeff Cimini and his .395 batting average are lost for the season after the junior underwent knee surgery last week. On Sunday, freshman pitcher/firstbaseman/outfielder Matt Sheran separated his shoulder in a collision at the plate and is gone for the year. Sheran was playing Cimini's spot and hitting .304. The next firstbaseman in line, designated hitter Todd Comeau, UMass' career hit leader, suffered an ankle injury and is questionable for a few days. Catcher/outfielder Dan Clifford will see time at first due to all of the injuries.

"It kills our batting order and our defense to have guys like Cimini and Sheran out," Bergquist said. "Hopefully Comeau will be able to play soon, if we lose him we're in a lot of trouble."

Comeau, at .389 with five homers and 35 runs batted in, has keyed UM's offense this season. Leftfielder Bruce Kingman (.336 with 17 RBI) has broken out of his slump as UMass is batting a high .318 as a team. Opponents are at .263.

Bergquist used most of his pitchers against Rutgers and couldn't name a starter early yesterday. Reliever Jeff Jensen has been a consistent force for UMass out of the bullpen with three wins and four saves in 13 appearances this season. His earned run average is 3.20.

Annual draft war commences today for NFL

By DAN LEBERFELD
Collegian Staff

Today at 8 a.m., the annual National Football League draft gets under way at the Omni Central Hotel in New York City. This is the way one football fanatic sees it going:

1. Buffalo: Bruce Smith, VPI (6-3, 275 DE) Signed, sealed and delivered.
2. Minnesota: Bill Fralic, Pitt (6-5, 285 OT) Vikes need protection for brittle quarterback Tom Kramer.
3. Houston: Ray Childress, Texas (6-6, 270 DE) Not as spectacular as Smith but more consistent.
4. Atlanta: Eddie Brown, Miami (5-11, 185 WR) Bartowski's back and he needs a target.
5. Indianapolis: Al Toon, Wisconsin (6-3, 200 WR) Best athlete in the draft fills Colts' void.
6. Detroit: Ethan Horton, North Carolina (6-3, 222 RB) Billy Sims' bad knee has Lions worried.
7. Cleveland: Jerry Rice, Miss. Valley State (6-2, 197 WR) This pick could go to Bills for LB Chip Banks.
8. Tampa Bay: Ron Holmes, Washington (6-3, 270 DE) Ask UMass coach Bob Stull about Buc's future DE.
9. Philadelphia: Lomas Brown, Florida (6-4, 280 OT) QB Ron Jaworski gets needed help on line.
10. NY Jets: Richard Johnson, Wisconsin (5-11, 195 DB) Jets love to pick best athlete available.
11. Houston: Derrick Furroughs, Memphis State (6-1, 185 DB) This 4.5 sprinter is a player on the rise.
12. San Diego: Chris Doleman, Pitt (6-5, 248 LB) He's too good to let get by.
13. Cincinnati: Duane Bickett USC (6-5, 232 LB) Academic all-America who can play.
14. Green Bay: Ken Ruettgers, USC (6-5, 265 OT) Just the stud the Pack's offensive line needs.
15. Kansas City: George Adams, Kentucky (6-1, 225 RB) Chiefs still haven't recovered from Joe Delaney's death.
16. New England: Jerry Gray, Texas (6-0, 185 DB) To put CB's Ernest Gibson and Ron Lippett out of their misery.
17. Dallas: Vance Johnson, Arizona (5-11, 174 WR) The fastest (4.25) player in the draft.
18. St. Louis: Kevin Allen, Indiana (6-5, 277 OT) With Luis Sharpe's departure, this is a must.
19. NY Giants: Greg Allen, Florida State (5-11, 198 RB) Could be the breakaway back the Giants need.
20. Pittsburgh: Mike Gann, Notre Dame (6-5, 255 DL) Steelers are surprised the Giants let him pass.
21. LA Rams: Kevin Brooks, Michigan (6-6, 260 DE) Rams need successor to Jack Youngblood.
22. Chicago: Garin Veris, Stanford (6-4, 260 DE) All-pro Dan Hampton is hurt for the Bears in this position.
23. LA Raiders: Chris Burkett, Jackson State (6-4, 205 WR) The big play man the Raiders need.
24. New Orleans: Ty Davis, Clemson (5-11, 185 DB) The fast, pure CB.
25. Cincinnati: Emanuel King, Alabama (6-4, 245 LB) The Bengals are elated he's still available.
26. Denver: Jim Lachey, Ohio State (6-6, 270 OT) The true diamond in the rough.
27. Miami: Owen Gill, Iowa (6-1,220 RB) Shula is looking for a stud running back.
28. San Francisco: Freddie Joe Nunn, Mississippi (6-4, 225 LB) He's too good an athlete to pass up

UMass women's track team qualifies for New Englands

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Senior co-captain Leah Loftis sparked the University of Massachusetts women's track team at the Penn Relays in Philadelphia this past weekend.

It was also a weekend where UMass saw everyone qualify for this weekend's New England championships.

Loftis and teammates Sue Goldstein, Kayla Morrison and Barbara Culligan set a school record of 3:48.05 in the 1600 meter (4 by 440) relay. UMass finished fourth in its heat and in the top 12 overall in the event.

The Penn Relays attracted the best teams from all over the country and teams and athletes must qualify to run at the Relays.

Loftis and Culligan also ran on the Minutewomen's distance relay team. Loftis ran the 800 meters (½ mile) in 2:10.5, the fastest time Banda has seen in his five years as coach here.

"Her performance showed what she can do for the future," coach Kalenkeni Banda said. "She ran a strong leg." Loftis is trying to get her time in the 800 down to 2:08 so that she can qualify for the NCAA championships.

The other senior co-captain Maureen O'Reilly led off the distance medley relay by running a personal record 3:38.5 in the ¾ mile. Culligan ran a strong 57.2 for the 400 meters and was followed by Loftis, who has UMass in third place in its heat.

UMass ended up with a not-so-great time of 12:03.7. Freshman Sarah Kitchell has been sick all week and ran a 5:17 mile.

Sunday, the rest of the team that didn't travel to Philadelphia went to the Fitchburg State Invitational. O'Reilly ran a 2:15, close to her best in the half mile and Goldstein ran a 2:19.4, her best ever in the 800 meters. Sally Howes and Chris Pratt also ran to personal bests in the 1500 meters. All four women finished in the top four in their races.

Javelin thrower Debbie Duffy also qualified for this weekend's New England championships with 119 foot, ten inch toss.

Every one of the 13 women on the team qualified for the New England's which run Friday through Saturday at Bowdoin College in Maine.

"We're taking 100 percent of the team to the New England's," Banda said.

UMass makes A-10 playoffs

Softball awaits Rams

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The tension for the University of Massachusetts women's softball team is gone. Going into last weekend, today's game with Rhode Island was supposed to decide the fourth and final Atantic 10 playoff berth.

However, yesterday UMass was awarded the fourth and final berth for this weekend's A-10 championships. Friday through Sunday at Penn State. It's UMass' third tourney appearance in three years.

Thus, today's 2:30 doubleheader with the Rams in Kingston has been reduced to a tuneup for the Minutewomen, who at 21-18-1, have won six in a row.

Only the first game of the doubleheader is a league game and even if Rhody wins, both UMass and URI will have a 4-6 A-10 mark. UMass gets the bid because of a better Division I record.

This is the second year in a row UMass has knocked out Rhode Island for the Atlantic 10 playoff berth. The winner of the A-10 gets an automatic bid to the NCAA's.

"We hope to keep the stability that we have gotten the last six games going," coach Elaine Sortino sid.

Lynn Stockley (12-7, 0.26 ERA, 101 strikeouts) will throw in the first game. Stockley shutout URI 1-0 in Amherst on March 30. Lisa Rever (7-5, 0.78 ERA) is the probable second game starter.

At the plate, UMass has been on a tear with 33 hits in its last four games. Freshman shortstop Paige Kopcza has been on a tear lately. She leads the team with a .490 average. Beth Talbott (.311) and Emily Bietsch (.273) are also hot at the plate.

Pitcher/first baseman Cathy Reed leads the team with 13 RBI.

UMass has split with URI this season. UM won the opener of a doubleheader March 30, 1-0 and lost the nightcap, 7-1. The first game was a league game, the second was not.

Jewish community raps Reagan's cemetery visit

By IAN POLUMBAUM
Collegian Staff

As President Ronald Reagan prepared yesterday for his trip to West Germany, during which he plans to visit a cemetery where members of Hitler's SS are buried, outrage and dismay were voiced in the University of Massachusetts' Jewish community.

The chairman of the University's Judaic studies program, a refugee from Nazi Germany and decorated World War II veteran, said he sent a telegram Monday night to Reagan asking him, as Jewish leaders worldwide have urged in the past week, to cancel the cemetery visit.

At the University, as many as seven groups, including Hillel a Jewish organization on campus, the Newman Center, and the Office of Third World Affairs, will protest Reagan's cemetery visit at noon Friday in front of the Student Union building.

Reagan boarded a flight to Bonn last night, where he will participate in annual West European summit meetings. Monday he said it was "morally right" for him to visit a German war cemetery even though members of the Waffen SS, Hitler's elite army, are buried there.

The planned visit spurred impassioned opposition from author and Holocaust survivor Elie Wiesel and other Jewish leaders, as did Reagan's statement last week that the Germans killed in World War II were victims "just as surely as the victims in (Nazi) concentration camps."

Professor Leonard Ehrlich, who sent the telegram, said he and his immediate family fled Germany to the United States in December 1939, three months after the war began, but that "at least 60 very close relatives of mine" perished in Nazi death camps, where six million Jews were killed.

Ehrlich said that as an American soldier on the European front lines in 1944 and 1945, "I personally saved the lives of many German soldiers. My protest against the president honoring the SS is not a matter of vindictiveness against the Germans."

He said the telegram read: "As a Jewish refugee from Nazi Germany and a Silver Star, Purple Heart ETO (European theater of operations) veteran, I urge you not to visit SS cemetery."

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter at Hillel called the visit "a lack of sensitivity," adding, "I think it's a mistake to give the appearance of honoring the memory of those buried who participated in brutally murdering the 6 million Jews and others during World War II."

"People in power make it difficult to admit to a mistake, Perlmutter said. "In a way he (Reagan) knows it's a mistake because he's downplayed the visit."

Judith R. Baskin, a history professor who teaches a course on Jewish history, said, "I have always thought that President Reagan was ignorant of history and insensitive to human concerns, so I'm not surprised."

What surprised her, she said, was that "the people around him who advise him could act so ineptly."

Eric Mendelson, a student in Baskin's class, said, "I don't like the idea of him (Reagan) going to visit Nazis. The Nazis were brutal killers of everyone, not just Jews. But the Germans are our allies at this point.

"He can't back out now. That would be political suicide...the Germans would be very upset," Mendelson said, adding that he wishes something would suddenly come up "that would prevent him from going."

When Reagan and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl visit the cemetery, "people all over the world are going to be watching very carefully" to see what the two leaders say and do, Ehrlich said. "Everything will have symbolic significance.

"I don't think that Reagan would be foolish enough to lay a wreath there," he added. "My imagination doesn't go that far."

But Baskin said, "I think he's quite capable of doing that."

SGA may remove lawyer, advocate

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

The final report for the Student Government Association Budget Act for fiscal year 1986 calls for the non-renewal of the two professional contracts of the director of a UMass educational advocacy group, and a Legal Services Office lawyer.

Final figures also reveal a concentration of funding for smaller registered student organizations and major cuts in SGA operations. Some groups such as the African Students organization, the American Indian Students Organization, the People's Gay Alliance, the Lesbian Union, WMUA all received budget increases.

Director of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, Debbie Piltch said she feels veto of her contract is part of an "ideological ploy," noting past controversies over the funding of a SCERA anti-oppression coordinator. "Clearly SCERA can't go on without the director. The ideas (of the SGA Budgets Committee) is to bring in the anti- oppression coordinator, bombard them with so much work that they can't handle it anymore then they'll say they aren't doing their job and that's grounds for firing them," she said.

About the similar contract cut in LSO, Piltch said the committee made a serious error in how they "prioritized." "They cut positions in the two organizations that deal directly with students, she said, adding, "they are being destructive to student rights under the guise of student empowerment."

LSO Director Charles DiMare said the non-renewal of a lawyer's contract would have a "devastating" effect on his office. He speculated the cut would for one year, force the office to offer only legal advice, not representation, to students because the case overload would result in an insufficient amount of time for lawyers to devote to each case.

"We are talking about literally hundreds of students who won't be serviced by us," he said.

The largest cut was delivered to the SGA Affirmative Action Office, which suffered a 75 percent budget slash. Other large cuts were delivered to the president's office, which was reduced 44 percent, and SCERA, which was reduced 43 percent.

Housing options open for those who persist

By DAVID BURGESS
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the first of a three-part series examining the possibilities of finding off-campus housing.

off-campus housing

The annual search for summer and fall housing has begun and students looking to escape the dormitory existence should carefully make plans for off-campus life.

Students at the University of Massachusetts are classified into two categories. First-year students and sophomore except for those with special circumstances are considered on-campus residents, while juniors and seniors are automatically exempt from having to reside on campus.

Gerald Quarles, director of the Housing Assignments Office, said that first-year students and sophomores may petition for off-campus housing elegibility if they have special needs. If a student has medical, academic, religious, financial, or any type of personal problems a petition form for off-campus housing may be obtained at the housing office.

"The student then must use the form to demonstrate a need to live off-campus," Quarles said. The housing office then sends the completed form to the Residential Exemption Committee for either approval or rejection.

Anti-contra activists arrested

BOSTON (AP)—Police arrested eight people among about 75 people who rallied in the lobby of a federal building yesterday to protest U.S. support of the Contras in Nicaragua.

As the group chanted "Contras work for the CIA and the CIA works here," Federal Protection Service officers dragged the eight from the floor of the John F. Kennedy building to a Boston police van waiting outside.

The protesters had chanted and tried to block the doors to the building for more than an hour before the federal police warned the eight, who were sitting in a circle, they would be arrested if they didn't move. Police said those arrested would be charged with trespassing and disorderly conduct.

The demonstrators said they were members of an umbrella group called Massachusetts Contingency Plan for Central America, which counts as its members about two dozen religious, social action and other organizations.

"Even though Congress voted not to aid the Contras, the war is still going on," said Bob Warren, spokesman for the group.

He said most of those arrested also were charged last week in a similar protest in front of the White House in Washington. Last Friday, in another protest at Westover Air Force base in Chicopee, 62 demonstrators were arrested.

Among the eight arrested yesterday was the Rev. Robert Branconnier, a priest at St. Matthews's Parish in Boston.

Many wore pillow cases and other pieces of white material over their bodies upon which they had written the names of Nicaraguan civilians allegedly killed by the Contras, who oppose the Marxist government of Daniel Ortega.

The House of Representatives refused last week to extend aid to the rebels.

Before the arrests, many of the protesters had blocked the revolving door that leads into the lobby of the downtown highrise. Each time, federal officers dragged them away.

Yale students hold rally on South African divestment

(AP) — Nearly 200 students rallied at Yale University yesterday to call for the university to withdraw investments in companies doing business in South Africa. Yale's administration,which says it closely watches its investments in such companies, rejected the protesters' calls for a public debate.

Sit-ins by students opposed to university investments in companies with South African operations continued at UCLA and Rutgers, and a similar protest against state investments was in its seventh day at the Wisconsin state capitol.

After the rally at Yale, about 40 students began what was billed as a 24-hour vigil outside the office of the university administration.

"Until apartheid is fully dismantled, we will not accept Yale's talk of gradual reform and peaceful change," Samantha Sparks, a member of a Yale student group called the Coalition Against Apartheid, told the rally.

However, university spokesman Walter Littell said Yale's administration rejected the coalitions proposal for a public debate as inappropriate and unproductive.

Littell said that if corporations fail to comply with the Sullivan Principles — which demand equal wages and opportunities for all employees of participating U.S. firms in South Africa — the university administration considers a range of actions that includes divestment.

Last fall, Yale divested from three companies for that reason.

The Wisconsin demonstrators are seeking the withdrawal of state retirement fund investments in companies operating in South Africa.

Gov. Anthony Earl, who supports the bill sought by the students, has pledged to appoint two persons to the state Investment Board who oppose apartheid. South Africa's rigid system of segregation.

About 20 anti-apartheid protesters were camped out yesterday at UCLA, where a tent city was set up on Sunday, university spokeswoman Darlene Skeels said.

The protest has been peaceful and university officials have not decided how long to permit the tents to remain, she said.

Worthy says press misrepresents truth

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

Americans are not aware of conditions in Foreign countries because the American press does not know how to provide proper coverage, said journalist William Worthy in a lecture last night in the Campus Center.

Worthy worked as a correspondent in China, Cuba, and more recently, Iran. His traveling to "restricted areas" has brought him into conflict with the U.S. government. On a recent trip from Tehran, all of his notes and documents concerning the U.S. Embassy were seized by the government.

Speaking before 25 people, Worthy said American reporters seek information from "the upperclass, Westtoxicated diplomats who have no idea of what's going on. They wouldn't dream of asking a peasant. As a result they deceive the country."

To strengthen his point, he told the story of a UPI reporter who wrote that in 1958 the Cuban rebels had been defeated, hours before Castro had taken control of Havana.

Speaking at length about the Islamic revolution in Iran, Worthy said the American press was hostile toward the revolution from the beginning because "they found they couldn't make a deal with Khomeini." As a result, the coverage of the embassy take-over was slanted, he said. The whole story has yet to be told, he said. "Bits and pieces here and there (have surfaced) but certainly not as a whole or on television."

Worthy said that by the end of the decade, Americans will begin to read the truth about the Iranian revolution. "It takes time for the truth to catch up with the fiction and the myth, but eventually it does."

He said the press has mishandled most revolutions since the Russian Revolution of 1917. He said that for two years, the communist forces in Russia had been reported as being defeated. At the same time, the revolution was represented as a threat to Europe, causing an obvious contradiction. "How can a cadaver be a threat?" he said.

During the Bay of Pigs Invasion, the wire services ran stories declaring the overthrow of the Castro Government, which had been supplied by a CIA public relations man in New York, he said.

Offering advice for the future, Worthy said, "Don't get caught up in passionate crises because chances are you are being manipulated. Aristotle once said 'If someone decieves you it would be wise not to completely trust that person again.' and since the end of World War Two, the government has decieved us many times."

Bell puts stock in financial aid

By STEVE HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

Former U.S. Secretary of Education Terrel H. Bell last night said that student financial aid is "the best investment we make" in this country and praised UMass students for their financial aid activism.

At a lecture in the Student Union Ballroom, sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors program, Bell said, "We need to become a nation of learners.

"American education has to be a lot better if we're going to survive as a nation. The main resource of the future is going to be human intelligence," he said, adding that the vigor, talent and productiveness of the Japanese is what enables them to be competitive in trade.

"We are starving for (bigger) budgets on university campuses," he said. "I realize that this university is the spawning place of lively, concerned students...who are interested in one of the greatest things in America...our student aid program."

Bell was asked by President Reagan to serve as Secretary of Education and remove the Department of Education from the cabinet level.

"I told Reagan it would be an embarrassment," after he had previously testified to Congress to create the cabinet-level department, he said.

"But I made an effort to carry out the President's commitment," though Congress would not approve Reagan's proposal to dismantle the Department of Education, he said.

As one of nine children in a "destitute family," Bell said his mother made it "unthinkable not to plan to go to college."

"I've been a strong supporter of financial aid ever since," he said.

When Bell became Secretary of Education "it was a surprise to everyone, but no one was as surprised as I was," he said.

"I soon learned I was the only member of the cabinet who wasn't a millionaire," he said. "We couldn't afford a moving van, so we came (to Washington) in a U-Haul truck."

Bell resigned as Secretary of Education in December 1984. He expressed sympathy for his successor, William Bennett, because he has to work with an education budget already drawn up by Budget Director David Stockman.

"Bill Bennett's had a rough time," Bell said, "let's encourage him, I think he'll be a fine secretary."

Alcohol proposal threatens to scare away event sponsors

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

Entertainment sponsored by alcohol marketers may not return to campus if the revised University Alcoholic Beverage Policy is approved for the fall semester.

The proposed policy will prohibit the promotion of specific brand names at social events, such as the "Miller High Life Rock Series" in the Blue Wall. As a result, student leaders and alcohol promotional representatives said they fear alcohol marketers may not want to continue subsidizing entertainment on campus if they cannot promote their product.

"They're banning all promotional activities that provide a great deal of benefit to the student population," Bill Collins, co-president of Southwest Area Government said.

The regulation states that promotional activities by alcohol marketers will not be permitted, except with the approval of the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs.

According to the proposed policy, "If approval is granted, an activity may be sponsored by a particular marketer, but in no case will the promotion of any specific brands be permitted."

Contrary to Collin's assertion, subsidized entertainment could still be brought to the University, said Carlene Riccelli, chairwoman of the University Committee on Alcohol Use. The committee introduced the new regulations concerning advertising by alcohol marketers at social events to the revised policy last semester.

Riccelli said promotion of products at these events would not be allowed because it would target many people who were not of legal drinking age.

"If Budweiser wanted to bring in a band, they could still do that. It would be a beneficial tax write-off," Riccelli said.

"We wouldn't want to come if we couldn't use our logo," Craig Keenan, a promotions manager of the Miller Brewing Company said in a telephone interview yesterday. "We want to associate a good time with a brand."

"The administration seems to think that the students will be exploited by these beer companies," Collins said. Promotion of products at social events provide entertainment to the mutual benefit of alcohol marketers and students.

Campus Center Director William Harris said that he would not miss alcohol marketers subsidized events in the Blue Wall.

"The Campus Center ought to augment the educational mission of the University and provide students with creative entertainment," Harris said. Residential areas, the Greek system and the Union Program Council should be able to bring in alternative programs to fill the void.

"We should look for outside entertainment as much as possible," Karen-Karina Gray, vice-chairwoman of the Board of Governors said. She said the regulations of the proposed policy would "terminate future chances of something being beneficial for students."

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey has forwarded the policy to faculty and staff unions on campus to make sure the document does not violate any University contracts, Riccelli said. The policy, which was revised to adhere to the new state legal drinking age, will then be forwarded to the Board of Trustees for approval.

Workers celebrate May Day

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Staff

Today is May Day, or International Worker's Day, an international holiday to commemorate the struggles and achievements of the organized labor movement.

Although not an official holiday in the United States, and celebrated in almost every other major nation, May Day was started in Chicago in 1886, according to Peter Hardie, a union representative for Service Employees International, a member of the AFL-CIO.

May 1 marks the anniversary of a large worker demonstration in Haymarket Square in Chicago, Hardie said, where workers fought for and won the eight-hour work day.

"The labor movement does have a real impact on politics and society," Hardie said. "(American labor) is probably the largest organization of constituents anywhere.

"May Day is an opportunity for us to express solidarity with worker unions internationally," he said. His union plans to commemorate the day by joining in a rally in Boston protesting the South African practice of apartheid, which discriminates against blacks in hiring policies.

But all is not necessarily well with American labor organizations, according to University of Massachusetts economics Professor Richard Wolff.

"American labor unions have never faced a more serious situation since the Great Depression," he said.

This situation is a result of three pressures on unions, Wolff said: the shift from an industrial to a service economy, President Ronald Reagan's anti-union sentiments, and economic competition with foreign countries.

"These three major pressures make this a May Day to take stock of labor in a very serious and sober way," he said.

Wolff also suggested that students use May Day to consider their own employment situation.

"As a teacher, I can perceive a growing anxiety about jobs...students are worried about jobs and the renumeration they can expect, and rightly so," he said.

"Whatever else you may think of (Reagan), plus or minus, his presidency is a disaster in terms of Americans getting jobs," Wolff said. He said while the official unemployment figure is about the same as when Reagan took office (7½ percent), the workforce has increased, creating more unemployed.

Hardie, admitted the American labor movement is not as strong as in some other countries, but said the movement is not doing that bad.

"It's been stronger at certain times in history, it's been weaker at certain times," he said.

Southwest Week rocks on

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

A group plagued by deficits at the end of last year, Southwest Area Government kicked off its Southwest Week yesterday, better prepared financially, and is paying off its debts.

SWAG Treasurer Eric Ericson said SWAG was hit with a $3,500 cleanup bill from the Physical Plant after last year's festivities, which left it with a $6,000 deficit.

"This spring we signed a contract where we payed off $3,000 of the deficit, and we'll pay $3,000 next summer," Ericson said. He said more money has been set aside for cleanup this year.

Some of the activities featured this week are:

- Local bands from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. Tuesday through Friday on the Southwest pyramids.
- Barbeques every day next to the pyramids.
- Three Boston comedians at 8 p.m. Wednesday on the pyramids.
- UMass Music Theater Guild's presentation of West Side Story at 8 p.m. Thursday and Friday outside Hampden Dining Commons.
- Crafts fair with free silkscreening, from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday.
- WMUA simulcast from 2 p.m. to 6 p.m. featuring the UMass gymnastics team and break dancing.
- The Southwest Concert from 12 noon to 6 p.m. Sunday, featuring Otis Day and the Nights, Girl's Night Out and Nexus.

★ budget

With the exception of the Index and the State Student Association of Massachusetts, which were not funded, the Radical Student Union, with a 53 percent decrease, took the biggest cut for the smaller RSO's. Nummo News with an approximately 34 percent cut and Spectrum, with a 27 percent cut followed close behind.

The budget act, scheduled to be voted on at tonight's Senate meeting, may need to be rewritten, due to a motion brought up by SGA Co-President Stacy Roth and SGA Treasurer Diane Rossi, which charges that the contract non-renewals violate university procedure.

★ housing

If a student's request is rejected, Quarles said, an appeal can be brought to the housing office. The student will meet with the staff for a one-to-one discussion to see if a favorable decision for off-campus residence is warranted.

Once a student is allowed to reside off-campus, Quarles said, the search for appropriate housing should begin by mid-May.

One place to go to for help is the Off-Campus Housing Office, located on the second floor to the Student Union Building. The office is open weekdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and two nights a week until 8 p.m. during the academic year and Saturday mornings during the summer.

Joanne Levenson, director of OCHO, said the office acts as a resource for people seeking off-campus housing. "We give advice to first-time renters," she said, "and can give in-depth information on tenant's rights."

OCHO can perform all the services a realtor can Levenson said, and doesn't cost the stud. ..a cent to use. Conventional realtor's may charge service fees of $25 to $40 to get housing for people.

Levenson said that OCHO knows of many places for rent which are cross-listed with private realtors and newspapers. For those people who rent a place that uses oil fuel, OCHO has an oil co-op with about 400 subscribers at present, she said.

OCHO also keeps the University community aware of trends, legislation and legal precedents related to housing provisions. Three programs including Listing and Informational Services, an Education/Advocacy/Colaborative Outreach Program, and the Older Students Network, are available to help people with any problems concerning attaining adequate housing.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

What is divestment?

Despite all the recent coverage by the media, campus protests nationwide, demonstrations outside embassies and businesses that sell Krugerrands, it seems there is no clearly understood definition of the verb and noun, to divest and divestment.

Example: The board of trustees of UMass passed a resolution in 1977 that states, "The University will not invest in corporations or businesses that operate in South Africa..."

Treasurer Robert H. Brand (We assume with the consent of the trustee) interprets the phrase "operate in" strictly. Thus Foxboro Co., which does business with a company that operates in South Africa, is an acceptable investment for the University because Foxboro itself does not "operate in" South Africa.

Is that divestment?

Example: Many Banks—among them J.P. Morgan & Co. Inc. and Bankers Trust N.Y. Corp., in which the University owns stock—have adopted lending policies in response to public pressure that forbid loans to the South African government and the public sector, including the homelands. (Some of these banks still have loans out to the public sector that have not yet matured.)

These banks do, however, still lend money to private corporations and to South African banks. (Bank of Boston is a notable exception.) Most of these are short-term loans used to grease the wheels of trade.

Is that divestment?

We believe that if we accept the policy of divestment, we must go further than our University and many banks have gone. If divestment is to be effective it must stem the flow of goods and cash to South Africa, not just redirect it.

If we accept the fact that divestment is a symbolic and moral statement, as well as an economic lever, then divestment should mean cutting ties completely. Loans to private corporations and trade through third parties in the end result in profits and thus tax revenues for the very system we oppose.

The pressure is working: J.P. Morgan & Co. adopted a no-loan policy toward the public sector just last month—a small but significant step in the right direction. As recently as last December J.P. Morgan was one of 32 banks that refused to supply any information to the Investor Responsibility Research Center, a non-profit group that monitors trade with South Africa.

The South African government recently repealed laws which forbade inter-racial marriage, a trivial gesture in itself (laws still restrict where these couples can live), but it might mean that external pressure is effective—that somebody is listening.

In this country the heavy media coverage helps the divestment movement. A universally understood definition of divestment should be agreed on by movement leaders, and the pressure continued.

Saving student groups is the 'top priority'

Your student government "leadership" is at it again. They wish to save the professional staff of the Student Activities Trust Fund at the expense of student groups. Worse still, they are trying to force the Budget Committee of the SGA to do the dirty work instead of doing it publicly on the floor of the Senate. Campus President Stacy Roth and the SGA Treasurer Diane Rossi, are the people in the forefront of this reprehensible attack on student activities.

The Budgets Committee has investigated the legality of their actions concerning the professional staff. We stand on firm legal ground in the matter of not renewing the contracts of two professional employees. The fact that half of the reserves in the trust fund were liquidated proves the contention that the funds are not available for these professionals. Therefore, they can and must be let go.

Tonight, the Student Senate will consider the Budget Act that the Budgets Committee put together with saving student groups as the top priority.

Jordan A. Rosner
Chair
Budget Committee

How cuts are administered is the real issue

Fiscal crisis! Fiscal crisis! Fiscal crisis! It seems that all the Student Government Association can talk about is the sad state of Student Activities Trust Fund finances. The Budget Committee of the Student Senate has been deliberating about the problem for quite a while and now, with the release of their proposed Budget Act for Fiscal Year 1986, it seems as if they believe that they've presented some solutions. What has the panel offered to do with your money? Well, some student groups will face reduced funding and, according to the committee, some professional staff members will just have to go. Sounds just fine, right? Wrong. An issue is not whether we have to cut expenses or not, but how those cuts are administered.

The Budget Committee chose not to fund two professional positions. In effect, they are terminating staff posts in the offices of Legal Services and the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy. Such action would be against state employment practices. The workers involved were not given proper notification and did not perform unsatisfactorily. Their jobs are protected by procedures adopted by this Commonwealth and this university. If the people involved in framing the budget have their way, our student government could face a lawsuit. Indeed, one of the individuals who has threatened with dismissal has already warned that she will take the matter to court. This would be disasterous. Any court would rule against us based on Massachusetts statutes.

In all fairness, the Budget Committee thought it was doing this campus a favor. Cut professional staff, save some student organizations. The fact is that if the whole Senate approves the present budget recommendations, then no student groups may be funded partially because the added financial burden of a court case. We may also witness attempts by the administration to take student control away from the SATF. They will certainly view any lawsuit as a symptom of money mismanagement. Such an effort would certainly endanger RSOs.

This whole scenario could have been avoided if the Budget Committee had not overlooked other prescribed stipulations. They did not contact the offices directly affected. They did not consult with any SGA offices including Treasurer Diane Rossi as mandated by campus government rules. If they had not blatantly disregarded local regulations then this whole mess could have been avoided. As it stands now Massachusetts and student authority has been violated and the funds that make activities possible have been placed in jeopardy. The Budget Act must be changed.

We are the world

One of the best things this university offers is the opportunity for students to participate in numerous organizations and events, enriching both themselves and those around them. The events can vary from giving blood to celebrating the diversity of the people in the world, as happened at the International Fair a few weeks ago.

Tonight at UMass, students, faculty, staff and administrators have a chance to participate in a different kind of event and make a difference.

The Collegian joins the Commuter Area Government, the United Christian Foundation and various student groups in urging people to attend the "We are the World" benefit dance at 8 tonight in the Student Union Ballroom. All proceeds from the dance will go to "Oxfam America" to help fight against world hunger.

In recent months various people and groups around the world have responded to the call for help in India and most of Africa, especially Ethiopia. Hunger is no longer a deniable crisis. There are no easy or quick solutions to the world hunger problems. But we cannot overlook that every little bit does indeed help.

Tonight we all have an opportunity to do our part.

West Side Story "blasé"

By COUNT RAMIN ZAHED
Collegian Staff

It took a lot of courage to choose a difficult play like West Side Story to be performed outdoors for a college audience in the 1980s. It also takes a lot of unrewarded patience to sit through the Music Theatre Guild's production without laughing at the flat sentimentality, sloppy choreography and unpolished numbers.

Because of the fact that West Side Story is a modern adaptation of Romeo and Juliet, it demands full attention and sincerity. The tragic love story requires strong leads who can make a drama believable in modern times, and this is where the production fails. Loren Demarath who plays Tony, the romantic hero, seems to have walked out of the lower East side of Amherst, rather than the lower East of New York, and the khaki pants and buttoned-up Oxford shirt he wears certainly do not improve the situation. On the other hand, there is absolutely no chemistry between Tony and Maria (Jennie Brumberg). During an important balcony scene, Demarath and Brumberg declare their love in such a blase manner that leaves the audience roaring with laughter. And when the love between the central figures fails, the rest is history.

In some musicals, the numbers work as salvation for the dramatic sins. However, in this case, they simply prolong the suffering with their rusty mechanics. "Tonight", "Maria", and "Somewhere" which are traditionally the sure-hit goosebump-givers of the musical, pass by and only parody the emotions conveyed. The band accompanying the singers adds insult to injury by sounding like a cheap group playing at the Mexican Feast of the Dead. Not even Brumberg's excellent vocal ability and her seemingly authentic Spanish accent (which comes as a relief these days) can save the sinking ship.

The evening's single highlight came unexpectedly during the energetic "Officer Krupke." Eric Horn as A-Rab stole the scene with his vibrant movements, and proved once again that when there is true interaction between the performer and the audience, stage magic is born.

During the past years, the Music Theatre Guild has provided many instances of excellent entertainment for the college community. Their impressive list of productions include classics like Gilbert and Sullivan's The Mikado, Cole Porter's Anything Goes, as well as Oklahoma, Pirates of Penzance, and more recently the very popular Hair, Godspell, and last year's Rocky Horror and Grease. In the words of Heidi Graffam, stage manger for the production, a lot of time and energy have been spent on each musical. Rehearsals started months ago and the Guild emphasized the fact that auditions are open to anyone with an interest in theater. The chosing process is not as elitist and selective as those of other theater groups on campus. Therefore, it is more of a shame that West Side Story fails to bring to surface the amount of energy and fresh talent that lives underneath its dead package. To see the production dissappoint an audience is like seeing a close friend try very hard to pass a Spanish final although you know that he has been going to the wrong class all semester. In short, West Side Story leaves you with a taste of ready-made nacho cheese while it could have aimed for a well-seasoned dish of paella.

West Side Story will be repeated at 8 p.m. on Thursday and Friday at Southwest and on May 6th at the Orchard Hill basketball courts.

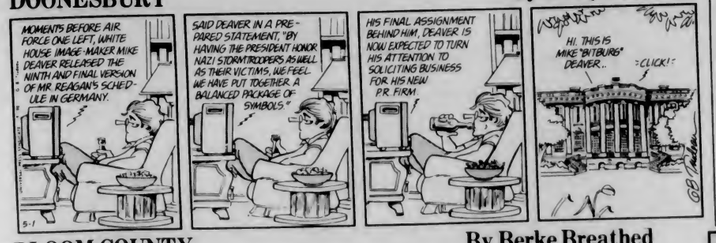
DOONESBURY By Garry Trudeau



MOMENTS BEFORE AIR FORCE ONE LEFT, WHITE HOUSE IMAGE-MAKER MIKE DEAVER RELEASED THE NINTH AND FINAL VERSION OF MR. REAGAN'S SCHEDULE IN GERMANY.
SAID DEAVER IN A PREPARED STATEMENT, "BY HAVING THE PRESIDENT HONOR NAZI STORMTROOPERS AS WELL AS THEIR VICTIMS, WE FEEL WE HAVE PUT TOGETHER A BALANCED PACKAGE OF SYMBOLS."
HIS FINAL ASSIGNMENT BEHIND HIM, DEAVER IS NOW EXPECTED TO TURN HIS ATTENTION TO SOLICITING BUSINESS FOR HIS NEW P.R. FIRM.
HI, THIS IS MIKE "BITBURG" DEAVER...

MADAM... I HAVE A DATE. AND I AM IN NEED OF AN ODOR!
Men's Cologne
NOT JUST ANY ODOR, MIND YOU... BUT AN ODOR THAT'S ME! AN ODOR THAT SEZ I'M A 1985 AMERICAN MALE!!
I WANT AN ODOR THAT SEZ I CAN SPIT TOBACCO JUICE INTO WALTER "WIMP" MONDALE'S BREAST POCKET FROM FIFTY FEET WHILE CURSING THE SANDINISTAS AND MANHANDLING "MADONNA" ALL AT THE SAME TIME!!
WELL HERE'S A NICE--
JUST A PINT OF HORSE SWEAT. THANK YOU MA'AM

I SEE YOU'VE COME TO HAND IN YOUR TERM PAPER, MR. "FOOF-LOVE GOD OF U.MASS" YO!
I DO HOPE IT ISN'T FIVE PAGES OF FICTIONAL RUBBISH, SELF-PROCLAIMING YOURSELF AS A SEXUAL LEGEND?
FICTIONAL?
NO, I'VE WRITTEN AN INSTRUCTIONAL PAPER, GEARED TOWARD AIDING MANKIND. THE TITLE ALONE IS AN "AWE-INSPIRER!" GO ON, READ IT!
"HOW TO PICK UP WOMEN?"
MAN, I GOTTA GET A PUBLISHER!

★ Softball Splits

The Minutewomen took the lead for good in the third on an RBI single by Beth Talbott, scoring Maher again. Carol Frattaroli sacrifice fly to center scored Chris Ciepela in the top of the seventh for an insurance run. Ciepela got on base on a three-base error.

Stockley threw her fifth two-hitter of the year and raised her record to 13-7. UMass had six hits in the opener and no errors while URI had three errors.

In the second game, UMass had its problems. They committed four errors but only one led directly to a run. The Minutewomen had five hits, including three doubles, but couldn't string a rally together.

UMass took a 1-0 lead in the second inning after Talbott came home on a wild pitch. URI, however, exploded for three runs in the fourth, highlighted by a Lori Whidden two RBI blast to deep center for a 3-1 URI lead.

The Rams added another run in the sixth for the 4-1 advantage. Lisa Rever, 7-6, took the loss for UMass.

The second game was a non-conference game. In four games with URI this year, UMass went 3-1.

UMass finished fourth in the Atlantic-10 with a 5-5 record. URI was fifth with a 3-7 slate. Temple (9-1), Penn State (7-3), and Rutgers (6-4) finished ahead of UMass in the conference. UMass will face top-seeded Temple in the opening round of the A-10 double elimination tournament on Friday at 11 a.m. at Penn State.

"This team has earned the right to go to the Atlantic-10," Sortino said. "This team has nowhere to go but up."

Minutemen outslugged by UConn

Drop 16-10 decision

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Three University of Massachusetts pitchers surrendered 19 hits, including four home runs, as the University of Connecticut pounded the tired Minutemen 16-10 yesterday at Lorden Field.

The game, once important for both teams when the old Yankee Conference existed, was meaningless as far as playoff berths go but still caused sparks as tempers flared several times during the game.

UConn firstbaseman Dave Ford took a cheap shot at UMass catcher Sean Flint as he crossed home in the ninth inning. The umpire ejected Ford and moments later the senior took a punch at a UMass fan seated near the visitor's dugout. In the ensuing melee, Connecticut coach Andy Baylock wrestled with his player to keep him from going after the fan and in the process dislocated his shoulder.

In the UMass seventh, the Minutemen were threatening with runners on first and second after an Angelo Salustri solo home run. Baylock pulled relief pitcher Kevin Meier and sent in Kevin Hickey.

Hickey proceeded to hit the next three batters, Fint, Dan Clifford and Bruce Kingman, to bring in two runs. Kingman did not take kindly to his being hit and started toward Hickey before angrily trotting to first. The shaken UConn hurler was quickly hooked in favor of reliever Bob Emery who worked an incident-free two innings to get the save.

Oh yes, the game. UMass started strong by taking a 3-0 lead as Kingman singled to left before Jay Zerner's base hit to put runners at first and second.

Doug Wright then singled in Kingman and motored on to second, ahead of catcher Roberto Hernandez' throw, which sailed into center sending Wright to third and Zerner across the plate. Designated hitter Todd Comeau then did his job with a single to center that plated Wright.

Connecticut's Mike Pingree dives back to first ahead of UMass pitcher Mick Wydra's throw as firstbaseman Dan Clifford awaits the toss.

UMass starter Mick Wydra worked a perfect two innings before UConn scored on the third as Herandez singled in Al Franchesini after a double to the gap in right center.

Wydra worked a scoreless third before the Huskies went to work in the fourth. Franchesini singled, Hernandez was hit by a pitch before Mike Pingree's bunt was fielded by Clifford to get Franchesini at third.

Dave Darking then popped up the second out, but after a walk to Kaith Kockenmeister that loaded the bases, Ford blooped a two-run single to left. Peter Zippel followed that with a RBI single up the middle. Dave Lanese chased Wydra with a two run double down the leftfield line. Steve Allard came on to get the elusive third out and it 6-3 UConn.

UMass (20-25) came back with three in its fifth to tie as Kingman singled and scored on Wright's triple to the fence in right. Comeau then ripped his sixth homer of the year, 420 feet to straightaway center and it was 6-6.

But Allard was ripped for three in the sixth as pinchhitter Scott Cormier ripped a two-run homer. UConn went up 9-6 and never trailed again scoring three in the seventh as H.A. Butterworth took Allard deep to right and reliever Matt Subocz was battered around for three hits including RBI singles by Cormier and Kockenmeister. The Huskies scored four in the ninth. Allard, 3-2, took the loss.

UMass made it respectable, scoring three in the seventh as Hickey made things interesting. The Minutemen are at Amherst College today at 3 p.m.

They're back: Gorillas home today

Sixth-ranked Gazelles host Springfield today

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Remember the men's lacrosse team? Those guys who were supposed to do well and have done only so-so thus far this season? They're coming home today after a five-game road trip.

"It'll be great to get back here," UMass coach Dick Garber said yesterday as he prepared strategy for Dartmouth (Boyden field at 3 p.m.). "It's been too long since we saw a friendly crowd and I think it's going to do us some good."

UMass is sputtering along at 4-6 on the season and should, if they come ready to play, give a 2-6 Big Green squad all it can handle.

A lot of UMass students also don't remember the sixth-in-the-nation women's lacrosse team as well. The 7-2 Gazelles will tune-up for the ECAC playoffs with Springfield College Today at NOPE Field at 3 p.m.

The Gorillas, coming off a bitter 11-9 loss at Army on Saturday, will be looking for a good offensive day as Garber hopes to use a lot of attack men in the game.

"I'd like to get guys like Ed Boardman, Bubba Sandford, Kelley Carr and Doug Musco in there to show what they can do. Hopefully, they will have a chance to see some work."

UMass is led by sophomore attackman Tom Carmean and his 14 goals and 26 assists. Tom Linkacovic's 16 goals lead the Gorillas while Mike Fiorini has notched 14. Matt O'Reilly, Musco and Greg Fisk each have ten nets.

UMass will run a midfield lines with Fisk, O'Reilly and Stephen Moreland. A second middle line of Glenn Stephens, Karl Hatton and converted attackman Ken Freemen will be expected to produce some points with the big Freemen usually able to lose his defender after faceoffs and go one-on-one with the goalie.

Faceoff specialist Seamus McGovern, who usually exits after fighting for the ball, may see some running time according to Garber who is pleased with the junior's progress on defense and respects his hard shot.

In goal, Gerry Moreau has been consistent with a .537 save percentage and 10.3 goals-per-game. The close defensive set of Tom Aldrich, Mark Stratton and Gerry Byrne have played well all season.

On the women's side, all-America attack Pam Moryl leads UMass onto NOPE against the Chiefs. Moryl is scoring at an alarming rate. She has 36 goals in nine games and six assists for 42 points. Bunny Forbes is at 13-15-28 with Becky Hekampis chipping in with 14-3-17.

Goalie Debbie DeJesus has played every minute for the Gazelles and has a .584 save percentage and only 4.67 goals against per-game. UMass is averaging 11.1. The women also hold a commanding 253-146 advantage in shots-on-goal for the season.

The Gazelles are coming off of a 1-1 weekend that saw them lose to number one Temple 10-8 before beating Rutgers 12-4. Both games were at home.

GORILLA GRUMBLINGS: Dartmouth is 0-4 in the Ivy League and paced by Rob Cote's eight goals and 22 points. The leading goal scorer is Dave Burt with 14. UMass whipped the Green 16-6 last season. UMass goes on the road at Hobart and C.W. Post before returning home to face number one Syracuse on Friday May 10 at Boyden. In all, 18 Gorillas have scored this season. UMass holds advantages (in goals) in the second and third periods against opponents but trails 31-26 in fourth period goals. The Gorillas have not won or lost two in a row since dropping three to Rutgers, Brown and Cornell earlier in the season. Garber said yesterday that his recruiting season (he has scholarships for the first time) is going "better than expected" with several high school stars verbally committed to UMass.

Bunny Forbes, the women's lacrosse team's second leading scorer with 28 points, works down the field earlier this season. The 7-2 Gazelles host Springfield College today at NOPE at 3 p.m. It is the final home game of the year.

Softball streak ends at URI

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

KINGSTON, R.I.—The University of Rhode Island snapped the University of Massachusetts softball team's seven game winning streak with a 4-1 win to split yesterday's doubleheader in Kingston.

UMass, 22-19-1, 5-5 in the Atlantic-10, won the opener 3-1 and won fourth place outright in the A-10 and the last spot in this weekend's playoffs.

"I think we're on a good road to the tournament," coach Elaine Sortino said. "Whatever mistakes we had left in us, we expended them in the second game. We got them out of our system."

Determined to earn its Atlantic-10 berth and not back into the playoffs, UMass took the opener with flawless defense and two-hit pitching by junior co-captain Lynn Stockley.

UMass took a 1-0 lead in the top of the first inning as freshman Paige Kopcza's RBI single scored Sally Maher (two-for-three, double, in the opener).

The Rams tied it up in the bottom of the first after Stockley's only walk of the game and an RBI double by Teresa Turner.

Protestors cite failure to divest

By LAURA KOESTER
and ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

The arrests of 32 students protesting University investment with ties to South Africa ended a four-hour sit-in in University of Massachusetts Treasurer Robert Brand's office late yesterday afternoon.

The students, whose names were not available last night, will be arraigned today on trespassing charges.

It was the largest number of students arrested at a campus demonstration here since a Vietnam protest, which included a Whitmore occupation, resulted in about 35 arrests in 1968, according to Gerald T. O'Neil, director of the UMass department of public safety.

The students, 20 men and 12 women, were arrested in Brand's office, located in the addition behind Goodell Library, about 4:45 p.m. when they refused to end their sit-in because Brand had not addressed the group. The treasurer, who was in Worcester for the afternoon and will not return to campus until Friday, was not contacted by phone as the protesters had requested.

At issue are the findings of the Commission on South African Investments of the University of Massachusetts, a 10-member group of students, faculty and administrators formed in response to student demands during a four-day sit-in at Whitmore early last month. Its report, issued Monday, recommends that the University sell its holdings in Fox-boro Company, Procter & Gamble Corp., J.P. Morgan and Co. Inc. and Bankers Trust New York Corp. because, it concluded, these investments violate the trustee policy of divestment from companies operating in South Africa.

While the commission set a deadline of May 8 for response from UMass President David C. Knapp, the protesters demanded immediate divestment yesterday, saying "we've already waited eight years (since the divestment policy was instituted in 1977) and 'immediately' to us means now."

"Our duty is to have them accelerate divestment. Each day that investment continues is a black spot on the University," demonstrator Matthew Shakespeare said.

"I think this is a good thing. It reinforces the recommendations. I stand by the report and those occupying," said commission member Heidi Holland.

Tenants should know their rights

off-campus housing

By DAVID BURGESS
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the second of a three part series examining the possibilities of finding off-campus housing.

People seeking affordable housing in Amherst and the surrounding Pioneer Valley area have a large and varied selection to choose from but should be aware of tenant rights and responsibilities.

The Off-Campus Housing Office at the University of Massachusetts offers six duplicate sets of notebooks which identify available houses, apartments in houses, apartments in complexes, rooms, and housemates needed for apartments or houses.

One factor any prospective tenant should consider is price. The office has pamphlets showing cost comparisons of housing by type and community.

It should be no surprise that, according to figures put together by office staff members, rent is lower outside of Amherst.

Rent in an Amherst one and two bedroom house averages $440 as compared to $411 for a rental outside Amherst. An Amherst one bedroom apartment can cost an average of $306 as opposed to $271 for a similar rental elsewhere. Apartments in complexes will generally also be lower outside Amherst.

These are only averages and don't necessarily reflect the variances that may occur between individual realty properties.

Vacancy rates will also be lower in Amherst and the more distant the rental property from campus the higher the vacancy rate.

Amherst and Sunderland had vacancy rates of 1.5 and 1.4 percent respectively last year, said Joanne Levenson of the off-campus office.

There are several details that people who rent, especially first time tenants, should be aware of after a suitable residence is found.

A tenant has rights and responsibilities that should be outlined before a lease is signed. Every tenant who rents in Amherst receives a rights and responsibilities booklet with a lease.

Senate approves '86 budget, keep LSO lawyer and SCERA director

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

After nearly five hours of chaotic and emotional debate, the University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate voted to unanimously pass an amended budget act for fiscal year 1986.

The Budget Committee amended the act to include two professional positions originally slated to be cut. The salary costs of the director of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy and one Legal Studies Office lawyer were made possible by reducing reserve funds used for the purchase of capital equipment and by eliminating an audit fee. This change means the anti-oppression coordinator position funded last semester by the senate after much controversy will be cut.

"This amendment shows that we can come to a compromise. We can understand each other and bond together when an issue of this importance comes before the senate," assistant Budget Committee Chairman Mike Cerrato, said.

An amendment to the act, brought up by SGA co-President Stacy Roth and SGA Treasurer Diane Rossi, calls for the funding of the SCERA anti-oppression coordinator if the salary cost of a Student Activities Office administrator, Leslie Bridges, was taken over by the state.

"After talking to members of SCERA, student senators and other students as a whole, it became clear it was a very important position (anti-oppression) and one we didn't want to lose," Roth said.

The amendment, according to a letter circulated by Budget Committee Chairman Jordan Rosner, came as a response to the threats of legal action SCERA Director Debbie Piltch made toward the committee. Budget Committee members concluded Polish riot police carrying batons disperse Solidarity activists in Gdansk yesterday after the activists stormed an official May Day parade.

Demonstrators fight police in Poland

WARSAW, Poland (AP) - Thousands of rock-throwing demonstrators battled police in Gdansk yesterday and an estimated 15,000 Solidarity supporters staged a two hour peaceful May Day march in Warsaw to protest food price hikes and political arrests.

About 500 Solidarity activists chanting "Solidarity" and "Lech Walesa" forced their way into the official government May Day parade in Gdansk. They interrupted the parade for 10 minutes by sitting down in the road before being routed by baton-wielding police units.

About a mile from the parade route, an estimated 2,000 to 3,000 mostly young demonstrators gathered near the former Solidarity headquarters and hurled stones ripped from the streets at a column of helmeted riot police, western reporters said.

The police initially showed restraint but then charged with batons and shields and used water cannon and tear gas to diperse the crowd. Several demonstrators and police were injured.

One member of the riot police was beaten to the ground by demonstrators and taken away in an ambulance. A protestor who apparently threw a rock at a police vehicle was rammed by a police car and then beaten by riot squads. The protester was taken away by ambulance.

Scores of demonstrators were arrested in the clash, which lasted over an hour and left the street littered with stones and debris.

Solidarity leader Lech Walesa attempted to join the government parade in Gdansk but returned home when his way was blocked by hundreds of riot police. "We have no intention of getting into fights," he said.

"It's a shame that someone divides us so brutally."

In Warsaw, an estimated 15,000 people chanted Solidarity slogans and carrying Solidarity banners marched past cordons of riot police in a two-hour demonstration before dispersing.

US: Soviet ties bring sanctions

WASHINGTON (AP)—The State Department said yesterday that the economic sanctions imposed against Nicaragua were the result of the "cumulative effect" of recent Nicaraguan steps to bolster its military ties to the Soviet bloc and to export its revolution.

The main element of the sanctions was a total trade embargo against Nicaragua but officials suggested privately that the measure may not have much impact.

U.S. corporations with foreign-based subsidiaries will not be affected by the embargo. In addition, there was no indication that foreign countries which do business with Nicaragua were prepared to follow the U.S. lead and apply sanctions of their own.

The decision to halt all trade with Nicaragua was announced in Bonn, West Germany shortly after President Reagan arrived for a summit meeting with Western allies.

An official U.S. statement said the measures should be seen as "unmistakable evidence that we take seriously the obligation to protect our security interests and those of our friends."

At a State Department briefing, Langhorne A. Motley, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, said the administration acted because of what he described as a disturbing pattern of Nicaraguan behavior.

Harvard students start anti-apartheid fund

CAMBRIDGE (AP) - Harvard students critical of the University's investments in South Africa this week launched an alternative fundraising drive timed to correspond with Harvard's annual appeal to alumni.

Begun in 1983 by the Harvard-Radcliffe Undergraduate Council, the Endowment for Divestiture offers alumni a means of protesting Harvard's $580 million investment in companies that do business in the racially segregated nation.

E4D, as the fund is known, now has about $12,000 in an escrow account held by the Calvert Fund, "a socially responsible investment fund," said Tina Smith, a Harvard graduate and an originator of the fund.

"Three weeks after we got the idea, we sent out as large a mailing as we could afford - 6,500 pieces to alumni," said Smith, now a graduate student.

The interest-bearing account is being held for the Harvard Scholarship Fund. The money will be transferred from the fund when Harvard withdraws its investments in companies doing business in South Africa or when the United Nations indicates that apartheid has ended in that country.

Fac Senate will review fiscal process

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate today will examine several proposals designed to increase University of Massachusetts funding in the state budget for fiscal year 1987.

The report of the Faculty Senate Program and Budget Council, which drafted the proposals, stated that, "the more we learn about the budget processes in this state, the more discouraged we become. We do not seem to be able to secure a budgeting process that is sensible or straightforward or a budget that recognizes the enormity of our needs."

The proposals, which would be forwarded to the State Board of Regents of Higher Education include:

The report, which states that, "the state colleges and lesser state universities fared better than we did, on a percentage basis," added that, "we are not convinced that the governor and Legislature are truly interested in our quest to become one of the best state universities."

In other senate action, the senate will vote on two proposals to create new campus programs. The first would merge the Judaic studies programs and the Near Eastern studies. The second proposal would create a doctorate in neuroscience and behavior.

The honorary degree recipients and student speaker for commencement will be announced May 6.

include:

- "a massive infusion of funds" for the library, including a permanent addition of $3 million and additional funds to cover inflation.
- $1 million for routine campus maintenance, which has been deferred for years."
- $4 million to meet on-going replacement costs for equipment and service facilities across campus.
- $480,000 for academic support services including the University Career Center, and handicapped students services.
- $2 million to begin the purchasing and maintenance of computers.
- funding for new programs, including a masters program in social work.
- additional funding for implementing the general education requirements, including funding for math and lab requirements.

Rising tuition cost restricts enrollment

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

Annual tuition increases and new financial aid cutbacks will seriously affect the accessibility to the University of Massachusetts for students from moderate and low income families, according to a report issued by the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

The report in part concludes that "the proposed tuition policy will be a disaster for low and moderate income students and their families, greatly over burdening them financially and hurting their chances for a university education."

On April 10, the state Board of Regents of Higher Education voted to raise tuition for state residents by $88. According to the report tuition has increased at UMass at a rate of 400 percent since 1975. In similar state institutions nation wide tuition has increased at a rate of 225 percent. As a result, "UMass is among the most expensive public Universities in the country the report stated.

According to the report "the record shows that the university is losing its reputation as a school for working people of Massachusetts." In 1982, the university accepted more students from families with incomes of over $50,000 per year than students from families with incomes under $20,000.

The report charges that the regents want to raise tuition annually until it reached a level equal to 33 percent of the cost of education. According to Beth Lait, a member of the Tuition Issue Team, "the board makes it seem like they'll stop the increases when tuition equals one-third the cost, but because the cost of education keeps going up with inflation, it will never reach the one-third point."

Cassidy said that in the fall SCERA plans to begin a letter drive urging senators and representatives to be more considerate to the needs of students before planning further cuts. He also said SCERA is trying to initiate legislation which will freeze state tuition for a period of three years.

Campus groups to lead national prayer day

By DANIEL WHITE
Collegian Staff

Campus Crusade for Christ, along with the Navigators, the Intervarsity Christian Fellowship, and the New Testament Fellowship are sponsoring a prayer session by the campus pond today as part of the National Day of Prayer.

The gathering will begin at noon on the tower library side of the pond and will involve, "spending some time in prayer for the nation and the world," Chris Willard, president of Campus Crusade for Christ and coordinator of the event, said.

The format will be informal, Willard said, and will consist of prayers directed at various topics, including world peace.

Willard said the purpose of the event is to "influence individuals to change the world," and to help people "come to understand they can have a personal relationship with God through Jesus Christ."

Tonight, there will be another meeting at Chapin Hall at Amherst College from 7 to 8:30 p.m. The meeting will include members of local churches from Amherst and Northampton and will follow the same format as the earlier event, Willard said.

Willard said the first national day of prayer occurred in 1775 and was called for by the Continental Congress. Since then the day has occurred sporadically until 1952 when Congress instructed the president to enact them every year.

Willard said he expected 100 people to attend the day session and more at night.

that any lawsuit may cause students to lose control of the Student Activities Trust Fund.

"If anything is going to be detrimental, like lawsuits would have been, to the student control of the SATF, we have to come to a compromise," Cerrato said.

Piltch said she is "pleased" that her position was funded, but added, "I'm sad that their rationale was because of legal grounds rather than on the detrimental effect that the loss of the director of SCERA and LSO positions would have on students."

She added, "Though we want no RSOs (Registered Student Organizations) to take cuts, the loss of the anti-oppression coordinator has and will continue to hurt our organization."

In other business, the senate voted down a motion demanding that the Everywoman's Center reverse their decision to have a member of the Palestinian Liberation Organization to speak on campus, because of that group's anti-Semitic stance.

"I was very shocked that groups that are supposed to be so socially aware would argue for a terrorist groups to come here," said Joel Rabinowitz of the Jewish Caucus, the motion's proponent.

A lease is usually for 12 months including a required security deposit and first and last month's rent.

Financial obligations can plague people, especially if a student is a first-time renter. Plans should be made on how much money will be needed after paying the monthly rent to meet food, fuel and miscellaneous bills. If more than one person will be sharing a rented property, Levenson said, everyone's financial contributions should be worked out in advance so no one is left with the lion's share of the rent burden.

Even after a rental property with pets and undergraduate males have a rough time becoming accepted as tenants.

Levenson said that people with pets and undergraduate males have a rough time becoming accepted as tenants.

Students are not covered as students under discrimination laws. They are not, Levenson said, a protected category under the discrimination statutes and can be refused housing if the reason given by the landlord is that the would be renter is a student.

However, if another reason for a housing refusal is suspected, the office can render assistance. It is the fair housing office for the town of Amherst and can refer people to the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination.

If anyone believes they have been denied housing because of discrimination, Levenson said, her office would like to know about it. It can also refer people to legal services and the Mediation Project, a UMass organization which helps resolve disputes between two or more parties.

Polish constitution celebrated

One hundred and ninety-four years after Poland adopted a constitution providing for civil and religious freedoms, Massachusetts celebrates that anniversary in a ceremony at the Statehouse tomorrow while the University of Massachusetts honors the event with a speech by the former U.S. ambassador to Poland tonight.

Richard T. Davies will discuss the Polish constitution of 1791, the first constitution ever in Europe, and talk about the current political situation in Poland and relations between the country and the United States.

The lecture will start at 8 p.m. in Campus Center room 165-9 and is free and open to the public. Kenneth M. Lamanski, D-Chicopee will introduce the former ambassador.

THEY DRANK FRESH BEER.
YOU DRINK COOKED BEER.

Back in the days when baseball was just beginning, there was no such thing as bottled beer or beer in cans.

Those were the great days of draft beer, fresh from the keg.

Like the draft they brewed at Frederic Miller's old Plank Road Brewery. It had a smooth, fresh taste those horsehide heroes loved as much as they loved baseball.

A taste that's hard to find in today's bottles and cans. Because most beers, in bottles and cans, are pasteurized. Cooked to 140 degrees to preserve their shelf life. So they lose that fresh, draft taste.

But now there's a bottled beer that's not cooked. It's specially cold-filtered instead. To keep the true taste of fresh draft.

Introducing Plank Road Original Draught. It tastes as fresh from the bottle as it does from the keg.

Samuel Bowles, a member of the commission and an economics professor, was the only faculty member to speak. "We (commission members) have come to the conclusion, I am sad to say, that this University does continue to have money invested in South Africa," he said, adding that he was "confident the president (of UMass) will move swiftly to divest" now that the policy violations have come to light.

"I don't want to have this University associated in any way with that brutal and racist regime," he said.

About 200 students initially marched to Brand's office, and many resolved to stay there until they obtained a statement from him, even though he was out of town. Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey met briefly with the group, and offered to discuss the matter outside but was turned down. He said trustee approval was needed to meet the students' demands.

During his visit, the office was sealed and remained so for the rest of the afternoon. People were permitted to leave but not enter.

Duffey, who called the demand to sell the stocks immediately "unreasonable," said he himself had been arrested for civil disobedience and that he had "great respect for those students that decided to pay for the consequences of their actions."

But, he said, "I have to preserve this University for the students who are here to get an education" and all students arrested will face disciplinary action.

When the office officially closed at 4:30 p.m., a cadre of 13 police officers (photo, page 4) marched to the building and assisted colleagues already inside with loading - often carrying - the protesters onto a UMass bus that was pulled up to the back door.

About 50 protesters surrounded the vehicle, shouting "apartheid kills" and "trustees, you know, South Africa stocks have got to go." The supporters attempted to block the path of the bus as it pulled away, and a 33rd arrest was made as police pushed the crowd out of the road.

The group escorted the bus down the road to Dickinson Hall parking lot, when gas was discovered leaking from it but the passengers remained on board.

Officials said arrests were made yesterday because the business of the office "came to a halt," whereas the sit-in in Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson's office last month permitted operations to go on.

Collegian staff member James Shanahan also contributed to this report.

Smith symposium will discuss U.S. refugee policy aspects

By DANIEL WHITE
Collegian Staff

A three-day symposium on aspects of United States refugee policy begins today at Smith College.

The symposium will bring together 30 experts in this field for meetings and discussions, according to Peter Rose, the organizer of the event and a professor of anthropology and sociology at Smith.

The symposium will open tonight with a panel discussion, "Toward a Sociology of Exile" in the Wright Hall foyer at 4 p.m.

Rose, who has been involved in the refugee issue for five years, teaches courses on the subject and often encourages his students to get involved, he said

Tomorrow there will be a discussion on "Refugees in Global Perspective" at 9:15, in Wright Hall Common Room followed by a panel on "Refugees and American Society" at 11:15 a.m. At 3 p.m. a session on "Theory and Practice" will be held in Seelye Hall room 10.

At 9:30 a.m. a session called "Informing the Educators" will feature a speech by Kitty Dukakis, a member of the Massachusetts Governors Advisory Council in Seelye Hall room 10.

The final session, "Where Do We Go From Here?" will start at 11:30 a.m.

All events are free and open to the public.

Statistics center helps students add it all up

By HEATHER HANLON
Collegian Correspondent

Students in need of advice on efficient designs for research projects and proper methods of data collected in those projects can find help in an on-campus service staffed by professional statisticians.

The Statistical Consulting Center is available to students from the University and Five College area as well as to outside clients such as businesses.

Professors Don Geman and Joseph Horowitz of the mathematics and statistics department founded the center in 1981. The two professors wanted to get involved in a new project involving statistics and both had received calls asking for help with statistical consulting. They arranged the center for this purpose with consultants including faculty form UMass, Smith, Mount Holyoke, Amherst and Hampshire College, advanced graduate students from various University departments, and professional staff from the University Computing Center. The services of the center are available free to the Five College community, including faculty, staff and students (both graduate and undergraduate).

"The Center is largely funded by the Dean of the Faculty of Natural Sciences and Math. We are also funded through fees for the consultants from outside clients. Our funds are under $30,000 and maybe even under $20,000. We are not an expensive project," Horowitz said.

The primary goal of the center is to help individuals or groups undertaking studies in which data is going to be collected and analyzed.

Horowitz said, "The purpose of this facility is to support the research effort at the University, in businesses, and federal, state, and local government."

Leftist deception all around us

The most disturbing event of the last few months involves the huge increase in the rate of leftist deception, both in America and particularly here at the University of Massachusetts. There are a few issues the activists have concentrated on, such as South African divestment and nuclear disarmament. But it is especially angering to see so much calculated deception being spread by the National Sandinista Liberation Front and its American sympathizers concerning the situation in Nicaragua. At UMass, it is obvious that the local leftists have become victims of their own advice: "Don't get fooled again."

Peter Dow

One if their favorite arguments is that the Sandinistas are nice people and enjoy popular support. This statement is acceptable only as long as you ignore the facts. Many times in this column examples have appeared of Sandinista disregard for basic human rights and their use of brutal violence; among these include the treatment of Miskito, Sumo, and Rama Indians. It is deplorable that the plight of these oppressed Nicaraguan natives is virtually ignored by many "human rights" organizations and is also downplayed by leftist propaganda in the U.S.

Many thousands of the Indian population have been forced into "relocation" camps by the Sandinistas , while thousands more have fled into Honduras as refugees. The Sandinistas have dismissed the systematic relocation of Indians into camps as an attempt to move them out of the war zone. Yet the real reason for this movement is to eliminate assistance to the rebels, since the insurgents enjoy much popular support in these northern and eastern sections of the country.

While the Sandinistas try to justify their relocation program, they cannot explain away their widespread destruction of Indian Villages. This frequent devastation of Indian crops, livestock ,and life are all carried out with the so-called "defensive" MI-24 Hind helicoptors, courtesy of the Soviet Union. It is indeed hypocritical for the Sandinistas to claim that the rebels are committing economic warfare, when the FSLN forces are using the same tactics against the Indian and rural non-Indian population. Due in large part to the Sandinista oppression, more than 6,000 Indians have taken up arms against them, and now fight for control of their native homeland. There are two Indian resistance groups currently active in military operations. MISURASATA, led by Brooklyn Rivera, operates in Southeastern Nicaragua in association with ARDE. In the central and northern regions of Nicaragua, MISURA, led by Steadman Fagoth, works closely with the FDN. Both Indian groups are fighting to remove the FSLN government domination in the region.

What about the Sandinista claims that the rebels are just ex-national guardsmen who wish to regain power? Those who wish to believe this are merely additional victims of Sandinista propaganda. A quick review of the rebel leadership illustrates the fact that they were opponents of Somoza and many were Sandinistas in 1979 and before. They now understand that the "revolution" has ignored its promises , and have organized an armed opposition which , if successful, will give the Nicaraguan people the freedoms and rights they fought for and deserve. In addition, many of the troops consist of farmers and peasants who are angered at the Sandinista efforts to control their lives and to confiscate their property, as the FSLN attempts to organize the rural population into "collectives" or forces others into relocation camps.

The Sandinistas also claim that the rebels are "atrocious" in their treatment of the rural population. These blatant lies, especially in light of the fact that many of these "atrocities" can be attributed to the Sandinistas. The FSLN troops have recently adopted the tactic of disguising themselves as rebel troops and raiding villages, mercilessly killing the occupants. One of these squads, under the command of a Sandinista captain named I.Calderon, attacked a village as a group of rebels; but their deceptive tactic failed, as the residents discovered their true identity. But the Sandinistas released the untrue story of a rebel attack, and it was subsequently printed as such in the American media without any questioning of its validity.

The deceptive practices of the FSLN and its American sympathizers are especially disturbing since they distort reality. By persuading congress not to fund the democratic fighters in Nicaragua, the Sandinistas have put America on the course of troop commitment in Central America. The Reagan administration's program is correct, since its support for the rebels would have made direct American involvment unnecessary. If America does go to war with the Communists in Central America, it will not be the fault of Ronald Reagan; the blame will rest on the shoulders of the leftist dupes in America who beleived the Sandinista propaganda and deception Peter Dow is a Collegian columnist.

Bitburg visit shouldn't be a surprise

Douglas L. Landry

What's all this fuss about the esteemed Ronald Reagan visiting a Nazi war hero cemetery? I mean this is nothing new for the man who has spent his entire career in a historical void. It does not surprise me in the least. What does surprise me is that Ronald Reagan has been blundering his whole life long, and only now does the real impact of it come to light.

Think real hard about the little gems our fearless leader has pulled off in recent memory. Remember the line, "The bombing begins in five minutes?" How about the one about trees causing more air pollution than industry? Did you know that, according to Ronald Reagan, that John F. Kennedy was a Marxist? Reagan also believes that the Nicaraguan contras are the moral equivalent of our founding fathers. Somehow, I find it hard to believe that Thomas Jefferson and John Adams slaughtered innocent women and children, bombed hospitals and schools—all in the name of freedom and liberty. Our president has openly stated that he would have voted against the 1964 Civil Rights Act. And doesn't it make you rest easy at night when he states, "We have never interfered in the internal government of a country and have no intention of doing so, never have had any thought of that kind," as he did on Sept. 28, 1982? According to Ronald Reagan, higher tuition in colleges and universities would help "to get rid of undesirables." The list of ridiculous distortions of the truth, lies, misinformation and blunders is endless. Why, then, all the hoopla about the visit to Bitburg?

After all, isn't it about time we mend our differences with our European allies? Reagan, I know it may be a surprise to you that we have had diplomatic relations with West Germany for the last 40 years. Why do you try to justify your visit with another distortion of reality?

I am not going to analyze the reasons why Reagan should not visit Bitburg.(every human being with a sense of morality knows why he should not honor a bunch of murderous criminals who knew no shame in conducting genocide on an entire continent.) Instead, I am writing of the fact that Reagan has persistently and consistently blinded the American public with flag-waving patriotism, while shunning the dispossessed citizens of this country he "loves" and "cares" for. The Great Communicator has turned the presidency into a theatrical role, not one of leadership and initiative. Imagery, reputation and grandeur are the keys to a successful presidency, so he thinks. Never mind the minor details of housing the homeless, feeding the hungry or clothing the naked. After all, it is their choice to be that way, right, Ronnie?

And the gullible American public swallows his lies hook, line and sinker. Reagan is the perfect practitioner of the Hitlerian philosophy of the more a lie is told, the more it will be believed. He will not, however, get away with this one. For the first time during his much-too-long tenure, the American public has woken up to find out what kind of a man Ronald Reagan really is—a misguided, uninformed, blundering idiot with no sense of history or shame. What a thing to say about the leader of the "greatest nation on earth." But, sadly, it is the truth.

And now, Donald Regan, the chief of staff of the White House, has informed us that Reagan is deeply hurt, personally, over this situation. Reagan himself has cried out that he is being treated unfairly. I'm sorry, but no ounce of sympathy will be shed from my soul for Ronald Reagan. This is the man who completely turned around the Civil Rights Movement, shunned the poor, disregarded minorities, lied his way into the White House and now has offended a vast majority of Americans. Yet, he maintains that he is correct in honoring dead Nazis. Where is his morality, his shame, his integrity?

It is about time that the American public wakes up and sees, once and for all, Ronald Reagan's true self. He has been showing it for more than 30 years, and most likely will continue in his ways. Perhaps, if the public continues to criticize him, he will also wake up from his 76-year-long dream and realize some of the mistakes he has made, not the least of which is his visit to Bitburg. But, then again, you can't teach an old goat new tricks.

Douglas L. Landry is a UMass student.

Letters to the Editor

A good place for him to start promoting freedom

What is to you "Left wing," to us is the reality under which we live every day. For example, the waging war in Nicaragua and El Salvador, which might be a new excitement for you, but is an old issue among us.

Beside the contradiction posed by the young Republicans and other community members, AHORA had a successful Latin American Week, one where each audience was exposed to a different kind of "awareness."

Although AHORA has sponsored political events in the past, we mainly concentrate in raising cultural awareness about the Latino community. We also do community outreach throughout the Pioneer Valley. At the moment, we are collecting clothing, medicine and housewares to aid the victims of an earthquake in Chile.

Stephen C. Erickson, if you are really interested in promoting freedom, this may be a good area for you to start.

Linda Velazquez
AHORA president

Candidate for Tip's seat may have trouble with unions

Andrew M. Paven

There will be no official announcement for a couple of weeks, but here at UMass last weekend the first hat was tossed into what promises to be a crowded ring, in pursuit of Thomas P. (Tip) O'Neill's congressional seat which will be vacated Nov. '86.

The tosser, State Representative Tom Vallely, D-Boston, said while introducing himself at a political science symposium, "I will be a candidate for Congress in 1986." A woman in the audience asked, "What district?" "The 8th," Vallely said, 'Tip O'Neill's district." A third-term congressman from the same state district as Fr. Robert Drinan and Rep. Barney Frank, Vallely was here to take part in a symposium sponsored by UMass' political science department.

A graduate of UMass/Boston and Harvard's Kennedy School of Government, Vallely is also a veteran of the Vietnam War. He enlisted in the Marines, was awarded a Silver Star for valor and was later a prominent member of Vietnam Veterans Against the War. His foreign policy views have been shaped by his experience.

He argued persuasively for an end to rigid doctrine in U.S. foreign policy, arguing instead for a flexible policy that considers each country separately. He sounded not at all out of his league while sitting on a distinguished panel that included Hendrik Hertzberg, contributing editor of The New Republic and Prof. Guenter Lewy of the UMass political science department. "The right," Vallely said, "misunderstands Nicaragua as much as the left misunderstands El Salvador."

Noting the irony of the differing views of some academics and veterans, Vallely said, "I am forever indebted to Prof. Lewy (who wrote a book on U.S. strategy in Vietnam) for enlightening me as to what our strategy was over there. I never knew we had one."

Currently Vallely is involved in a tough fight in the State House. He is the sponsor of a bill that would do away with the prevailing wage law, which was enacted in 1914 and mandates that the state pay the highest regional union wage to workers on state projects (day laborers, summer help and maintenance workers, among others are not included).

Labor unions and supporters staunchly oppose the proposed change. "I think it reflects an anti-union drive," said Harvey Friedman, chairman of the labor studies department at UMass. The policy that would be enacted if the bill passes would "lend itself to manipulation by the Legislative and Executive branches."

Other labor supporters voiced long-term concerns about less money being paid into pension and health and welfare funds for union workers. If these funds are depleted, more money might have to be paid to workers in years to come by government, in the form of Medicaid and Social Security. "In the short run you may save money," said one labor lawyer, "but in the long run, for a number of reasons, (the change) may prove costly."

Vallely supports the change because he believes it would save the state money and would lower costs for municipal projects that may be prohibitively expensive, because of high prevailing wages.

An interesting question is whether Vallely will be hurt politically by his disfavor among unions. The 8th District has more union-member constituents than does Vallely's current district, which includes Beacon Hill and the Back Bay.

"It depends how many other liberals are in the primary," said one labor supporter. "The unions might hurt him in the primary," said another, "that's where they can deliver, not in the general election." But one supporter added that the case against the prevailing wage is easier to make to the public, because its benefits are short-term, whereas the argument for it is more complicated.

Asked if he thought the issue would hurt Vallely, Prof. Ralph Whitehead, a friend and adviser to Vallely said, "If Ted (Kennedy) Jr. is in the race, he will be the AFL-CIO's candidate and he has the resources and name recognition" to add to his strength.

But one observer added that if the unions attack Vallely, they may make him stand out from what promises to be a crowded field, something he might have difficulty doing on his own.

He is an articulate and charismatic speaker who has the courage of his convictions. And while it may well be that the fight over prevailing wages is the wrong way to approach a real problem, Vallely certainly has more experience in life and politics and is a more credible candidate that the much ballyhooed Ted Kennedy Jr.

Letters to the Editor

Why must the Genocide constantly be proven?

Once again the Armenian Genocide is denied. A group of Turkish students described the Genocide in an advertisement as "alleged" and "contrived." This outrages me. As an Armenian I strongly desire to discuss this horrible tragedy and share my experience with others so we can all learn. However, once again I have to step back and establish that the Genocide ever happened. Documentation of the Genocide is so large I don't know where to start. But in order to make this more relative to UMass students, I have chosen a few quotes from famous Americans.

"...When the Turkish authorities gave the orders for these deportations, they were merely giving the death warrant to a whole race...The great massacres and persecutions of the past seem almost insignificant when compared to the sufferings of the Armenian race in 1915."

—Henry Morgenthau
U.S. Ambassador to Turkey (1913-1916)

"...the testimony adduced at the hearing conducted by the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations have clearly established the truth of the reported massacres and other atrocities from which the Armenian people have suffered."

—U.S. Senate Resolution 359 (May 13, 1920)

"An estimated one and a half million persons were murdered during the first genocide of the 20th century, yet even though the tragedy of history has not been corrected, Armenians, wherever they are, continue to maintain their culture and strong desire for freedom."

—Jimmy Carter

The documentation goes on and on. But Armenians don't need these formal records, we know what happened. The Turkish students in yesterday's advertisement claimed that "in the armed Armenian resistance to exile, many Turkish and Armenian people were killed." Don't tell me that my grandmother who was eight years old was participating in "armed resistance" and needed to be "exiled" in the desert without food or water. And don't tell me that my grandfather's extended family of 42 needed to be mutilated and raped in the middle of the night by Turkish soldiers because they were "conspiring" to resist. Furthermore, yesterday's advertisement tried to paint Armenians as newcomers in the Ottoman Empire, who threatened legitimate Turkish sovereignty in the area. This is ridiculous because Armenians had been living in those lands since before the Roman Empire, and had a thriving civilization thousands of years before Turks even entered that part of the world. In any case, the Armenian nationalism that did exist (there were a few very small groups of radicals who never actually took arms until the massacres started) did not justify the attempted systematic extermination of all Armenian men, women and children.

—People of Turkish descent have no reason to be ashamed of their heritage. But they have an obligation to face their history. Let the truth be known about the Armenians, so that humanity can learn to be more humane in the future.

Correction

Tuesday, the Collegian ran a paid advertisment signed by Turkish students at UMass, disputing the Armenian Genocide. There were factual errors in that advertisement.

First, the advertisement states that the number of deaths in the genocide, according to the Armenians, has risen in the past few years. There was an implication that the figure had significantly been increased on posters at UMass in that time. In fact, for the past three years the same posters have been used, citing that 1.5 million Armenians were killed in the genocide.

The genocide did not take place only in 1915 as the advertisement states, but in fact for a period of five years. However, the year most closely identified with the genocide is 1915.

The advertisement also states that pictures from the Jewish Holocaust have been used and incorrectly labeled as ones taken of the Armenian genocide when in fact there do exist hundreds of photographs taken in Turkey during the genocide.

The Collegian recognizes that paid editorial advertisements should be carefully looked at and checked for factual errors prior to printing and it will take action to prevent the appearance of such ads in the future.

Is the 'truth' really the whole truth?

We are writing this letter in response to the advertisement submitted by the "Turkish Students of UMass" that appeared in Tuesday's Collegian. One and a half million Armenians died in the genocide ordered by Talaat Bay, the Turkish leader of the Ottoman Empire. This is neither "contrived, gratuitous or fallacious." During WWI, the Armenians were persecuted on both a political and a religious basis.

Turkey wanted to gain control of the country of Armenia because it was in a strategically advantageous position. Turkish soldiers were ordered to convert Armenians to the Moslem faith and to kill those who chose to stand by their Christian faith. One and a half million died as a result.

We get these facts not only from historical literature but also from those who witnessed the persecution of their people. Can the "Turkish Students of UMass" tell Sarah Ackmajian, one of my grandmothers, who was six years-old in 1915, that she did not see her 13 brothers and sisters and parents, tortured and slaughtered while she hid from the Turkish soldiers.

Can the "Turkish Students of UMass" tell Virginia Koumjian, another one of my grandmothers, that she was not in an orphanage, separated from her family when fleeing for their lives. After a long search Virginia was reunited with her family in the United States. These are not "buzz words." Our intention here is to tell the real "Truth Behind the Story." Our intention is not to attack the Turkish people but to inform the University community that this genocide actually occurred.

Is the "Truth Behind the Story" really the truth? Since this is obviously someone's opinion, we feel this article should have appeared on the Opinion page rather than on a news page where readers may accept it as fact. We would like to have addressed the writer but no name was associated with the letter. Why? If the name was "withheld on request," fine. Or, is there an individual who feels s/he can speak for all the "Turkish Students at UMass."

The Collegian and many editors and staff people have shown a real concern for truth and awareness. We hope this type of thoughtlessness does not occur again.

Let's send Dow on a long, long trip

I propose that we send Peter Dow and his preppy naive attitude to Central America and let him participate first-hand in the work force, and perhaps his eyes will open to the reason why 14-year-old children carry rifles amidst the steamy jungles of oppression. His arrogant youthful senility only dramatically radiates the blind resurgence of false "patriotism" sweeping this country like an ignorant prairie fire. Shame on you, Peter Dow. Shame on you, America. Will you ever wake up? By the way, Dow, when you flee Central America, remember the U.S.A. doesn't accept refugees.

Songs from the Big Chair
Tears for Fears
Polygram Records

By ELIZABETH C. LANGLOIS
Collegian Staff

Tears for Fears are quickly becoming the new sultans of synth

Tears For Fears' (TFF) new album is their bid for major commercial acceptance. The Hurting was their sorely neglected first album, except for the minor hit "Mad World." College radio loved it, for obvious reasons. Here were two disillusioned guys expounding their Janovian values (more on Janov later) through the marriage of high technology (all the keyboard gadgetry that you can imagine) and, of all things, acoustic guitar. However, as great as that album was, it still sounded a bit sterile, as if all these observations were made at a great distance through a cold, clinical eye.

So Roland Orzabal and Curt Smith, co-singers, and the two guys most associated with TFF (although keyboardist Ian Stanley cowrites most of the songs with Orzabal), returned to Bath, and tried to rethink their path. What followed were a few singles, 'Shout" which was a biggie in the UK, but hasn't been released as a single yet here, and 'The Way You Are" which flopped. The band returned to the studio and recorded what they said was turning out to be "The Hurting Part II."

It's taken them a while, but we now have 'Songs from the Big Chair," recorded in Ian Stanley's house. "Everybody Wants to Rule the World" is a smash hit as I speak, and it's anybody's guess what the band will release as their next single. Sides one and two are fairly equally balanced in terms of "happy" songs and more upbeat material. Certainly, 'Everybody..." and "The Working Hour" are joyous in comparison to "Shout" or previous efforts like "Watch Me Bleed" or "Suffer the Children." The band has not abandoned their Janovian fixation, one listen to "Shout" with its lyric, "Shout, shout, let it all out..." will convince you of that.

One of the basic principles of Arthur Janov, the originator of Primal Therapy and the Primal Scream (remember John Lennon?), is that there should be no repression of emotions. Pain should be felt, and others should know about it as well.

There is a heavier emphasis on the first side on danceable rhythms, and a beefing up of the "real" instrumentation used (heavier chording on electric guitars, etc.) which really propels the songs. "The Working Hour" is a lovely song with its sensual sax intro, and is one of the most stunning tracks on the album. "Mother's Talk" is, however, a rather dull track with an ordinary funk beat.

Side two is less commercially oriented than the first side, with a collection of lovely tunes. From "I Believe" to "Listen," the band uses synths the way they were meant to be - soaring with extremely melodic fancy - not unlike Eno or Bill Nelson at times, combined with the delicious layering of other instruments. It shows the band to be adept at creating haunting, atmospheric mood music which is basically TFF at their best.

For those of you interested in investigating the more experimental side of the band, the import cassette on Polygram might be worth seeking out. It has a live version of "Broken," and five almost entirely instrumental tracks complete with found vocals and strange sounds. It might be of interest to the alternative radio audience who are tired of hearing TFF's recent success on the right side of the radio dial. I should warn, however, that while the material is okay, in comparison to other artists who deal exclusively in this genre of music, it's a bit ordinary.

Don't expect "The Hurting Part II." Expect the unexpected

Why Are All the Good People Going Crazy
The Outnumbered
Homestead Records

By ELIZABETH C. LANGLOIS
Collegian Staff

The Outnumbered are a really fine band who come from a part of the country which doesn't seem to breed many great bands. We've had the Shoes from Zion, Illinois, and now we have the Outnumbered who hail from the same place as (dare I say it? retch, retch!) REO Speedwagon, which is Champaign, Illinois. Geographical location is the only thing that they have in common with the aforementioned band.

The songs on the album deal with the usual themes - love, depression, war and comments about bourgeois society. However, the lyrics aren't silly, and carry some weight. The band's only psychedelic track, "Cover Me With Flowers," deals with violence, and is a peace protest of sorts as its author says, "But I'm not gonna take up arms....Just cover me with flowers."

The band boasts three songwriters, most notably guitarists Jon Ginoli and bassist Paul Budin. Some especially striking songs are "You need a Babysitter," and "Sit With Me in the Dark." And building its intensity on minor chords is "Don't You Feel It?" Unlike some pop bands, these guys are not writing happy lyrics and coupling them with upbeat music. The aforementioned track builds to a white noise wall of guitar before cascading back to the central hook. However, more often than not, the songs are in major keys and the high harmonies are infectious, as in the very nice "Back to Square One."

If you want to hear more of their album, listen to your local radio station(s). Or better yet, go out and buy it. It's a real steal.

ARTS

live wire
by Peter Wissoker

No catchy lead this week. There have been some really good concerts in the area in the past couple of weeks. The Coyote Sisters were good as was Santana. Tonight there is a plethora (a whole bunch) of concerts at all your favorite venues. And so off we go. . .

At the Calvin Theatre Canadian singer/songwriter Bruce Cockburn will be playing one show. His last visit to the valley was remarkable, by all accounts, but who needs extraneous platitudes.

Linda Tillery will bring some of her socially supportive music to Pearl Street tonight. Formerly lead singer of the San Francisco band, Loading Zone, Tillery has synthesized her political views and apparently is her own woman now, and the rage as well.

Guitarist in the ephemeral sense, Pierre Bensusan, will be at the Iron Horse tonight. Apparently this weaver of fine rhythms and melodies has added some interesting boxes to his presentation so this solo performance will be able to echo and ring as well as sing. Just kidding, this man should be at the top of the Windham Hill charts even if he isn't on that label.

Both today and tomorrow there will be bands playing on the pyramids in Southwest from 2-6 pm. Friday night Circle will be at the Hatch for free. Oh yes, Warren Zevon will stagger around the stage at Toad's Place in New Haven tonight.

On Saturday, the BMCP Allstars will be out with Breakdancers at the Pyramids from 2-6 pm. It should be fun to see them breaking on the steps of the pyramids; some kind of Busby-Herkley affair, breakers in three dimensional pyramidal form. Let's hope all goes well. The Firm will be at the Hartford Civic Center on Saturday as well. I wonder if Jimmy Page has learned any new guitar solos since the record was released? Good luck to all who go.

Sunday is, of course, the Southwest Concert with Otis Day and the Knights, Girls Night Out and Nexus (Night). After the concert is over you might head to Pearl Street to see San Franciscans, The Dynatones, who are sort of a mellow version of the Blasters.

Also on Sunday night Nana Vasconcelos will be playing at the Iron Horse. Vasconcelos has played with Pat Metheny, Jean-Luc Ponty and others. For those who saw the Al Dimeiola show he is an equal of Aierto. He will be playing a solo show. He's been getting really good reviews in the Times and the Village Voice.

Monday night County Joe of Fish fame will be at the Iron Horse. He's reputed not to be burned out and to take requests.

Finally Los Jaivas one of Latin Americas leading bands will be at Pearl Street on Wednesday.

Trivia Question: Last weeks answer was Oberlin and the prize was a ticket to Tower of Power. This week's prize is two tickets to see the Dynatones at Pearl Street. The Dynatones are an R&B group, so, what R&B singer wrote the song Respect? Easy enough. Bring your answer with your name and phone number down to the Arts desk along with the time you brought it down.

Otis Day will entertain the Southwest concert crowd this Sunday

Sing'n' the blues

By JACK BRESNAHAN
Collegian Staff

The Robert Cray Band took me by surprise on Monday night.

I felt that I was hearing someone who is going to be very big in the next few years. That is not to say he hasn't already made it fairly big. Only 31, Cray has three albums to his credit, and has played with the likes of Muddy Waters, Albert Collins, George Thorogood, and even Joan Armatrading and the Grateful Dead. His successful international tours and festival dates leave him presently unparalleled. His melodious voice is his signature, and the understated blues are his song. His guitar playing reflects the styles of Magic Sam and T-Bone Walker, while he adapts the songs of a host of blues greats.

The second set started with "Porchlight" and "The Last Time," from their latest album Bad Influence. Next came "Chicken Shack" which featured Peter Boe on keyboards, as well as the title cut. Also came the first of a pair of Albert King songs, "Natural Ball," and Eddy Floyd's "Got To Make A Comeback." Albert King named his latest album after Cray's song "Phone Booth," which we also got to hear (...I'm in a phone booth baby, and I'm standing in the rain..."). They finished the set with a toned-down version of Albert Collin's "Don't Lose Your Cool."

The final segment began with "I'll Pay For It Now," which filled the dance floor at the onset. That was followed by the bouncy "That Ain't The Way You Do It," and Elmore James' "No Love In My Heart," with Robert doing without the slide but getting the same effect. That song is even on the jukebox at Hugo's. A slow number by William Bell came next, "Show What You Got," and then to ("lowdown and dirty on this one") soulful "False Accusations." Also covered were "Don't Let My Baby Ride," and Eddie Boyd's classic "Blues With A Feeling," which owed a lot to the rhythm section.

Encoring with a tune called "I Got Loaded" by Little Bob and The Lollipops, circa 1952, the band showed the influence of these earlier blues musicians. Robert Cray will be a carrier of the blues tradition into the future, as well as further expanding the blues idiom.

Santana soars

Santana
At the Fine Arts Center
Tuesday, April 30

By WILLIAM SPAIN
Collegian Staff

For the second time in three years, Santana came to UMass to perform for an enthusiastic capacity crowd. As one of the best and most well-known 1960s era bands still around, they were preceded by high expectations from many in this community.

They did not disappoint. In a two and a half hour Fine Arts Center show marked by soaring instrumentals, they delivered a mixture of old and new tunes that should have satisfied even the most demanding Santana fan.

The major difference between Tuesday night and a 1982 concert at the Cage was the return of Greg Walker, one of the lead singers. From his harmonious chanting on the opening songs "Brotherhood" and "Spirit" to his thundering leads on "Open Invitation" and "She's Not There", he has shown once again that his is the voice that best complements the music. He was sorely missed.

Carlos Santana has put his name to a group that has one of the best rapports of any I have ever seen and heard. His guitar work is perfect in the way that it comes and goes during a piece, cutting in more often to emphasize than to eclipse. When he throws his head back though, don't even bother trying to listen to the other guys. The sound becomes his (and yours) alone. He is one of the few people who can speak of love, of tenderness, and of beauty without ever saying a word.

This is the trademark of much of their best material. Unfortunately, many of the songs on the last few Santana albums have a kind of I-love-you-so-much-please-come-sit-beside-me quality to the lyrics that would take away from the melodies if they were not so good without them.

There is something about Santana that absorbs and draws the listener in like no othere band does. They have a way of making one feel like the music is all that really counts in this life. I kept my eyes closed during most of the show because I worried that visual images would only interrupt the sensation. It was a pleasure to be there.

OKAY, EVERYONE! THE PRESIDENT'S LATE FOR TODAY'S MEETING, SO THERE'S ONLY TIME FOR ONE...
MR. PRESIDENT! MR. PRESIDENT!
MY, YOU'RE ALL UP BRIGHT AND EARLY!
SIR, WILL YOU BE REPEATING TO MR. KOHL YOUR ASSERTION THAT BOTH JEWS AND GERMAN SOLDIERS WERE VICTIMS OF THE WAR?
WELL, I DOUBT MR. KOHL NEEDS ME TO TELL HIM THAT EVEN THOUGH THE WAR WAS WELL BEFORE HIS TIME, THE RECORD SHOWS YOU MANY FRESH FACED RECRUITS WERE VICTIMS OF WAR. MANY OF THEIR OFFICERS WERE SIMPLE VICTIMS TOO.
YOU KNOW, IN A STRANGE KIND OF WAY, EVEN HITLER WAS A VICTIM.
OKAY, THAT'S IT FOR TODAY, PEOPLE!

Commencement 1985

10:00 a.m., Saturday, May 25

All Candidates
There is no Commencement rehearsal for degree candidates. Candidates should assemble by school/college at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium no later than 9 a.m. graduation morning, May 25, 1985. Signs will be posted indicating schools, and Commencement Marshals will issue specific instructions and distribute programs. Upon signal, candidates will follow the Commencement Marshals to the assigned areas and be seated.

Candidates will receive diploma covers from the deans of their school or college. Diplomas will be mailed when all processing has been completed. Please be sure the Registrar has your correct permanent address.

Who is Eligible to Participate?
Undergraduate degree candidates who anticipate completing degree requirements by the end of the calendar year 1985. Questions concerning academic status should be directed to the Records Office, 213 Whitmore, 545-0555.

Master degree candidates who have previously submitted the Degree Application Form by April 30, 1985 to the Office of Degree Requirements stating the intention to complete all requirements. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, 545-0024.

Doctoral degree candidates who have completed all degree requirements by April 30, 1985. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, 545-0024.

Schedule of Events	Date	Time	Place

ROTC Commissioning	Sat., May 25	8:00 a.m.	FAC Concert Hall
1985 Commencement Ceremony	Sat., May 25	10 a.m.-12 noon	Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium

Recap: Commencement '85 is on Saturday, May 25, 10 a.m. Rain or Shine.

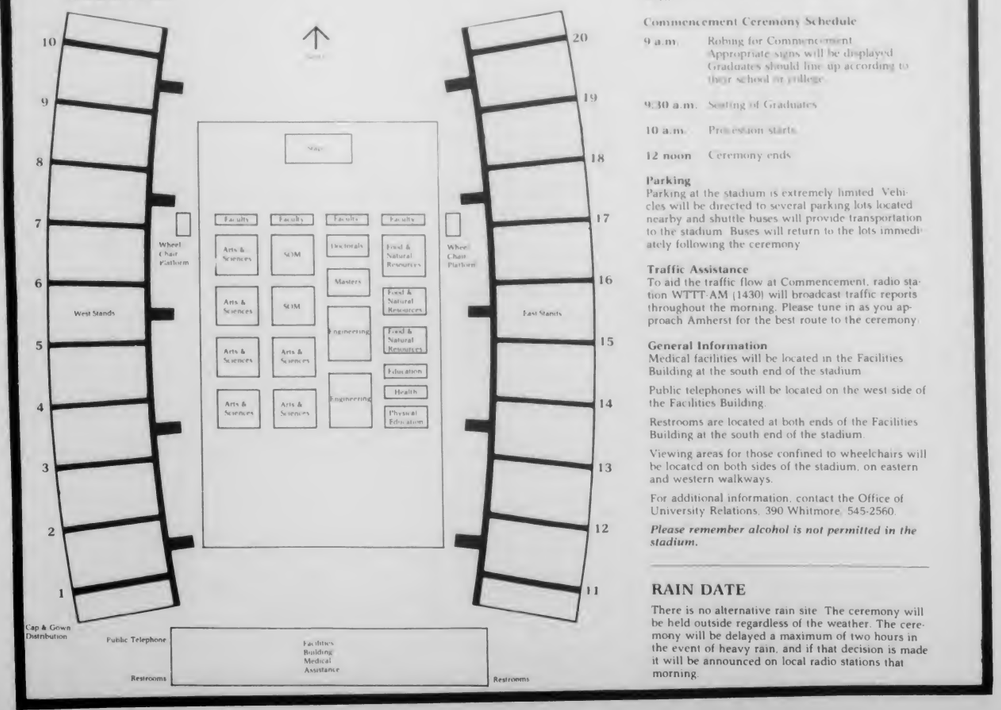
Stadium Plan



Faculty
Faculty and staff should assemble at the SOUTH end of the stadium on the gravel between the Facilities Building and the stadium wall. Faculty will be part of the processional and will be seated immediately in front of the candidates from each school and college.

Parents and Invited Guests/Plan to Arrive Early — Space is Limited
Since the Commencement Exercises are open to the public and guest seating is without reservation, parents and friends should plan to arrive early to ensure good seating.

Handicapped Seating
Viewing area for the handicapped will be located on both sides of the stadium on the eastern and western walkways. Since seating is limited, it is requested that only one person accompany the handicapped guest.

Invitations
There is no limit to the number of guests who may attend the ceremony and tickets are not required. Each student will receive a packet of six formal invitations.

Caps, Gowns, and Hoods
Undergraduate and Master Degree Candidates
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available at no charge (on presentation of an I.D. and announcement of the degree earned and the department awarding it) at the Textbook Annex, May 6-May 24, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

On Commencement Day, May 25, caps, gowns, and tassels may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the SOUTHWEST corner of Alumni Stadium.

Doctoral Degree Candidates
Doctoral caps, gowns, tassels, hoods and invitations will be available only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, April 29-May 24, Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. through 5 p.m., upon clearance by the Office of Degree Requirements. On Commencement Day, caps, gowns, tassels, and hoods may be obtained after 9 a.m. at the NORTHWEST end of the stadium (on the gravel area).

Doctoral candidates who plan to participate in the Commencement ceremony must have a hood. Each candidate's name will be announced over the stadium sound system and two officers of the University will drape the hood on the candidate's shoulders. Doctoral hoods can be purchased only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, at a cost of $30. (Five College Doctoral Hoods will be available at $42.95.) Doctoral hoods may be rented through the University Store at a cost of $10.

Rentals
Academic apparel for this year's University Commencement may be rented through the University Store. All faculty members are urged to place their orders as soon as possible. THE LAST DAY TO ORDER IS FRIDAY, MAY 17. Payment must be made at the time of order and there will be no refunds if apparel is not used. Academic apparel may also be purchased. For further information about rentals or purchases, please contact Connie Swiniarski at the University Store, 545-2619.

Accommodations
Many area motels are already booked for the evenings of May 24 and 25. A limited number of rooms in University dormitories will be available for relatives and their guests for the nights of May 24 and 25. Please contact the Conference Services Office, 918 Campus Center, (413) 545-3400, as soon as possible to request a form to register for dormitory housing. These forms must be returned with full payment to Conference Services no later than May 1 to guarantee your dormitory room reservation.

Food Services
Coffee, soft drinks, and donuts will be available at rotundas on both sides of the stadium toward the North.

Commencement Ceremony Schedule

9 a.m.	Robing for Commencement. Appropriate signs will be displayed. Graduates should line up according to their school or college.
9:30 a.m.	Seating of Graduates.
10 a.m.	Procession starts.
12 noon	Ceremony ends.

Parking
Parking at the stadium is extremely limited. Vehicles will be directed to several parking lots located nearby and shuttle buses will provide transportation to the stadium. Buses will return to the lots immediately following the ceremony.

Traffic Assistance
To aid the traffic flow at Commencement, radio station WTTT-AM (1430) will broadcast traffic reports throughout the morning. Please tune in as you approach Amherst for the best route to the ceremony.

General Information
Medical facilities will be located in the Facilities Building at the south end of the stadium.

Public telephones will be located on the west side of the Facilities Building.

Restrooms are located at both ends of the Facilities Building at the south end of the stadium.

Viewing areas for those confined to wheelchairs will be located on both sides of the stadium, on eastern and western walkways.

For additional information, contact the Office of University Relations, 390 Whitmore, 545-2560.

Please remember alcohol is not permitted in the stadium.

RAIN DATE

There is no alternative rain site. The ceremony will be held outside regardless of the weather. The ceremony will be delayed a maximum of two hours in the event of heavy rain, and if that decision is made it will be announced on local radio stations that morning.

Starters rest, so do bats, Minutemen lose 14-4

By BRYAN QUENZEL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts, playing with a patchwork lineup due to injuries, were trounced by Amherst College 14-4 yesterday at Amherst.

UMass Manager Dick Bergquist rested a number of his starters hoping to get them healthy for this weekend's Atlantic 10 playoffs in West Virginia.

"I didn't want to play the first stringers," said Bergquist. "We're really banged up and that concerns me more than the game."

Senior shortstop Angelo Salustri was limited to action at first base because of a sore back. Freshman utility infielder Darrin O'Connor replaced Salustri at his position and Rob Holiday, another freshman, started at second base.

Bergquist also rested his pitching staff as he brought freshman Pat McNamara up from the junior varsity squad to start on the mound for the Minutemen.

McNamara was stung for three runs on five hits in his three inning stint. Amherst leftfielder Jeff Templeton struck the big blow off of McNamara for the Lord Jeffs, a three run homer in the second.

As if the Minutemen were not giving enough of an advantage to Amherst, the umpires gave the Lord Jeffs a helping hand as well.

In the fourth inning Tom Pia came in to pitch for UMass. At the time, the score was still close at 3-2. Paul Foye led off the inning with a single to center. Designated hitter Bob Foote followed with a line shot over center fielder Steve Messina's head.

The ball bounced over the fence for what should have been a ground rule double, but the umpire ruled that it was a home run. After much argument and a conference with the home plate umpire, the ruling was changed to a ground rule double. Out came Amherst coach Bill Thurston complaining about the changed call. Once again the umpires changed their minds, and this time the decision stood.

The Lord Jeffs then unloaded on Pia, scoring five more runs in the inning to run their lead to 10-2 and effectively putting the game out of reach. Foote added another home run (this one legitimate) in the eighth.

One bright spot in the game for UMass was the play of Holiday. Playing just his fourth varsity game, the rookie went two-for-four making him five-for-eight at the plate this season.

Bergquist was not upset by his team's play and looked forward to the Minutemen's prospects this weekend. "It all hinges on Jim Knoph and Bob Kostro (pitchers)," said Bergquist, "those are our keys."

"I wanted us to be going into the tournament in a better frame of mind," said the manager, "but we'll be ready."

Steinberg on WMUA

Dick Steinberg, director of player personnel of the New England Patriots, will be the special guest on WMUA's (91.1 FM) sportstalk.

Gorillas provoked into action, 17-11

Fisk leads UM with four goals, defense solid

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

"I often wonder what it is that makes this team come ready to play for some games, yet unready for others," University of Massachusetts lacrosse coach Dick Garber questioned yesterday.

"Maybe I know what it is now. I'll whap each guy in the head with a stick before the game then they'll start playing like they can."

The Gorillas, provoked by some early Dartmouth cheap shots, ran their offense to near perfection and ran up a 17-11 victory yesterday before a sparse crowd at Boyden Field.

UMass midfielder Greg Fisk led the rampage with four goals. Sophomore Tom Carmean added three goals and four assists. Senior Toni Lukacovic had three goals and two assists. Mike Fiorini chipped in with a self-described "all-time career high" of five assists.

UMass, now 5-6 on the season, opened up a 3-2 first-period lead before going ahead 9-5 at the half. The Gorillas scored five straight third period goals to bury the Green. Garber liberally substituted in the fourth period as Dartmouth managed to make it somewhat respectable.

The Green, 2-7, came out in a zone defense that the Gorillas cut to shreds as Carmean, setting up behind the cage, directed a series of backdoor goals that put UMass in command.

Dartmouth took its only lead at 1-0 as Bob Mitchell beat goalie Gerry Moreau with 11:19 to go in the first period. Lukacovic and Carmean then ran the fastbreak with UM's leading scorer whipping a shot past Dartmouth goalie Phil Bayly with 8:36 to go. Lukacovic then added his first goal, assisted by Hatton, three minutes later and UM had a lead, one they would never lose.

Fiorini then threaded a great pass to Doug Musco from behind the cage and the sophomore stuffed in the third UMass goal with 4:35 to go. Dartmouth's Rob Cote scored the first of his four tallies to make it 3-2 as the period closed.

Carmean (from Matt O'Reilly), Scott Santarella (from Carmean), Fisk (from Fiorini), Fisk again (again from Fiorini), defenseman Tom Aldrich (from Lukacovic) and Lukacovic (from Carmean) all scored in the second period as UMass opened up a lead.

Aldrich's goal was a beauty as the junior defensemen carried the ball over the centerline unmolested, met some contact and passed to Lukacovic who drew the defense before feeding Aldrich.

In the third period, O'Reilly took a Carmean pass after the later checked Bayly off the ball and made it 11-5 with 10:25 left in the period. Fisk, Carmean, Lukacovic and freshman Kelley Carr then scored goals before Dartmouth's Andy Morton broke the string. O'Reilly took a Bubba Sandford feed with 1:35 left to start garbage time.

UMass freshman midfielder Al Rotatori unleashes a shot over Dartmouth goalie Scott Kehoe in second half action yesterday at Boyden Field. UMass handed the Big Green a 17-11 decision to go to 5-6 on the season. Sophomore attackman Tom Carmean led the Gorillas in scoring with three goals and four assists as UMass' attack peppered Dartmouth with 48 shots.

Fisk and freshman Pat Cain (assisted by Jim Farrell) scored fourth period goals as Dartmouth outscored UMass 4-2 in the final 15 minutes.

"They made the mistake of hitting us a few too many times and we just went out there and did what we had to do," Lukacovic said. "A zone is the type of defense that will last for just so long. They can't play us man-to-man, so I suppose it's their only option, but when you can draw the defense to you and find the man alone at the crease, it's a matter of time before you get the big lead."

Statistically, UMass enjoyed a 48-33 shot advantage and on man-up situations scored five times on 10 penalties. The Gorillas won 20-of-32 faceoffs with Seamus McGovern going 16-of-25. Moreau made 10 saves with freshman Quint Moores stopping four Dartmouth shots. UMass successfully cleared the ball 24-of-32 times and had a 53-52 ground ball advantage.

GORILLA GRUMBLINGS: McGovern had his best shot of the season at scoring, unloading two blasts on reserve goalie Scott Kehoe from the 15-foot range that the senior netminder just stopped. Aldrich has now scored one goal in each of his three seasons. Game one of the Aldrich-Fiorini gym class series begins today at Lower Boyden at 1 p.m.

Chiefs crushed by Gazelles; balanced attack dominates

By BOB ALDRICH
Collegian Staff

The sixth-ranked University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team capped its regular season with an 18-6 victory over Division II Springfield College yesterday at NOPE.

The women, who finished at 8-2 and face James Madison at New Hampshire in the first round of the ECAC tournament on Saturday, had eight different players score as the Chiefs were helpless against the Gazelles attack.

"It was good to spread it around, work on some things for the tournament and get the win," coach Pam Hixon said. "The defense played fairly well at times and we used a lot of people. All in all I'd say it was a good effort."

Freshman attack Ginny Armstrong led UMass with five goals in her best game to date. Juniors Bunny Forbes and Liz Schueler each added three tallies.

Senior All-American Pam Moryl and junior Mary Scott scored twice with Becky Beckampis, Emily Humiston and Andrea Muccini scoring one goal a piece.

In goal, Debbie DeJesus made 13 saves on the Chiefs' attack.

UMass went ahead 2-0 early as Schueler fed Scott for the first goal. Springfield made it as close as 2-1 before UMass exploded for a 9-2 halftime edge.

"We put it away pretty early with some good offense," Hixon said. "We were moving the ball well and we were getting good shots from the field and converting them."

UMass enjoyed a 46-13 advantage in shots as the Gazelles defense effectively kept Springfield out of shooting range although the Chiefs did make a high percentage of their shots.

"Defense is one thing I'd like to see us work on," Hixon said. "We have played well all season, but against the teams coming up we have to play even better. We can't afford to let up a lot of goals against the teams at the ECAC tournament this weekend."

The Chiefs, a man-to-man defense team, couldn't stop the Gazelles offense as the women's sharp passes isolated shooters on the net and gave UMass good chances. The clean game saw few penalities called.

"We ran the field well and I like to see the type of game that was played today, pretty clean and with just a lot of playing as opposed to a lot of calls," Hixon said. "This is a good game for us to build on as we get ready for the tournament. I know the kids want to stretch the season for as long as they can."

Sports Log

Tony Botros

Just a few thoughts...

After struggling with Cleveland in the first round, the Boston Celtics are back to true form, disposing of the Detroit Pistons for two games at Boston. Probably the most encouraging sign out of the Celts is the emergence of Robert Parrish. Parrish, who has been known to do his Harry Blackstone impersonation and disappear during playoff time, did the job against Detroit Tuesday night...Even though Smokey Robinson was singing in the early 1960s, I think he had Bill Laimbeer in mind with the song Tears of a Clown. This guy cries so much he should have stock invested in Kleenex.

The Philadelphia 76ers, like the mythical Phoenix, are growing out of the ashes and into a force. After struggling at the end of the regular season, the Sixers are putting it all together against the baffled Bucks...And who's hitting 18-20 footers? None other than Charles Barkley. Everyone is afraid when Barkley takes a jump shot. He's so big it could be another Pompei...I couldn't believe that punch Akeem threw at Billy Paultz. No blatant provocation was involved, he just hauled off and hit Paultz. I wonder if Billy and Tommy Hearns have the same doctor?

Everyone said it would be a war for the battle of Quebec, and they were right. The Montreal Canadiens and the Quebec Nordiques have traded games, goals, blood, and sacrifices in their series, with game seven slated for tonight. It's worse than a divestment rally. Neither club will probably have the strength to battle the Philadelphia Flyers, who are well-rested and ready for any competition. Mr. Lindbergh is very stingy in the nets and I don't think he will suddenly be overcome by a wave of generosity.

The Yankee administration is doing its imitation of the Soviet Union, changing leaders when the mood strikes. Actually, the Russians have a better excuse, at least their men died. Billy Martin is back for his FDR-like fourth term. But will he last the season? Yes, another riddle of the Spynx.

Over in the national league, my prayers have been answered. It's one thing to pick the Mets to win the Series, but when you hear it from Collegian staffer Nancy Bukar, well, you might as well call it gospel. Right when Nancy proclaimed the Mets to be baseball champions of the world, Dwight Gooden hurls a four-hitter and the Mets win 4-1. Is that proof enough for you?

Finally, if you get a chance, please peruse for your pleasure last week's edition of Sports Illustrated. Yes, Hulkamania is running wild. Great photos in that issue. But, perhaps you'd better batten down the hatches, because from Detroit, Michigan, George "The Animal" Steele is back. Oh God!

No more need be said.

Smith rape report said to be false

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

A Smith student withdrew from the college yesterday after Northampton police said the rape she reported last week never occurred.

Chief Daniel L. Labato said yesterday morning that the investigation was closed and the "several reliable witnesses who know the victim have placed her at a different location at all times during the reported incident."

Smith Dean Ann Burger, in a statement read to the college students at lunchtime yesterday, said, "On April 24 I reported to you that we had received word that a Smith student had been physically assaulted...the student has now admitted that the story was untrue and no attack of any kind took place."

Last Wednesday, the student reported to Northampton college police that she had been forced into her car on Dryads Green by an unknown assailant and then made to drive to Hadley, where she was raped.

This was followed Thursday night by a candlelight vigil and march through Northampton by 200 students to protest the rape and violence against women.

Mary Dumas, head of the UMass police sensitive crime unit, said that incidences of false reports are "extremely rare" and she stressed they should "definitely not" be taken to shed doubt on the credibility of women who are victims of rape and sexual assault.

"Because it takes so much emotional energy to report a rape, because of fear of reprisal, I feel it is an extremely rare occurrence for there to be a false report," agreed Debra Edelman, an educator at University Health Services.

Dumas, referring to the Dotson case in Chicago, where a woman recently confessed she had fabricated a rape report that sent Gary Dotson to jail for six years, commented that the Smith incident comes at a time of "unfortunate extensive coverage."

"It bothers me that a woman reports a 'supposedly false' rape and it gets an incredible amount of media coverage," Edelman said, adding that incidences where "women have reported and prosecuted their assailants have not been given half the media attention they deserve."

Burger stressed that "the fact this incident did not occur does not diminish the necessity for Smith students to take reasonable precautions to protect themselves."

Labato said that although this report of rape was false, "It nonetheless reminds us of the dangers that do exist and the need to be alert and report these crimes or any suspicious activity to the police."

He added, "The resolution of sexual assaults will continue o be the highest priority of the Northampton police department and will be investigated in a diligent and professional manner."

GALA parade expects 2,000

As many as 2,000 might participate in the fourth annual GALA (Gay Lesbian Activists) parade taking place tomorrow in Northampton.

The parade, following the same route as last year, will begin at the Bridge Street School, continue up Main Street and end in Pulaski Park, where there will be speakers, music and dance.

"We want to get ourselves together with our supporters and feel the strength in our numbers," said GALA member and parade organizer Gerry Scoppettuolo.

Scoppettuolo said this year's parade will be more of a "celebration" than a protest.

"We want to find ways in the community that we can act together and unite our diverse groups as much as possible," he added.

Counseling, support groups, slide shows of the works of gay artists, women's theater, and bingo nights will also be sponsored by groups in the gay community.

Besides GALA, groups participating include the UMass Lesbian, Gay, and Bisexual Alliance, the Lesbian Union and the Pioneer Valley People's Alliance.

Shots that shocked the nation: 15 years ago Mary Vecchio asked, "Why?" over the body of a fellow Kent State University student. National Guardsmen had fired at antiwar protesters, killing four.

Looking back at 4 dead in Ohio

By WILLIAM SPAIN
Collegian Staff

Fifteen years ago tomorrow, students in the Pioneer Valley began trying to digest the news that four people had been killed by National Guardsmen during an anti-war demonstration at Kent State University in Ohio.

A series of strikes, occupations and rallies opposing American military involvement in Vietnam and Cambodia had been planned for the first week in May. The deaths of those young people added to the emotional tension already present.

"It was like a firestorm, almost," says University of Massachusetts history professor Joseph Hernon, who was an active opponent of the Nixon administration. "As soon as word got out, thousands of people mobilized for an instantaneous response. I have seen nothing since that even comes close to the level of student involvement generated by it."

On May 5, 1970, the day after the shootings, 7,500 UMass and Amherst College students attended a rally by the Campus Pond to listen to anti-war speakers, including Daniel Gardner, a Kent State student and eyewitness to the killings. With the exclusion of a few football games, it was the largest gathering of people at the University to that date. The next day brought a crowd of more than 5,000 to Amherst Common for the same purpose.

On May 7, the ROTC offices in Dickinson Hall were occupied by a group of protesters who began holding teach-ins about the Vietnam War. The atmosphere was tense enough that Military and Air Science students stopped wearing their uniforms around campus, canceled various outdoor exercises, and moved the location of their annual Military Ball.

Of the protesters' actions, then Army ROTC Sergeant-Major Angel Ramirez said, "They were in no way hostile to us. Business went on as usual. We did not bother them and they did not bother us. It was easy to just walk around them.

"They did an outstanding job of cleaning up after themselves," he added.

Three of the demands voiced by the demonstrators received an overwhelming endorsement from the student senate. They involved ending U.S. government repression of internal dissidents, unilateral American military withdrawal from Vietnam and abolishing ROTC and other

27 protesters plead innocent

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

Twenty-seven students pleaded innocent yesterday after they were arrested and charged with trespassing at Wednesday's protest in University of Massachusetts Treasurer Robert Brand's office.

The students, who along with six others were arrested Wednesday, were arraigned yesterday after most of them spent the night in four local jails, campus police said. Five people were released Wednesday night on their own recognizance after posting $15 court fees.

"Disturbing an office is not something the University can put up with," Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said. "I don't intend to put up with it anymore."

Duffey said University policy states that civil charges for trespassing will be pressed against protesters occupying University offices. Academic disciplinary procedures would then follow, he said.

The students, who were protesting University investments tied to South Africa, were taken into custody after they were warned of their arrest 15 minutes before the office officially closed, Gerald T. O'Neil, director of public safety, said.

One female student was arrested outside the office located behind Goodell Library after she tried to block the bus which drove the students to the jails. She was charged with being a disorderly person, police said.

The students who were not arraigned yesterday will appear in Hampshire District Court May 7. A pre-trial date for the other students has been set for June 5, a court official said.

The arrests ended a four hour sit-in opposing University stock holdings in corporations tied with South Africa.

"We had a couple of hours to think about our arrests," student Kathleen Lacey said. "There was a group feeling that it was important for people to stay together-there was solidarity between us," she said.

Duffey said UMass President David C. Knapp and the board of trustees will meet May 28 to discuss a report released earlier this week by The Commission to Investigate South African Investments. The report recommends a rewording of the University's divestment policy so as to apply to a broader range of corporate ties with South Africa. The report was presented to Knapp and the trustees with a deadline to respond by May 8.

The following students were arraigned on trespassing charges:

Pamela D. Aranoff, Dwight House. Mary T. Toran, John Quincy Adams House. Raymond R. Allain of Easthampton, Timothy L. Harris of Amherst, Randi F. Sanlow Wheeler House, Stephen D. Shuster of Amherst.

John A. Peterson of Belchertown, William P. Clay, Cashin House, Christopher G. Arrol, Butterfield House, David L. Morrison, Butterfield House, Mary L. Hersh, Brett House, Ross K. Pitman, Butterfield House, Jonathan C. Frank of Amherst, Amy J. Brubaker of Amherst.

Alexander Welsch, Butterfield House. Brian C. Duplissea, of Amherst, Andrew R. Kehn, McNamara House, Robert F. Doyle of Amherst, Matthew M. Shakespeare of Northampton, David S. Vrooly, Grayson House, Carla G. Graham, Patterson House. Kathleen R. Lacey of Sunderland, John D. Everest of Belchertown, Kristen F. Olsson of Northampton, Mark A. Caldeira of Amherst, Naomi Davis of Northampton.

To be arraigned on May 7 are:

Kai Price, Gorman House, Beth F. Yeager, Brett House, Kimberly F. Curtis of Amherst, Graham V. Poor of Boston, Michael A. Ostapovics of Belchertown.

Also arrested according to UMass police, but not listed in the arraignments for Thursday of May 7: Celeste M. Friend, Lewis House

Rally to protest Bitburg visit

In protest of President Ronald Reagan's planned visit to a cemetery in Bitburg, Germany where members of Hitler's SS Guard are buried, a rally will be held today at the University of Massachusetts.

The protest, which was organized by B'nai B'rith Hillel, will take place at noon in front of the Student Union Building.

Michelle Richmond of Hillel said, "Although Reagan is going and there's nothing we can do to stop him now, it is important for us to voice our opposition to his action."

Speakers at the rally will include Hillel Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, the Rev. Joseph Quigley of the Newman Center, a member of the United Christian Foundation, and Stacy Roth, Student Government Association co-president-elect.

Richmond said a World War II veteran may also speak.

The sponsors of the event are: Hillel, the Newman Center, United Christian Foundation, the Rev. Arthur Hilson, the

Bitburg visit: Kohl weighs in on President Reagan's side

BONN, West Germany (AP) - President Reagan and Chancellor Helmut Kohl tried yesterday to blunt criticism of their plans to lay a wreath at a German military cemetery by inviting relatives of Nazi resisters to join the ceremony.

The three-week-old uproar over Reagan's planned journey to the Bitburg gravesites on Sunday raged on as the leaders of seven nations dined at Schloss Falkenlust, a castle built in 1733, on the eve of a two-day economic summit meeting.

The leaders remained divided on sensitive issues, such as the starting date for new international trade talks; what, if any, action to take to curb fluctuations in the value of the U.S. dollar; and European participation in Reagan's "Star Wars" missile defense research program.

The decision to bring relatives of Nazi resisters to Bitburg was announced by Peter Boenisch, spokesman for the Bonn government, after a 50-minute meeting between Reagan and Kohl, the West German chancellor.

West German leaders hailed Reagan's courage in resisting pressure from the United States to cancel the visit.

Boenisch said the relatives delegation will include a son of Lt. Col. Klaus von Stauffenberg, who was executed in 1944 for his central role in a plot to kill Adolf Hitler by putting a bomb under a table in his conference room.

Hitler suffered minor injuries, but 5,000 people, including relatives and friends of military officers involved in the plot, were executed by the Nazis.

A West German official, speaking on condition of not being identified, said the idea was "to make Bitburg more popular." The decision "was an attempt to get rid of the disharmony" over the trip.

New Pretoria sanctions advance

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Democratic-controlled House Foreign Affairs Committee voted 26-6 yesterday to impose new economic sanctions against South Africa and its system of racial apartheid.

The legislation opposed by the Reagan administration would prohibit new U.S. investment and loans in South Africa.

It would also suspend the sale of American computers to South Africa and shut off imports to the United States of an estimated $600 million in South African gold coins, called Krugerrands.

All six "no" votes came from Republicans who argued that rather than encourage improved race relations in South Africa, the sanctions would worsen conditions for the black majority there.

A watered-down Republican version condemning apartheid and setting up a comission to investigate conditions in South Africa was rejected 19-4.

The Democratic measure now goes to the House floor where speedy consideration is likely, possibly before the end of May.

The United States has previously cut off military sales to South Africa, and the country is ineligible for loans from the Export-Import Bank.

Hell's Angels rounded up

BOSTON - Heavily armed FBI agents and police arrested four alleged members of the Hell's Angels motorcycle club and seized a home computer system yesterday as part of a nationwide roundup of gang leaders on drug, weapons and racketeering charges.

More than 80 officers surrounded the homes of three suspects in Lynn at 7 a.m. and ordered them to surrender. The men, including the alleged vice president of the Angels East Coast chapter, turned themselves over to police without incident.

A fourth man, a Pittsfield resident who is allegedly a member of the outlawed club, was arrested at a Lenox motel at about the same time.

The suspects were charged with violation of the federal Controlled Substances Act for allegedly manufacturing, selling and distributing cocaine.

Apartheid hit at Harvard

CAMBRIDGE - About 200 Harvard students, chanting anti-apartheid slogans, barricaded the door of a room where a South African diplomat was speaking yesterday until a phalanx of campus police led him through the crowd.

Abe Hoopenstein, consul-general of the South African Consulate in New York, was escorted to an unmarked car at 2:15 p.m., about an hour after he was scheduled to leave, said Marjorie Heffron of the Harvard News Office.

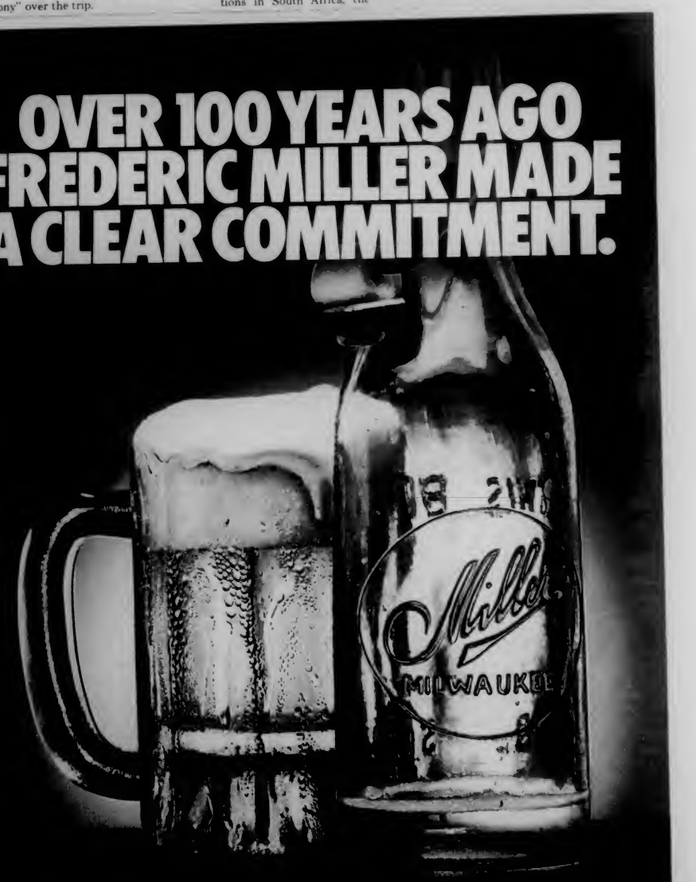
There were no arrests.

House likes pollution bill

BOSTON - The Massachusetts House has given initial approval to a bill that would enable state environmental officials to fine companies $100 to $25,000 a day for violating state and federal anti-pollution laws.

The long-debated administrative penalties bill was approved on a voice vote yesterday with no debate. The bill, approved by the Senate Tuesday, still needs final approval in the House.

OVER 100 YEARS AGO FREDERIC MILLER MADE A CLEAR COMMITMENT.



To Quality. To Purity. To America. And That Tradition Continues...

When Frederic Miller came to America from Germany he was determined to get away from the old brewing ways. Like millions of others he saw America as a golden opportunity. And he knew that the finest brewing ingredients and the most modern equipment in the world then made it possible to brew the best beer in the world.

In fact, Miller made the most of what America had to offer. He made the best beer he knew how to make, using the finest grains—and hops—the pure water.

And to show America the quality and purity of his beer, he insisted on putting it in clear bottles.

A lot has changed since Frederic Miller's day. But a lot hasn't.

Miller still uses the finest ingredients and brewing skills. It contains no additives or preservatives.

And Miller still comes in the same clear bottles.

For the same clear reasons.

Ellsworth Barnard reminisces.

Ex-professor, 78, recalls days here

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

Ellsworth Barnard, a 1928 graduate of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, which later became UMass, said he still gets angry when he thinks of the time he marched up on the Bowker Auditorium stage and told a preacher his views on Christianity were warped.

The year was 1932 and Barnard was an English instructor on campus attending "Religious Emphasis Week," during which well-known religious figures would come and speak.

As Barnard sat listening, he said he became "boiling mad" at the preacher, who spoke of using God to gain worldly possessions.

"First he seemed to think the aim in life was material and luxurious pleasure, which seem to me the exact opposite of what Christianity says," Barnard said. "The idea he was saying was that you use God and religion to get what you want in the way of material things."

Barnard, now 78, has just released the second volume of his autobiography, titled In Sunshine and in Shadow: A Teacher's Odyssey. This volume traces Barnard's experiences as a student, Collegian managing editor, and instructor from 1930 to 1933.

Although the first volume sold only 650 copies and lost Barnard money, he continues to enjoy writing in the North Amherst home he shares with his wife of 48 years. After teaching freshman English composition at various schools, he returned to UMass to teach from 1968 to 1973, when he retired.

Images of what the Amherst campus was like in the 1920s and 1930s are vivid in the second volume. These positive images explain why Barnard loves living in Amherst, spending summers on a 400 acre forest preservation in Shelburne.

Barnard spent 43 years teaching English, and he said his last English composition class in 1973 was the most literate. "I don't think education at high school or college is any better or worse than it has ever been," Barnard said.

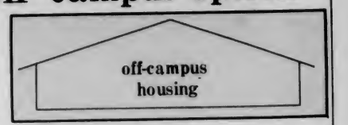
In all his years teaching, Barnard said he loved every minute of it. However, there was an exception when at Williams College, he quit because "I couldn't stand the school president." He said he was always "a kind of rebel against all establishments."

"I have always loved college students. Always, at the beginning of a course, I entered the classroom with a thrill of anticipation and felt a surge of warmth as I scanned the faces of the waiting students," he said.

Barnard said he doesn't miss teaching, although he always enjoyed it. "I used to tell my kids how lucky I was, doing what I love and getting paid for it."

Greek living: an off campus option

By DAVID BURGESS
Collegian Staff



Editor's Note: This is the last in a three part series examining the possibilities of finding off-campus housing.

Several off-campus housing options are open for students who are not restricted to dormitory residence, including rental of privately owned houses and apartments and membership in fraternities and sororities.

Robert White, directorof the Greek Affairs Office, said those residences are University-approved housing that are considered off-campus quarters because they are situated on private, not state-owned property.

All undergraduate students, except students in their first school semester, are eligible to live in Greek houses.

The Greek admission process begins with open rushes every fall and spring semester.

Acceptance for membership in a fraternity or sorority depends on a number of factors, such as compatibility between the applicant and established residents and the availability of living space.

"The cost of Greek area living is comparable to that of a dormitory residence as far as room and board are concerned," White said. There may be additional costs for the prospective Greek area member to consider in the form of initiation and other miscellaneous fees.

Students who wish to live in houses and apartments in Amherst of surrounding towns should begin looking now.

An apartment complex guidebook may be purchased at the Off-Campus Housing Office on campus for 75 cents. The guide has details concerning apartment complexes in the Amherst-Sunderland area and related rental information.

Apartment complexes are listed in alphabetical order in the guide. The list contains 23 apartment areas in Amherst, six in adjacent Sunderland, two each in Northampton and Belchertown, and one in Florence.

Three of the Amherst apartment complexes are filled already for next fall, according to Joanne Levenson, director of OCHO. These are Brandywine, Townehouse, and Rolling Green.

Judy Johnson, manager of Townehouse Apartments in Amherst, said that although that complex is full for next fall, students can place their names on a waiting list in case a spot opens up.

There is no guarantee there will be any space but students on the list would be wise to check their status on apartment waiting lists every few weeks. Other apartment complexes have similar waiting lists.

Levenson has some advice for people who wish to obtain housing for next year. "Many people who have secured leases for next fall will need apartment mates to share expenses," she said, "and will probably advertise for mates this coming August."

Therefore, even if all leases in some complexes are taken, there may still be a chance for students to share a lease.

Levenson cautions people about accepting sub-leases that appear to be above the cost of an apartment complex's stated price. Students who wish to sub-lease usually will receive a form from the manager of a complex and will then work out an agreement with the lease holder.

Students holding leases to apartments they wish to sublet can fill out description forms at OCHO to place in the housing notebooks there.

There is also low-income housing for student families with children. The apartments, subsidized through the University, are Lincoln, University, and North Village Apartments in Amherst. People who qualify may apply through the University's Housing Services Office in the family housing category.

Ex-ambassador urges Solidarity support

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

As Poland spends today commemorating the constitution of 1791 guaranteeing social and economic freedoms, the United States should take a closer look at ways in which it can help the "peaceful revolutionaries" in the future obtain these goals, a former U.S. ambassador to Poland urged in the Campus Center last night.

"The next time a revolution occurs in Poland, and there will be a next time, we should give them a little more support than we did the last time," said Richard T. Davies, who was ambassador to Poland in the mid-1970s.

The last Polish "revolution" took place in 1980 and 1981 when the Solidarity trade union movement flourished. When martial law was imposed in late 1981, the United States did not do enough to help the people of Poland, particularly union workers who started the "peaceful revolution," Davies said.

"We Americans are fortunate that we are able to live in a country where the American Revolution was successful and we should try and understand Poland" as it fights its own revolution, he said.

In 1791 the first constitution ever written in Europe was signed in Poland and it was modeled after the American Constitution. That constitution provided for civil and religious freedoms. Poles had "seen how they were being realized here and modeled (the 1791 constitution) after the American system," Davies said.

But the "American model" was never fully realized and the "revolution" to create a social contract where "all authority in Polish government takes its authority by the will of the people," continues today.

The "peaceful revolution" of 1980-81 called for a "limited constitution where the monarch acts like the king and queen of England. It would reign but it would not rule.

"Some people think that they were great ideals, and try as they may they failed. (Some claim) we have to give them all the credit for the effort but they weren't pragmatic — they failed.

Former Ambassador Richard R. Davies.

"I don't believe that. In 1978 I couldn't imagine the kind of open discussion in the streets (and in the workplace) that takes place today. It did not exist. It could not have been imagined 10 years ago," he said.

But the Solidarity movement did win to a degree, helping to force the government to allow the kind of demonstration that is expected to take place today when Poland prepares for a nationwide celebration of the constitution of 1791, Davies said.

Program shows female struggle

Women and their struggle for freedom cross-culturally will be the focus of a three-day conference comprising art exhibits, workshops, and lectures at the University of Massachusetts this weekend.

The program, sponsored by the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) and the Everywoman's Center, aims to "educate the student body and the UMass community about women and the cross-cultural struggle," said Debbie Piltch, director of SCERA and one of the organizers.

The program will kick off today with an evening of jazz music at the Blue Wall and will be followed Saturday by a conference with a number of workshops focusing on such issues as woman and labor, repressive legislation, and lesbianism as a political choice.

Josephina Rodriguez, an activist in the movement for Puerto Rican independence, will be giving the keynote address on prisoners of war at 4:15 p.m. in the Campus Center and will be speaking again Sunday evening at 7:30 p.m.

There will be an art exhibit Saturday night at the Augusta Savage Art Gallery at the New Africa House from 7:30 to 10 p.m.

All of the events are free and open to the public.

Library renovations due September '86

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

The threat of falling bricks, faulty elevators and depleted study space should be eliminated in the University Library tower by September 1986, the date set by the University for completion of renovations.

In an address to the Faculty Senate yesterday, Richard Talbot, director of libraries, said, "I would like to reaffirm the University's commitment to a full, operating library by fall 1986."

Talbot said that two contracts must be filled in order for the "full move back into the library." The first construction contract will reconstruct the first six floors of the library and an external lobby and add study space, carpeting, furniture and a "desperately needed paint job," Talbot said. The second contract will improve the condition and efficiency of the elevators.

Talbot added that the entire library will be undergoing renovations by the Physical Plant. "We've got leaks that must be sealed," he said.

Roger Cherewatti, director of the Physical Plant, responding to a question of the hazard of brick fragments falling from the library, said, "We are still coming up with ways to correct falling bricks. We have conducted numerous studies and we have found that a new entrance to the library will protect people."

Cherewatti added that the Physical Plant will be working with landscape architecture students to improve the area surrounding the library.

In other Senate action, a new proposal for lab fees in the College of Mathematics and Sciences was introduced by Provost Richard O'Brien. The proposal would fund new equipment by restructuring lab fees. Legislation by the UMass Board of Trustees currently restricts the use of lab fees. Legislation by the UMass Board of Trustees currently restricts the use of lab fees primarily to supplies, O'Brien said.

The proposal would request that the fees be allowed to pay for equipment.

O'Brien said the "preferred result would be to find money in the budget, but we have an emergency. The concerns are very real. The equipment is truly antiquated."

Frederick Byron, math and science dean, said, "The condition of the equipment is lamentable," and suggested a "modest fee per credit" to buy new equipment.

"At this present state we are shortchanging the students horribly," he added.

O'Brien said the University Budget Office had reviewed the request and believed the restructing of fees might be a better answer.

Harry Schumer, a psychology professor, said charging students a fee per credit "would create a dangerous precedent in putting the burden on students."

BOG elects Alex Zucker new chairman

The Campus Center Board of Governors voted in a new chairman of the board and re-elected this year's vice chairwoman and treasurer during officer elections for next year at the board's weekly meeting last night.

Board member Alex Zucker was elected chairman, running against board member Robert Cohen. Karen Karin-Gray ran unopposed for vice-chair, as did Fran Hegeler for treasurer, both were re-elected by a unanimous vote.

Zucker, who has been a board member for two semeters, said next year he will address student concerns in the CC complex, organize plans to reach the student body better and continue a working relationship with the CC administration.

"I'd like to solidify the positions we've gained this year in our battle for student rights with the administration," Zucker said, "and I'd like to strengthen our role in all the areas of the CC, specifically in the T.O.C. and the Blue Wall."

Both Gray and Hegeler supported the election of Zucker to chairman. "I look forward to working with him," Hegeler said. "I think Alex has a lot of experience that will be put to good use."

In other business, board member Mark Friedman proposed an addendum to be placed on the referendum ballot that the SGA will present to the student body on Thursday.

The referendum will ask students whether the BOG "overstepped its bounds" by "banning the sale of Coors beer" in the Blue Wall.

Friedman said the addendum will clarify that the board did not ban Coors beer, but recommended to the administration to halt the sale of Coors. — VICKI A. SPAGNOLI defense-related programs on campus.

A random questioning of UMass students yesterday uncovered varied knowledge and perspectives about what happened at Kent State.

"It (the Kent State incident) was a symbol of the actual lack of free speech we had in this country," said Ed Redonnet, 22, a counseling psychology major. "I hope people remember it because I think things like it are going to start happening again soon."

John Gickas, a history major, said, "It signified the counterattack of the establishment and a stand by Nixon against the counter-culture movement."

"It was bad news," said James Weston, 18, who mentioned conversations about it in his dormitory in light of the recent arrests of anti-apartheid demonstrators at UMass. "We were saying how it looked like Kent State all over again."

Other responses ranged from, "I think it's a college in Ohio," to "I really don't know."

The Opportunity of a Lifetime.
In the next 60 seconds some 18 children will die in our world simply because they don't have enough to eat. This in a world where there is more than enough food to adequately feed everyone. It's unacceptable. Hunger is no longer a problem that we can ignore or label as inevitable. It is our responsibility to end this tragedy once and for all. For everyone.
Over the past two years, students at Harvard University have raised over $300,000 to fight hunger by participating in what is called the "Ride for Life," — a cross-country bicycle journey that now takes place each summer involving about 90 students who journey by bicycle from coast to coast for pledges and to bring a message to America that we can end hunger in our lifetime.
The originators of the very first "Ride for Life" are now creating and organizing a bold and exciting new project — "Ride for Africa." The project will involve 5 different colleges, each with it's own group of cyclists traveling cross-country simultaneously next summer, along separate routes west to east, and converging in Washington, D.C. to make the final leg of the journey together on to Boston. The project will raise over one million dollars for hunger and development agencies working in Africa.
As with "Ride for Life," students will stay in high school gymnasiums, church function halls, and homes en route where local organizers will be doing their part to make "Ride for Africa" a great success.
This is the opportunity of a lifetime — to be involved with over 200 individuals working together as a team to make a difference in the lives of others — working to end the tragedy that is hunger and starvation. Right now we need courageous and committed individuals to step forward as organizers and participants so that the work of this ambitious endeavor can begin. Think about it. For the more than 100 students who have participated in "Ride for Life," the experience was one of the most incredible in their lives. Imagine the possibility for the summer of 1986. Stick: more of the same

Stick
Directed by Burt Reynolds
Starring Burt Reynolds and Candice Bergen
At Mountain Farms Theater

By THOMAS HARRINGTON

The good news about Stick is that it's probably the best thing Burt Reynolds has done in some time. The bad news is that it still isn't very good.

Stick is an adaptation of a novel by Elmore Leonard, who also co-wrote the screenplay. It's the story of a tough con-man (Reynolds) who goes to Florida in an attempt to go straight and be near his daughter. It isn't long though, before he finds himself in trouble with a big drug dealer and his sadistic hit man. In the meantime, he tries to maintain a cushy job given to him by an idiot millionaire who loves criminals.

The best part of the film is watching Reynolds drift between the two different worlds he occupies. When he's a chaffeur on a rich estate, he's safe from attack from the dope dealer, who's a close acquaintance of the millionaire's. Once he's out of the site of his employer, however, he's just another con in the street and a target for hit men.

Unfortunately, the picture never goes anywhere with this idea. After much introspection, Stick decides that he likes danger because, well he's a macho kind of guy. He then proceeds to beat up the bad guys in a number of boring action sequences.

Don't get me wrong. I like a good action-adventure, but I've seen all these chase scenes before, and they were done better then. The climax is slow and drawn out, a disappointment. This film just has nothing new to add to the genre.

Reynolds isn't terrific, but it's nice to see him take his acting seriously for a change. At times, he really tries to make us understand what makes his character tick, and it's nice to see him handle his comedy with some deft wit instead of moronics. Still, he often seems too stiff, too unconcerned with what goes on around him. It might be a while before we see a performance like Deliverance again.

Most of the supporting cast is undistinguished, with a few noticeable exceptions. The ever-dependable Charles Durning does a fine job as the decadent, pill-popping villain. George Segal, who's more accustomed to starring roles, has a lot of fun as Stick's big-wig boss. Dar Johnson is also appropriately creepy as the hired thug. Candice Bergen however, has almost nothing to do as the obligatory love interest, and she deserves it.

Stick will undoubtedly come as a relief to some Reynolds fans, and it should satisfy action buffs until the summer releases arrive, but it can't be recommended. "Adventure" suggests doing something new and different, but Stick just sticks us with the same old thing.

Intelligent thinking needed when discussing South Africa

Joseph D. Duffey

The situation in South Africa has reached another historic turning point. The oppression and systematic denial of dignity and liberty to many citizens of that country is not a new phenomenon. But the determination of black South Africans to attain full citizenship and achieve the dignity of self determination has been renewed in recent weeks. The cruelty and injustice of the South African system has quickened the conscience of men and women across the world. The quest for a just, humane and democratic society for all the people of South Africa will be a protracted struggle.

Outraged as they witness this historical struggle, American students are seeking a useful response that will express their commitment to a just society in South Africa. What can American students do? Of course, many have joined the chorus of the divestiture movement. However, I believe there are also other ways to contribute to political, economic and social justice in South Africa. These ways will not cause as much suffering to South African blacks and will not add to the inevitable chaos of the political transition that will soon take place in that part of the world. First, American students can organize visits to their congressmen seeking a reversal of the indifference of our national government towards these issues. They can organize campaigns to persuade every congressman to join in efforts to persuade the administration to impose selective economic sanctions, to go to the United Nations and the World Court, and to express through diplomatic relations (or perhaps the cessation of diplomatic relations) condemnation of apartheid.

Second, we should remember that there are some members of the government of South Africa and a number of white citizens who realize the time has come for change. In the long struggle which they and the black men and women of that country have ahead, their needs should be considered by American students as they think of their own careers. In the current time of crisis it would be a very positive development if some students were to decide to devote their careers and their professional skills and talents to assisting in the struggle for self determination in South Africa and other nations.

Finally, there are acts of personal and institutional witness which express our condemnation of the system of apartheid. Divestiture is one such issue. It should be pointed out with regard to recent protests on this campus that divestiture itself is not the issue. The University of Massachusetts moved some years ago to divest itself of stocks according to a widely accepted definition of the meaning of that act. The University decided that it would not invest in companies doing significant business in South Africa. Because this position did not subject the University to immediate condemnation, an effort has been made to redefine the issue of divestiture. This argument seems to suggest that the University should have nothing to do with businesses that have anything to do with businesses that do any business in South Africa.

The current proposals however are no more consistent than the present position of the University in this matter. If we begin to move in this direction we can eventually implicate far more businesses and banks than those already named.

Divestiture is a right and proper position for American institutions. The definition and degree of divestiture is the question. We should pursue divestiture to a reasonable degree with the intention of expressing our disapproval of the South African regime. We should probably not entertain the illusion that the South African government will be driven into a corner with its economy so crippled that this alone will change the system. If the South African economy were totally crippled, there is little to believe from history or our understanding of psychology that the results would be positive. A systematic pursuit of a reasonable position on divestiture is a right and proper position. Such is the course in which the University of Massachusetts has been engaged.

It is incumbent upon each of us to understand and discuss intelligently what is happening in South Africa today. The issues will be with us for some years to come. There are dark and perhaps violent prospects before these issues are finally resolved. Above all we should avoid moral posturing, self-righteousness, facile condemnation of the motives of others and moral intimidation. Such attitudes make no positive contribution to this struggle.

Joseph D. Duffey is chancellor of UMass/Amherst.

A 'slap in the face' for everyone

Tomorrow, the Everywoman's Center is bringing a member of the Palestine Liberation Organization to speak on campus.

It is no secret that the primary purpose of the PLO is the destruction of the state of Israel, nor is it in question that the PLO kills and maims innocent civilians, including children, in pursuit of this goal.

It is a mystery to me why the Undergraduate Student Senate refused to demand that the Everywoman's Center reverse its decision to invite and pay this terrorist to speak on this campus.

For the Everywoman's Center to hire such a speaker is a slap in the face not only to Jewish students, but to all students who respect civility and cherish human rights.

I also found it very upsetting that the two main groups on campus to call themselves socially aware, the Third World Caucus and SCERA, worked in their own ways to bring this person to our campus. SCERA was involved in the original decision to bring the speaker and the Third World Caucus "block voted" against the motion to demand that the Everywoman's Center reverse their decision. This showed a total lack of sensitivity to the problems of all minorities at UMass.

This whole issue has shocked me, and I encourage all students to protest the PLO member on Saturday in Campus Center Room 802 at 1:45 p.m.

What show did he see?

This is in response to Count Ramin Zahed's unprofessional West Side Story critique. Zahed's manner makes you wonder how much he hated E.T.

I was one of the several hundred in attendance Monday night for the opening night of the West Side Story, and I'm wondering where was Zahed? What I saw was a delightful showing by a hard-working, talented cast.

Zahed, why not look at the fine sides of the show? The characters of Anita, Bernardo, Chino, Riff, Action, Anybodys, and the adults were terrific; they made you feel like you were there with them, in the middle of racial hatred and violence. What about the musical numbers "Cool," "America," and "I Feel Pretty?" They were delightful and entertaining.

The scene where Chino tells Maria that her brother was killed by her boyfriend, Tony, chilled the audience and grabbed everyone's heart. Zahed, I did not see anyone in the audience leave disappointed, what I did see were boyfriends and girlfriends embracing each other and many smiles and red eyes. Maybe you should be a food critic, since you dazzle us with your knowledge of food, you have absolutely no knowledge of the stage.

4 dead in Ohio

Rita Murphy

Her face. If you look at it closely you can see something eerie. In her eyes, on her face there is a decade — a decade of fear, pain, frustration, a decade of anguish.

Her name is Mary Vecchio, and she is perhaps one of the best symbols of the Vietnam war, the war not fought on the battleground of Saigon but rather the one fought on college campuses throughout the United States. The war of "us" versus "them."

When Mary Vecchio kneeled beside the slain body of Jeff Miller, and looked up in horror that such a tragedy could occur before her eyes, she became immortalized, a symbol for not only the decade of protest we call the 1960s, but also for student protests anywhere, anytime.

Fifteen years ago tomorrow, the 1960s ended. Despite the fact that it was May 4, 1970, the 1970s had not yet begun. They couldn't. It wasn't yet time: the 1960s were not yet complete. Kent State had to happen first.

Four dead in Ohio; Kent, Ohio to be exact. The dead were part of the generation that we today have never fully understood. They were part of the generation that seemed to protest almost as much as they went to classes. While we today carry signs like "No way, we won't pay," they carried "Hell no, we won't go." They were the Hippies, yippies, druggies, deadbeats and flower children. Today they're the radicals, liberals and earthy crunchies.

They protested then, they protest now. But it's different. Today they get arrested; back then they died.

Allison Krause, Jeff Miller, Sandy Scheuer, and Bill Schroeder. May 3, 1970 they were no different than anyone else.

Sandy Scheuer was from Youngstown, Ohio. She was against the war that was taking place 12,000 miles from Kent State University, but she wasn't really sure why. She didn't go on campus to rally at noon on Monday, May 4, 1970. She went to go to class.

She never made it.

Twenty five minutes before Mary Vecchio kneeled over his lifeless body, Jeff Miller was leading the crowd approaching the Ohio National Guard giving the finger to the troops. A little past noon he, too, became immortalized with "the girl with the Delacroix face" as James A. Michener called Vecchio, a 14-year-old runaway who was only visiting Kent State for the weekend.

Bill Schroeder was a member of ROTC. He was in a way the "enemy." The day before the Monday killings, he watched as the ROTC building was burned to the ground by protesters. He was part of the military but still was against the war. Monday, he went to peacefully protest.

IN MEMORY OF KENT STATE
MAY 4, 1970 - MAY 4, 1985

Sunday afternoon Allison Krause put a flower in a National Guardsman's rifle. The following day, she herself was killed by a rifle.

The "Kent Four," as they became known, did not rally that day and expect to die, or even get arrested. Three of them went merely to say "No more war." One of them went simply to go to class. Yet tomorrow is the 15th anniversary of four students being immortalized. They are remembered not only for their deaths, but for their presence today. They are at every student protest.

They were there four years ago at the co-ed bathroom rally. They were there three years ago at the nuclear freeze rally. They showed up last October to rally for a change in presidents and just two days ago, you have to believe they were there when police allowed 32 students to sit on a bus for 10 minutes while a puddle of gasoline surrounded the rear of the vehicle. All anyone had to do was light a match, and it would have been Kent State all over again. But the students escaped with no fatalities.

You just have to believe the Kent Four were there looking out for the protesters to ensure that what went wrong 15 years ago never happen again anywhere.

BLACK AFFAIRS

University hosts Liberation Day

A panel discussion on Pan-Africanist Liberation Struggle at 7:30 p.m. tomorrow in Room 101 of the Campus Center will highlight the African Liberation day events at the University of Massachusetts.

African Liberation Day is "a day set aside to celebrate through the Black world the liberation of Africa," said a member of the African Student Association.

African Liberation Day was first celebrated on May 25, 1973 at the Malcolm X Park, across from Meridian Hall on the Campus of Howard University in Washington. The ASA have hosted the event for three years.

The panel will feature Ambassador Oumarou Youssoufou of the organization of African Unity, L. Makhanda, deputy chief of the Pan-African Congress of South Africa, Ron Waters, co-founder of TransAfrica and political science professor at Howard University in Washington, Locksley Edmonson, professor of government at Cornell University and Penelope Andrews, black South African attorney currently working with the NAACP legal fund.

Other events include a student panel discussion on "Bridging the Gap: The African-Americans, Caribbeans, and Africans," today at 7:30 p.m. in Elliot Hall at Mount Holyoke College.

A dance performance featuring Nana Yao Opare Dinizulu and African Dancers and Drummers will be held tomorrow at 4 p.m. at Hampden Theater.

Club wins trophies

By KIMBERLY BURGE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts chapter of the Universal Budo Karate Academy won five trophies at the Hamzy's 23 Grand National Karate Championships in Torrington, Connecticut early last week.

The Hamzy's Grand National Karate Championships are B-rated tournaments and widely known across the country. Karate Illustrated, a national karate magazine, has a rating system of A, B, and C.

"In order to be a top competitor in New England and receive recognition as a black belt, you have to compete in the B or C category," said Abdul Mumeet, master karate instructor at UMass. "I'm proud of the group from the University of Massachusetts," he said.

Since winning this illustrious tournament, the academy has been invited to all the tournaments throughout the United States.

"We're going to pick at random and hopefully make all the tournaments in the New England area."

The fighting team of Kalif and Kareem Sharif, Valerie Eaton, a hearing-impaired student, and Paul Martin placed in all of their divisions. Kalif Sharif placed first in the black belt lightweight division and fourth in kata. His brother Kareem, placed second in contact karate.

"My brother and I started competing in tournaments when we were seven years old. We've been competing for about eleven years," said Sharif, and entering first-year student.

Even though it was Paul Martin's first time in a karate tournament, he won all three of his matches. "I felt confident because I knew that the master wouldn't send me to be slaughtered. Budo Karate works out better than any other karate so I felt I was prepared," he said.

As with any athletic sport, discipline and attitude play a very key role in performance. "I'm very hard on the team. I don't allow any smoking, drinking, or drugs. If you're going to be an athlete, you have to act like one," Mumeet said.

His hard discipline paid off because his team also won a trophy for best uniforms and discipline.

Their next tournament will be on May 31.

Challenge students get awards

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

An awards banquet honoring 24 students from high schools in the Boston area who have excelled in the Challenge Program ended a weekend of events at the University of Massachusetts recently.

Students from Madison Park, Jamaica Plain and Dorchester High Schools arrived on Friday morning at UMass for what proved to be an educational and rewarding experience.

Their busy schedule included workshops on overcoming math anxiety, computer skills, student empowerment, self-image and music as well as athletic activities and a concert.

The challenge program is a college preparatory program for minority and low-income high school students.

Rudy Jones, assistant director of undergraduate admissions said the weekend program was created to expose the students to the college experience without taking them away from their regular school schedule. In addition, he said it benefitted the students in their interaction with college students.

Jacqueline Murray, teacher and program coordinator at Dorchester High said the event "was a great experience for the kids. Their fears about college disappeared after the first day. They saw that college students are people too."

Nancy O'Neil Challenge Program coordinator at Madison Park High gave high praise to the pre-college program. "It has a positive influence on students. It gives them a sense of identity and a challenge if they want to attend college."

Martina Rios, a junior at Jamaica Plain High who received the number two award for her outstanding performance while in the program said the weekend gave her the opportunity "to feel what being is college is."

David Pierce, a graduate student in the English as a Second Language Program at UMass who sat in one of the workshops said the students were, "sharp" and "really motivating" with lots of ideas.

What's Happening

SATURDAY - A workshop on Women and Labor (South Korea, U.S.A.) will be held at 9:45 in room 801-802 of the Campus Center. Women in Labor-Part II (Palestine, South Africa) will be discussed in a workshop at 1:45 in room 801-802 of the Campus Center. Third World Women and Feminism will be discussed in a workshop at 1:45 in room 805 of the Campus Center. Josephina Rodriguez, a longtime activist of the Puerto Rican Independence movement will be the keynote speaker at a Women in Resistance conference at 4:15 in the Campus Center.

"A Musical Dream," a play about the Spanish, Indian and African contribution to Puerto Rican music will be performed by Sorobei, the Latin children ensemble at 7 p.m. in room 1009 of the Campus Center. The show is free and open to the public.

Boston's Reggae band, New Lions will star in a benefit Reggae dance and concert along with WMUA deejay Jay Scotty Dread at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Building. Admission is $3. for students and $5. for the general public. Proceeds will benefit the Forum '85 International Women Event.

The EveryWomen's Center at the University of Massachusetts is collecting clothing and housewares for an Easthampton family whose house was destroyed in a fire late last month. Donations can be brought to Loti Reyes-Ocasio or Julie Martinez at Wilder Hall.

You Should Review West Side Story Again Buddy!

My name is Harold Finner and I am a reporter from another paper. Let me get down to what I must say.

I saw the production of West Side Story at U-Mass done by the Theater Guild. First of all Count Ramin Zahed, I think you should see the production again and with your eyes and ears open this time. The laughter you mentioned was from pure pleasure. You also mentioned the choreography and how you thought it was "sloppy and unpolished". I may have noticed a few dancers not executing steps properly but on the whole I thought the choreography was pleasing and entertaining.

Congratulations to whoever choreographed the show!

It was obvious after each number through the applause how the audience enjoyed it. The people who play Tony and Maria were believeable enough for me. (sorry I did not get access to any of the cast names)

I felt they had a true devotion for each other and the voices carried over just excellent. Anita I must say was smashingly hot! Her character came through strongly in her acting, singing and dancing. After watching her I had to cool down a bit. Bernardo did not quite capture the power Anita had but was strong enough to carry the role. Riff (don't believe you did not mention any of these people Count), was just vibrating with energy and executed his character well. Action did a superb job always having a demanding presence on stage.

Cino, especially when he delivers the news about Bernardo's death to Maria, is strong and convincing.

Hats off to all other characters in the show. You all did a fine job. Again Count Ramin Zahed, this was obvious from the audience's response! I think I can speak for the audience except for the Count, but who cares about what he has to say, that the staff and cast of West Side Story all did a fine job in entertaining the people.

Harold Finner

DESPITE ITS RECENT DECLINE, THE MIGHTY DOLLAR WAS AGAIN THE SOURCE OF MANY HEATED DISCUSSIONS AT THE ECONOMIC SUMMIT MEETING TODAY..
AFTERWARDS, THE PRESIDENT DEFENDED HIS COUNTRY'S BELOVED CURRENCY.
WE'RE PROUD OF THE FAITH PEOPLE PUT IN OUR DOLLAR..
FRANKLY, I THINK SOME OF THE MINISTERS HERE MAY BE JUST A LITTLE BIT JEALOUS OF MY MASSIVE DEFICITS.

goal-scorer with 19. Mike Fiorini and Greg Fisk each have 14 with Doug Musco adding 11.

Goaltender Gerry Moreau has a .544 save percentage and a 9.6 goals-against average. The defensive unit of Mark Stratton, Tom Aldrich and Gerry Bryne has played well. Garber hopes to use defensive reserve Scott Craig more to rest his starters and prepare for upcoming games at C.W. Post and home against Syracuse.

In the past, UMass has trailed Hobart before rallying for victories and Garber hopes to avoid this trap again.

"We have to go out there and give them a game up to the level we can play," the veteran coach said. "If we do that, we'll probably win. I expect them to come out sky-high for us because we are a Division I team, their crowd will be jumping all over us and going crazy. It's an intense game."

Garber hopes to use two attack units. Carmean, Lukacovic and Fiorini have started and played well.

GORILLA GRUMBLINGS: UMass and Hobart had their game snowed out last season and Garber was reluctant to play this season, citing the upcoming Post game (which was moved from this Wednesday to Tuesday) and the Syracuse game (which was moved from Saturday the 11th to Friday the 10th because of the Orange's graduation). The coach hopes to give his players a good rest for Syracuse instead of the eight hours roundtrip to Hobart and another seven to Post.

extra scoring punch. Diane Buch has set the freshman single season scoring mark by scoring 35 goals (15 assists) and Kim Stark has tallied 31 goals (six assists). Defensively, another freshman plays a big role. Goalie Joy Jones rebounded from pre-season knee surgery to amass a shot-to-goal percentage of 507 in 12 games.

UMass relies on senior Pam Moryl (38 goals, seven assists), junior Bunny Forbes (18, 15), and freshman Ginny Armstrong (19, one) on of fense. However Hixon plans to make more use of her defensive players against JM to provide a wrinkle in the UMass attack.

"We're going to work de fenders Kris Kocot, Andrea Muccini, and Emily Hunnston into the offense. I think we need more of an element of surprise in our attack. We'll use them to get the ball to where they don't expect it. That way we can open up the middle for Pam, Ginny, and Bunny," Hixon said.

The teams have met previously with both contest resulting in upsets. In 1983 James Madison beat then defending national champion UMass 6-5. In last year's ECAC match UMass, seeded number four behind JM, pulled off an 8-7 come from behind victory.

In the other ECAC game today UNH meets fourth seeded Lovola at 1:00. The winners of today's contest meet Saturday at 1:00 in the tournament championship.

A-10 tournaments next for UMass

● Baseball tangles with W. Virginia

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team will make a bid for the NCAA tournament when it travels to West Virginia for the Atlantic 10 championships starting today.

The Minutemen, 20-16, face West Virginia at 3:30 p.m. today. The Mountaineers won the A-10's western division with a 9-3 record while UMass was runner-up in the eastern division with an 8-4 record. In the first game, Temple faces Penn State.

UMass will go with senior righthander Jim Knopf (3-3, 2.38 earned run average) against West Virginia. The Mountaineers are expected to counter with lefthander Rich Schlieper (7-1, 1.54), one of the conference's best pitchers.

"It's time for us to play some ball," UMass manager Dick Bergquist said. "If we do well, we can continue our season a little more. I think we're ready."

UMass is plagued with injuries, missing both junior firstbaseman Jeff Cimini and freshman firstbaseman/pitcher Matt Sheran with season-ending injuries. Reserve catcher Dan Clifford will fill in at first with Bergquist juggling his on again/off again pitching staff in the championships.

The second UMass game (the tournament is double elimination) will see junior righthander Bob Kostro (3-2, 6.06) on the mound. Other likely pitchers for either a third game or relief action are lefthander Steve Allard, John Martin, Jeff Jensen (a league-leading four saves) and Matt Subocz.

At the plate, UMass is led by senior designated hitter Todd Comeau and his .380 batting average with 38 RBIs and six homers. Thirdbaseman Doug Wright is at .348 and outfielder Jay Zerner is hitting .344. Shortstop Angelo Salustri is hitting .312 with seven homers and 31 RBI.

Keys for UMass include middle infield defense. Secondbaseman Jack Bloise (.314) is back after missing 20 games with a badly pulled leg muscle. Salustri is also nursing a bad back. Catching will be done by either senior Todd Ezold (.167 with a hand injury) or sophomore Sean Flint (.278). Both Steve Messina (.283) and Bruce Kingman (.336 with a 21 stolen bases) have played well in the outfield.

● Softball takes on Temple

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

For the first time this season, the pressure is off the University of Massachusetts softball team.

For much of the season, the team flirted with .500 and just in the last week, after winning seven of its last eight, has UMass come together.

And just in time for today's opening round of the Atlantic 10 championships where fourth seeded UMass, 22-19-1, 5-5 in the A-10, meets top-seeded Temple, 23-13, 9-1, at 2 p.m. at Penn State.

"We're just glad to be there," coach Elaine Sortino said. "It's been a tough road for us to be there. We're going for broke. It's the whole season for us."

The winner of the double-elimination tourney gets an automatic bid to the NCAA tournament. Penn State and defending champion Rutgers complete the field. The championship game is Sunday at 1 p.m.

Junior co-captain Lynn Stockley will be on the mound for UMass this afternoon. Stockley, who was named to the A-10 all-conference team for the second straight year, is 13-7, 0.30 ERA and has 104 strikeouts.

Second baseman Carol Frattaroli, .305, 13 RBI, (second consecutive year) and Cathy Reed, a pitcher, first baseman and designated hitter, were also named to the squad. Reed was the ultity selection.

UMass is 1-5 against the three tourney teams. "I hope no one is taking us too lightly," Sortino said. UMass has been playing its best softball of the year that last eight games.

"The tournament is...a tournament and it will go to the team that plays well all weekend and has a couple of lucky breaks," Sortino said.

Freshman shortstop Paige Kopcza, (.455), junior catcher Beth Talbott (.313) and sophomore outfielder Emily Bietsch have been hot at the plate for UMass the past few games. In the last eight games, UMass has outscored the opposition, 34-9.

Another interesting note, UMass has been seeded first the past two years and never won.

Gazelles renew rivalry in ECAC tournament

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Staff

A possible NCAA tournament bid lays on the line as the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team travels north to Durham, New Hampshire to participate in the East Coast Athletic Conference postseason tournament. UMass, seeded second in the four team tourney plays James Madison University the third seed, at 3:30 p.m.

If UMass wins the ECAC's it stands a chance of moving up from its current national ranking of sixth, thus improving it opportunities for receiving a place in the four team NCAA tournament.

The top three teams in the nation, Temple University, the University of Maryland, and Penn State University are fairly sure participants in the NCAA's. The fourth spot in the tournament could go to either the University of Virginia (number four), the University of New Hampshire (ranked fifth) or UMass. UNH is the number-one seed in the ECAC tourney.

But things still come on at a time and the Gazelles must concentrate on James Madison first of all. James Madison compiled an 8-9 record in its regular season action. However, the team has lost five games by one goal and all but two of the team's defeats have come at the hands of top ranked teams. James Madison lost to such top-ten teams as Delaware, Penn State, UNH, and Temple. James Madison has not been ranked this year.

"They play a man-to-man defense and their offense relies on some strong individual players," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "Overall they are a fast team, and they are going to give us a game. We're going to have to play well to win."

Robyn Dunn leads the James Madison offense with 44 goals and 18 assists. Two freshmen have come through for JM this year to add

If you read the rest of the sport's page, you will notice that every major sport is away for the weekend. So, if you're sitting around Saturday afternoon and want to catch some rays (if it's sunny), head on over to Alumni Stadium at 1:30 p.m. for the annual spring football game.

Coach Bob Stull will be looking at many things during the game, including the quarterback position. Right now, Jim Simeone owns the job, but is being challenged by reserves Mike Trifari, Matt Palazzi, and Tim Hecht. Injuries have hurt the UMass backfield (Frank Fay and George Bornwell), so also watch for transfer fullback Al Neri from Nassau Community College.

Minutemen land a big man

6-8 center signs, BU coach to fill GW job?

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts basketball team made a move to strengthen its frontcourt, signing 6-8 shotblocker Sean Mosby of Camden, New Jersey.

Mosby chose UMass ahead of Northeastern, Wake Forest and LaSalle and is the fourth player to sign with the Minutemen. Coach Ron Gerlufsen indicated he may still sign two other players, a forward and a point guard.

"We project Sean as a shotblocking center," Gerlufsen said. "We really didn't have a legitimate shot blocker this past year. I think Sean's best basketball is ahead of him."

Mosby averaged eight points and nine rebounds in high school while leading his team to a 23-4 record. He rejected 3.5 shots-per-game. Camden won the Jersey Group IV title Mosby's junior season.

In other basketball news, the Collegian has learned that there are six finalists for the George Washington basketball coach's job vacated by Gerry Gimblestob after this past season.

Boston University coach John Kuester is expected to be named to the job today. Northeastern coach Jim Calhoun, Iona's Pat Kennedy, St. Peter's Bob Duquiet, GW assistant Mike Cohen and Lehigh head man Tom Schneider were also considered.

UMass forward Horace Neysmith, who is currently deciding between European ball and the new USBL, was named to Eastern Basketball's "Blue Collar" team. Gerlufsen was second to Duquesne's Jim Satalin for unsung coach while UM athletic director Frank McInerney was given the worst support award for not promoting the team when it played in Springfield and leaving the A-10 tournament after the banquet.

Face Division III champs

Gorillas invade Hobart

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

For most Division I lacrosse teams, playing Division III national champions (for five years running) Hobart College is a no-win situation.

If you beat Hobart, critics will point to the fact you beat a Division III team, lose to them and you get looked down upon, despite the fact Hobart recruits, takes a lengthy spring trip and gets 7,000-8,000 fans at each game.

But for one Division I team, the University of Massachusetts, beating Hobart is a definite winning situation. A victory at Hobart (Saturday at 2 p.m.) will give UMass an even (6-6) record and establish a two-game win streak, two of coach Dick Garber's immediate goals for the season.

"They're a hell of a team and beating them would do a lot for us," Garber said. "We've beaten them all four times we've faced them, and most Division I teams don't do that, so I'm confident we can get out there and win."

Hobart relies on a quick-shooting offense led by senior attackman Rob Grimaldi and sophomore Ray Gilliam. They are currently 8-3 on the season and ranked second in Division III behind Washington College.

UMass goes into the game fresh off of a 17-11 pasting of Dartmouth at home on Wednesday. Sophomore attackman Tom Carmean has led the Gorillas with 17 goals and 30 assists for 47 points. Senior Tom Lukacovic is the leading Participants of the 2,000-strong Gay and Lesbian Activists (GALA) March parade down Main Street, Northampton Saturday.

GALA parade attracts 2,000 in Northampton

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

Music, singing, dancing, chanting and purple balloons filled the streets of Northampton Saturday afternoon as 2,000 people paraded in the fourth annual Lesbian and Gay Liberation March.

"Each year it gets bigger and better," said Kathryn Courtland Millis, member of Gay and Lesbian Activists (GALA), which sponsored the event.

The march began at Bridge Street School, continued down Main Street with participants yelling chants such as "Hey ho, hey ho, homophobia has got to go," and terminated with a rally in Pulaski Park.

Along the route, bystanders and people in passing cars added their support. But when the marchers approached the park they were met by protesters holding signs such as "God made Adam for Eve, not Steve," and one sign, nailed to a coffin, read "We mourn the death of morals in Northampton."

The crowd responded to the protesters with louder chanting and by producing alternative signs which read "God loves a lesbian" and "One in ten Baptists must be in the closet."

According to Millis, the theme of this year's march was "moving together, building unity and celebrating diversity." She said the musicians and speakers that entertained the crowd in the park were drawn from a variety of racial, ethnic, religious and age groups.

The first speaker, GALA organizer Kim Christiansen, said, "in the past our community has been under attack and attacks against us still occur.

"At least one member of our lesbian community has been murdered this year," she said, adding that "never again" should such incidences be allowed to occur.

"We are proud and angry and the rights we are not given we will take," she said.

Bernadette Cozart, a black lesbian member of the All-People's Congress who spoke on the need for unity said "when we're apart they'll pick us off one at a time."

"We must come together," she said, and adding that "marches like this one make you know we are on the move and our time has come."

A spokeswoman for the Metropolitan Community Church commented on the protesters in her speech, and said "God loves all people and being a Christian is not standing on the side of the road with a coffin."

"Being a Christian is fighting homophobia, racism, sexism, anti-semitism and celebrating diversity," she said.

According to GALA spokesperson Jane Cleland, this years march was the "smoothest ever."

She recalled that last year a permit was denied for the march, a move which led GALA to sue the city of Northampton, and although they won based on the First Ammendment, this led to "tensions."

She said this year the city had been cooperative and the police were "a pleasure to work with," being "respectful polite and with a good attitude."

Asked how she felt after the march, co-director of the UMass Lesbian Union, Debra Kenn, replied "I'm psyched out and happy beyond belief. It's been ecstatic and fantastic."

"This is my first parade and I'm psyched," agreed John Jablonsky, president of the UMass Lesbian, Bisexual Gay Alliance, adding "most of the people on the road were really supportive."

Jennifer Brauer, co-director of the Lesbian Union with Kenn, said that "the unity was really good," as were the chants, especially the one that went "Two, four, six, eight, how d'you know the police are straight?" she said.

Protests parallel cemetery visit

By Daniela Waterman
and the Associated Press

Despite worldwide protests, including at the University of Massachusetts, President Ronald Reagan led wreath-laying ceremony yesterday at the small military cemetery in Bitburg, West Germany that holds gravestones of German war dead and SS troopers.

In the town of Bitburg, supporters waving American flags lined the streets, but they were overshadowed by jeering demonstrators from the United States, France, West Germany and 14 other countries.

In Boston, hundreds of people, including survivors of the Nazi Holocaust and members of their families, protested yesterday, and Friday, more than 250 people gathered in the Student Union Ballroom at UMass to hear Jewish, and Christian community leaders and other activists speak to protest the visit.

"I believe that our President's visit today in Bitburg, Germany, will be remembered as a blot of shame in American history," Rappi David Neiman, chairman of the Catholic-Jewish Committee of the Archdiocese of Boston, told a crowd estimated at 400 on Boston Common.

One hour earlier, in front of the German consulate's office in Boston's Back Bay section, approximately 25 members of the Jewish Defense League (JDL) burned a replica of a Nazi flag and condemned the President's visit.

In New Bedford, 250 Christians and Jews joined in an ecumenical meeting yesterday at Ahavath Achim Synagogue to protest the visit.

Michelle Richmond of Hillel, a UMass jewish organization, the event's sponsor, said a UMass rally was organized in three days by a diverse coalition including the United Christian Foundation, the Newman Center, UMass Republican Club and the Student Government Association President's Office.

Dan Stockford, a member of the United Christian Foundation, said, "We speak not only as Jews, but as Protestants, as Catholics, as atheists, as Buddhists, as blacks,

OTIS DAY AND FOUR ARRESTS BY NIGHT — One University of Massachusetts student was arrested and charged with assault and battery on a police officer, and two were arrested and charged with disorderly conduct when fighting broke out at the Southwest Area Government concert after an hour-long delay. UMass Director of public safety Gerald T. O'Neil said state police were summoned and drove through campus but did not leave their cars. UMass police made the arrests. About 5,000 students attended the concert, which featured Otis Day and the Nights.

Doctors called to testify against Claus

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) - The jury hearing the retrial of Claus von Bulow will be emersed in the world of medicine this week as the state calls an army of Doctors, nurses and lab technicians in an attempt to show the socialite tried to murder his wife with insulin.

Assistant Attorney General Henry Gemma said he planned to call to the stand today Dr. H. Harris Funkenstein, a Harvard Medical School neurologist who said at the first trial that Martha "Sunny" von Bulow's 1980 coma could only have been caused by an insulin injection.

Prosecutors claim the 1980 coma, which is irreversible, and one a year earlier were caused by insulin von Bulow injected into his wife.

The 58-year-old-, Danish-born financial adviser faces up to 40 years in prison if convicted on both attempted-murder counts. The Rhode Island Supreme Court reversed his 1982 convictions last year on state constitutional grounds, paving the way for the retrial.

Funkenstein treated Mrs.von Bulow when she was transferred from Newport Hospital to Peter Bent Brigham Hospital in Boston on Dec. 22 1980, one day after the second coma.

New bank check-holding policy could benefit all

BOSTON (AP) - Starting May 15, Massachusetts banks won't be able to hold customers' checks for longer than five days, a change consumer groups say will help eliminate longer delays and aid people who live from paycheck to paycheck.

"It will benefit everybody, but low-income people in particular because they are most likely to need cash immediately and live from entitlement check to entitlement check," said Laura Barrett of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group.

A MassPIRG survey completed last March showed 25 percent of Bay State banks placed a one week hold on local checks, 20 percent had a two-week hold on out-of-state checks and some held checks for as long as a month before allowing customers to get cash.

The new regulations, already adopted in New York and California, will permit:

-Access to money within three business days, including the day of deposit, to checks drawn on New England banks.

-U.S. government checks to clear within two business days. State or local government checks would be covered under the provision for New England bank checks.

-A five-day limit for checks from any other state.

Ethiopians in the Boston area reflect on someday going home

BOSTON (AP) - Civil war and a devastating famine have driven thousands of Ethiopians from their native country to the Boston area, but thoughts of their ancient land have not been pushed from their hearts.

"We carry Ethiopia with us wherever we go," says Asfw Sahle, a political exile who has lived in Boston since 1976. "Most of us want badly to return. That is the dream that gives us strenth."

A decade ago,according to the Boston Sunday Globe, there were only a handful of Ethiopians living in New England, and most were students. Today, an estimated 3,000 live in the Boston area, where they have come recently to escape the oppression of Ethiopia. it is like a knife in my heart," said Hagos Kahasy Wolde, 30, who was one of the 2,536 Ethiopians admitted to the United States in 1984.

Who says you can't take it with you? After four years of college, you've got a lot of things. And one more could be the American Express® Card.

Because if you're a senior and you've accepted a $10,000 career-oriented job, you could get the American Express Card.

That's it. No strings. No gimmicks. (And even if you don't have a job right now, don't worry. This offer is still good for 12 months after you graduate.)

If it sounds like the Card is a little easier for seniors to get right now, you're right.

But this is a way that American Express can show that we believe in your future. And as you graduate and go up the ladder, we'd like to come along.

The Card is great for business. It can help you begin to establish your credit history. And, in a little less serious vein, the Card can be a lot of fun. Use it for vacations, for a night on the town, or just a little shopping.

So call 1-800-528-4800 and ask to have a Special Student Application sent to you. Or look for one on campus.

The American Express Card. Don't leave school without it.®

Budget cut causes dismissal of popular math instructor

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

A $50,000 budget cut in the mathematics department will leave 10 teaching assistants and at least one non-tenured professor jobless this fall, and is leaving many students angry over the release of one particular instructor.

Robert Cooley has been a visiting instructor here for the past two years, teaching lower level calculus courses. He was a teaching assistant for two years before that. In 1981, he was awarded a Distinguished Teachers Award and has been nominated each of the four years he has been at the University.

In February, he was told he would not be rehired for the fall semester. Ten T.A. positions were also cut.

"We're unhappy about it but the only place we can make cuts is in personnel," said Larry Mann, chairman of the department.

Mann, who made the decision about the cuts said he could only cut temporary personnel, and not tenured professors, who affect enrollment. "We're forced into a situation of cutting enrollments of lower division courses. I take full responsibility for determining these priorities," Mann said.

The cuts are a result of the decreased fiscal year 1986 budget issued by the state Board of Regents of Higher Education.

"The students are satisfied with the quality of math eduction that they're getting from me and they're not satisfied with the quality of other math teachers," Cooley said.

"I love teaching math classes at this school. I have a ball doing it," he said.

Cooley said the math department's "priorities are all messed up." He said cuts in teaching positions and, consequently, in classes are being made at the expense of "an elite bunch of researchers, trying to keep intact."

"The students are satisfied with the quality of math education that they're getting from me and they're not satisfied with the quality of other math teachers."

Cooley argued that there are 42 full-time faculty members, each teaching about 30 students, while this semester he is teaching four large lectures totaling 1,000 to 1,200 students.

But, Mann said by 1986 cuts will have to be made across the board, including in research.

Students protested on behalf of Cooley last week by submitting a petition with 600 signatures, to UMass President David C. Knapp, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, Provost Richard O'Brien, Dean of Arts and Sciences Frederick Byron, and Mann, demanding Cooley's reinstatement. The petition said Cooley had, "excellent rapport," with students, that he presented subject matter in a way which made students, "eager to learn," and that he interacted "extensively with the student body in a positive and supportive manner."

Cooley is an "excellent teacher. He gets through to you. He really communicates with the students," said first-year student in the School of Management, Eric Short, who protested on Cooley's behalf with about 25 other students in Mann's office last week.

"He (Mann) doesn't care," Short said. The "ignorance of the math department and the administration is undermining education at the University as a whole."

Mann said that Math 106, the first part of a two-semester calculus course will be severely restricted and that Math 104, a one semester course, which covers 106 and 107, will be offered instead. About 850 students preregistered for Math 106 in the Fall 1984.

as whites, as human beings against an act which offends us all in its sheer disregard for the crimes committed by the men buried in that cemetery."

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter of Hillel spoke of the symbolic significance of Reagan's visit. "Reagan's action symbolizes a false re-writing of history. By calling the murderers victims, he is saying these poor boys weren't so bad after all.

"We will never honor the Nazi killers," Perlmutter said. "Murder should never be forgotten or forgiven."

Reagan is seeking reconciliation with Germany, but honoring the Nazis buried in the Bitburg cemetery is not reconciliation, Perlmutter added.

"We need not only speak out against the injustices of the past. Today the persecution continues — Jews in Russia, blacks in South Africa — and we must continue to act," Perlmutter said.

Perlmutter called for a moment of silence in memory of the victims.

To mute the storm of protest arising from his homage at the graves of Nazis, Reagan earlier spent an hour at a concentration camp where 50,000 Jews and gentiles were put to death by Adolf Hitler's 12-year dictatorship.

"The horror cannot outlast the hope," Reagan said at the cemetery — his message to those who accused him of ignoring the Nazi horrors.

"Some old wounds have been reopened, and this I regret very much, because this should be a time of healing," he said, but he added that God, not he, has judged the deeds of the men buried there."

BOG Coors forum to open debate

By VICKI A. SPAGNOLI
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors will sponsor a forum tonight to address the board's March 28th decision to recommend that the CC administration halt the sale of Coors beer in the Blue Wall.

"The purpose of the forum is to present both side's arguments to the student body and to educate the students to the board's reasons for its decision," John Hayes, BOG coordinator, said.

The forum will begin at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom and will be free to all University students, Hayes said. A pro-Coors and anti-Coors group, each composed of four speakers, will give 30-minute presentations to the student body followed by a question and answer session, Hayes said. John Whiteman, from the Mediation Project, will mediate the forum.

Representatives from the Coors company in Golden, Colo. will not be present at the forum because it is not in their best interest to participate in a debate similar to the one which took place at the BOG meeting last month, Hayes said.

Hayes said the forum will present a balanced presentation even without the attendance of Coors representatives. He said local representatives who are in favor of Coors beer, such as the local Teamsters union which distributes Coors in Amherst, will be asked to speak.

BOG member and official AFL/CIO member James Shaw is organizing the anti-Coors group of speakers. Shaw said Arthur R. Osborne, Mass. AFL/CIO president is tentatively scheduled to speak, as is David Sickler, National AFL/CIO chairman for the Coors Boycott. Shaw said a professor from the UMass political science department will also speak.

The board recommended that Coors be discontinued because of reported violations of Coors employee's rights, a lack of union in the brewery for the past eight years, and the Coors family's support of right-winged political organizations like the Heritage Foundation and the John Birch Society.

After the forum, the Student Government Association will present the question of whether the BOG "overstepped its bounds" in a referendum question to be voted on by the student body on Thursday, May 9, Hayes said. He said the board disagrees with the question the SGA has posed because the referendum question "is not relative to the issue itself." He said the board is trying to submit an additional question to the SGA to be placed on the referendum ballot.

Nurses don't work just in hospital care

By TIM O'LEARY
Collegian Staff

Today is National Nurses Day, a day chosen by the National League of Nurses to increase awareness of the role of nurses in health care and to uproot the notion that they work only in hospitals.

"People don't realize nurses work in other areas. Some work as consultants to hospitals; others as clinical specialists, individuals highly skilled in a certain area; other nurses are getting into family counseling and opening private practices," Michelle Cardinal, a senior UMass nursing student, said.

"Nurses are politically aware of things. For instance, there's a group called Nurses Alliance for Prevention of Nuclear War and they're trying to start a chapter in the Amherst area," Cardinal said.

Cardinal said the UMass nursing students also lobby in the State House to pass legislation favorable to nursing, including a bill that would allow Nurse Practitioners to write prescriptions, she said.

Nurses at UMass are also "trying to bridge the gap between two cultures in health care practices," by producing an educational video for Cambodian refugees, said Jeannine Muldoon, nursing lecturer and coordinator of senior nursing students.

The video, which will be produced in both English and Khmer, will help the Cambodian population understand the differences between health care delivery in the U.S. and in Cambodia, Muldoon said.

Symposium to examine concerns, trends in learning disabilities

"New Challenges in Higher Education: Capitalizing on the Special Abilities of Learning Disabled Students," will be the subject of a symposium today from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. in the Campus Center.

The symposium, sponsored by the Dyslexic Student Organization, will feature an introductory speech from Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, who will show his support of learning disability support services. Following Collins' remarks, various campus organizations will introduce information on learning disability services provided by the University.

Patrick Costello, president of the Dyslexic Student Organization, said the new challenges in higher education are those which college administrators face in regard to learning disabled students. He added that capitalizing on the special abilities will be one of the major challenges.

Costello said the symposium will attempt to answer questions such as: "What should learning disability students expect when they come to the University?," and "How can those in the teaching profession help learning disabled students?"

End of the 'teflon' president

Daniel Abramowitz

There is no acceptable justification for President Reagan's decision to visit a cemetery in Bitburg, Germany yesterday. Included in that cemetery are the graves of almost 2,000 German soldiers, including 47 members of the SS, the Nazi elite guard.

The president claims that there is nothing wrong with visiting the cemetery because those German soldiers were also victims of Nazism. In fact, in a White House session, Reagan went so far as to say: "They were victims, just as surely as the victims in the concentration camps."

Perhaps they were victims in the sense that their deaths were part of the statistical total of those who died in World War II. But to equate SS men with the unarmed civilians that were murdered in the concentration camps is ludicrous and irresponsible. I would like to know how many innocent men, women, and children were savagely gunned down or led into the gas chambers by one of these "victims" before an allied bullet put a stop to it.

These recent developments have caused a very understandable explosion of political controversy. Eighty-three senators, over three quarters of the entire United States Senate, signed a letter urging Reagan to omit the Bitburg cemetery from his itinerary. In Congress, a nonbinding resolution, signed by over 200 members had also been introduced. One would expect that with so much opposition from the public, Reagan would have realized that he made a terrible error in judgement, and that a change in his plans had to take place. That did not happen.

"To err is human," Shakespeare once said, and it is perfectly understandable for someone to make an honest mistake. When John F. Kennedy was president he made his share of mistakes, perhaps the most notable of which was the Bay of Pigs fiasco, in which Kennedy set in motion a CIA plan to overthrow the Cuban government. The operation ended in complete failure and humiliation. When it was over, however, President Kennedy had the integrity and the strength to stand up and admit that he made a mistake and had learned from it.

It has become quite obvious that President Reagan lacks those very qualities that made men like John Kennedy such great leaders. Reagan has found it impossible to admit that he was wrong. As the president put it, "All it would do is leave me looking as if I caved in, in the face of some unfavorable attention." We would all be better off if the president was more concerned about the fundamental issues, rather than his image.

Finally, by visiting Bitburg cemetery in his trip to Germany, he has showed the American people and the world that he simply does not know the difference between war and genocide. Such a tragic move has announced to the world Reagan's indifference toward the millions who suffered and died during the horrifying years of the Holocaust. It is a mistake that will neither by forgotten nor forgiven. When he puts a wreath at that cemetery, Ronald Reagan will put an end to the "teflon" presidency.

Daniel Abramowitz is a UMass student.

Misconceptions, a form of stereotyping

Editor's Note: The following was inadvertantly left out of Thursday's letter from Linda Velazquez.

Stephen Erickson's column last week as well as his and the young Republican image of Latin American students on campus is a misconception and one I will try to correct in this letter.

First of all, we are not "left-wing activists." This year's Latin American week was co-sponsored by the Western Massachusetts Latin America Solidarity Committee and 15 other non-Latin organizations, which explain why there were many political events. Since the week was started in 1975 by AHORA, it was and it still is a cultural educational event with political activities. As he indicated in his misconceived column, we had nothing to do with the Sandinistas, we have nothing to do with the Russians and we have nothing to do with the Republicans.

The Republicans Club as well as other organizations on campus took advantage of Reagan's proposed funding plan for the Contras and used AHORA and its activity to voice it's political ideology. We are used to this harsh language behind close doors and are able to fight it out, but it is not permissable publicly to be called "left-wing activists."

When Erickson said "objectivity was laid to waste" that week, a reason why he did not participate was not because he was not called upon, but because he might not (or chose not to) be aware of activities sponsored by AHORA and other Third World groups on campus. We have been celebrating the Latin American week and have never before been approached by anybody. Only when the Republicans have to defend their myopic view of the world are they willing to help and participate.

Learning about the culture and the people of Latin America might take Erickson years, but its an essential process. How can you talk about our countries and say that Americans must defend those fighting for freedom when Latins in the U.S. are looked upon negatively and are treated with disrespect and prejudism. You have done the same, Erickson placing a stereotypical badge on us without knowing us.

Linda Velazquez

Changing the world

One of the wonderful things about lesbians, gay men and bisexuals is that we are everywhere. We live in every city of every state in every nation on every continent. We shop at every grocery, co-op and market. We are grandparents, cousins and in-laws.

We are also members of every ethnic, racial and religious group. We come from every class background, old and young. We are differently abled. We are everywhere. And we shall be free.

A lot of cities have "Pride" marches, so why did we call ours a "Liberation" march? Pride is a good thing, to be sure. But liberation, according to my dictionary is freeing from "arbitrary or despotic control" into "the positive enjoyment of various social, political, or economic rights." Liberation involves changing the conditions under which you and the rest of the people in the world live, and changing them for the better.

That's why the chant "We are everywhere and we shall be free." is such a wonderful idea. Liberation for lesbians and gay men because we are everywhere has to involve the liberation of all people everywhere. We are shackled not only by heterosexism (which by the way, hurts heterosexual people too) but also by racism, sexism, and a host of other mechanisms for keeping people controlled: the liberation of lesbians and gay men requires that all of those mechanisms be torn down and replaced.

Many of us have visions of a better world. We see societies governed by their members, with co-operation, respect, justice and liberty as guiding values. We cherish both unity and diversity.

Turning our dreams into reality is very exciting. "We are everywhere and we shall be free (clap, clap)" is a fast chant, that gets your adrenaline going. That's good, because changing the world is often difficult.

Where were you?

We would like to express appreciation to the fraternity, Lambda Chi Alpha, which openly supported the Take Back the Night March on April 19. When the march passed their house they applauded, accepted candles from the march's peacekeepers, and from their porch steps, maintained the candlelight vigil with us. We would like to say, however, that that is not enough. Where were all the other fraternities? Why didn't they make the effort, as Lambda Chi did, to come out of their houses and support us? Isn't violence against women a concern of fraternities? Many incidents of sexual harassment and abuse of women in fraternity houses are reported to the police and the Everywoman's Center every year. Even if you dispute that fact, you can't deny that fraternities at UMass have that reputation. If fraternities are really concerned about changing their image, then why aren't more of them requesting workshops on violence against women from the Everywoman's Center as Alpha Delta Phi has?

Fraternities are known for their charitable contributions to the community. It's time for them to work on the community issue of violence against women.

Dow is a 'specialist' on Central America

Having read Jeff Strohl's letter in last Monday's Collegian, I reacted with both disappointment and revulsion at the fact that one of the newspaper's best columnists had once again been insulted by a reader who was so stunned at having been yanked out of his left-wing dream-world by Peter Dow's competent journalism that he was unable to respond with anything but petty insults. Strohl refers to Dow as "a total idiot" and charges that he is "rarely in control of any facts". In truth, Dow has become rather a specialist on Central America, having written numerous fact filled articles on the subject. His writings have done much to enlighten the University community on the situation in this complex area of the world which is so frequently distorted by the unreasoning anti-Americanism of the left.

Strohl, on the other hand, mentions not a single fact in his letter other than his conviction that the American Left is, "not committed because of ignorance". (It would seem Jeff Strohl and his letter are sufficient evidence to refute that point.) Clearly, Strohl's only objection is to the fact that views other than his own were allowed into print. He is just one of the many leftists who have yet to learn that the First Amendment does not apply only to them.

Review of West Side Story too critical and 'biased'

In response to the critique by Count Ramin Zahed, of West Side Story, the only statement I agree with him is the first. Yes, it did take alot of courage to choose a difficult play like West Side Story to be performed outdoors for a college audience in the 1980s.

All the rest of the comments were biased opinions said in poor taste. Although I am not surprised, the Collegian should be ashamed for publishing such a biased and inaccurate critique. Yes, I realize that everyone is entitled to their own opinion, but I really feel that an opinion as such should have been placed on the opinion page, if published at all. An unbiased critique of our show should have been presented. Therefor people would see that we do have a good show. We, the cast, deserve this. The rehearsals started in February and a lot of dedicated time and energy was put into the show. From the director and his assistant, to the actresses and actors, and the dancers, everyone gave their talents to make the show great. Being in the chorus, I had the opportunity to see each and every character grow stronger with each rehearsal.

The energy coming from the stage, projecting to the audience, was unbelievable, during our first performance in Northeast. We, on stage felt this energy and we are sure the audience did too, because not a single person moved during intermission.(Just a note to remind you that it was extremely cold outside that night). We all really enjoy doing the show and our goal was to make sure the audience enjoyed watching. It was evident that our goal was reached after Monday night's performance.

Sure, this is a biased opinion, but not only is it on the opinion page where it should be, it is a biased opinion that anyone who sees the show would agree with. We, the cast, represent the wonderful talent of UMass. We deserve the kind of critique that will tell everyone what our show is really about.

Role reversal film lacks substance

By DANIEL CALNAN
Collegian Staff

Joyce Hyser stars as "Terry the Guy" and "Terry the Girl." Guess which is which.

Just One Of The Guys has all of the artistic qualities found only in the worst "wiggle and jiggle" T.V. sitcoms. From the opening credits, when the camera slowly pans one entire length of Joyce Hyser's sleeping body, the audience is subjected to an R rated version of Three's Company meets Bosom Buddies.

Hyser plays Terry, an ambitious high school journalist. She dresses in drag in order to write a story from the male perspective, feeling that her femininity has kept her from being taken seriously as a reporter. Terry enrolls in a cross-town school and assumes her new identity. We then get to watch her try to maintain her disguise while going through the daily routine of the average high school male.

Half of this movie takes place in the boys' locker room where we watch Terry pretend to use a urinal, mingle with naked men, and fake being sick to get out of a basketball game (naturally, she was picked to be on the skins team).

The modern American high school is depicted as being similar to a circus side show. There is little or no adult supervision. A muscle-bound bully runs the place. Among the student body are a reptile fanatic who feeds his pet snake mice in the cafeteria, and two sci-fi freaks who seem to speak a language that they make up as they go along. My high school was not like this. Did your gym teacher have weekly surprise jock inspections?

The characters are unrealistic and there's no one to identify with, or even like. Terry's younger brother, played by Billy Jacoby, is quite possibly the most obnoxious movie character I have ever had to watch. His bedroom decor would make even Heff himself blush. Among his more memorable lines is, "The male body needs sex constantly. It's a living hell" Profound, indeed.

Just One Of The Guys provides very few laughs. The story starts off being rather interesting, but then becomes corny and predictable. Maybe if it were cleaned up a bit, it would fare well as a pilot movie for a situation comedy, but it has no right taking up precious space on the silver screen. Take it from me, Just One Of The Guys is just another dud.

"We wanted to beat them so bad", Talbott said. "We owed them." Massachusetts had 10 hits including four-for-four performances by Maher (triple, two RBI).

Stockley gave up just four hits in raising her record to 13-8. UMass led 4-0 after four and 6-0 after seven.

With Rutgers eliminated, it set up a rematch with Temple. UMass outhit the Owls 7-4 but errors did in the Minutewomen on this sunny Saturday Afternoon. Temple took a 1-0 lead in the third on two UMass errors but Umass tied it up in the fifth.

Maher tripled and pitcher Lisa Rever's sacrifice fly tied the game 1-1 and the game went into extra innings.

With two out and a runner on third in the top of the eighth, Temple's Robin Boyce knocked in the winning run. UMass advanced Leigh Petruski to third in the bottom of the eighth but Maher flied to right and Frattaroli lined out hard, to second to end UMass' A-10 tourney run.

Women's track team places fourth in NE's

Loftis, O'Reilly run best times, ECAC's next

BRUNSWICK, ME-- The University of Massachusetts women's track team looked very impressive at the New England Track Championships this past weekend at Bowdoin University , placing fourth out of 27 schools.

Boston Univeristy ran away with the title, finishing with 108.3 total points. The University of Vermont secured second place with a 72 while Northeastern University ended up with 70 points.

Leah Loftis and Maureen O'Reilly led the way for the fourth place finish. Both ran their best ever times in the 800 meters, with Loftis setting the track record with a time of 2:11.76 With that run, Loftis qualified for the ECAC championships, which will be held this coming weekend. O'Reilly came in second with a time of 2:13.58

Kayla Morrison took first place in the 200 meters with a time of 25.91. Barbara Cullinane finished fourth in the 400 meters, scoring a 58.20.

Morrison, Cullinane, Loftis, and Sue Goldstein combined to take first place in the four-by-440 relay, combining for a time of 3:54.92. The Minutewoman also looked sharp in the other relays, taking second place in the four-by-800 (O'Reilly' Sarah Kitchell, Julie Ott, Ruth Thomas) and second place in the four-by-110 (Cullinane, Loftis, Goldstein, Morrison).

Chris Pratt came in fifth in the 5000 meters with a time of 17:34.71 and also qualified for the ECAC's.

"The seniors really came through for us," coach Kalekini Banda said. "This is the highest finish for us in four years."

The fine effort by the Minutewomen vaulted them over Springfield College in the final standings, with UMass scoring a 58 and Springfield getting a 56.

Banda was most particularly pleased with the running of Loftis and O'Reilly. "They weren't supposed to win, but really turned out to be a good surprise," Banda said.

"This was a really tough field. I hope we can do better next year with new recruits," Banda said.

Gazelles go to final

DURHAM, N.H. — The University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team fell to New Hampshire 6-4 in the ECAC championship title game yesterday, here. The Gazelles had defeated James Madison 10-6 on Saturday in the semi-finals. See Tuesday's Collegian for complete game details and summaries.

scored two goals and had two assists. One of his goals was a beauty as he scooped up a loose ball in front of the cage and with his back to the goaltender, shoveled in a shot over his shoulder.

Lukacovic had two goals and an assist with sophomore Tom Carmean getting the same. Ed Boardman and Neal Cunningham had a goal and an assist each. Greg Fisk added a single goal.

For UMass, senior netminder Gerry Moreau made three first period saves before being relieved by Paul McCarty who made nine stops.

Hobart outshot UMass 36-31 and enjoyed a slight 43-42 advantage in ground balls. The Statesmen, ranked second in Division III, won 16-of-28 faceoffs and successfully cleared the ball from its own end 21-of-29 times. On extra-man situations, UMass was up five times, had four shots and scored a goal. Hobart took six shots during six UMass penalties and scored once.

Hobart, before a rowdy crowd at its home field, rode the Gorillas well during the game as UMass enjoyed only marginal clearing success, going 27-of-35. The Gorillas, after facing Post on Tuesday, host Syracuse at home on Friday at 3 p.m. The Orangemen are ranked second in the nation, a point behind John Hopkins.

Minutemen ripped at A-10 tournament

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts pitching allowed 42 runs in two games as the Minutemen made a quick exit out of the Atlantic 10 baseball tournament at West Virginia losing two over the weekend.

UMass dropped the opener to West Virginia 20-4 before being drubbed 22-12 by Penn State on Saturday. UMass, now 20-18, has seven games remaining on its schedule.

The beleagured UMass staff allowed nine home runs in the two games. The Minutemen have let up 72 runs in their last four games.

West Virginia's HO scale park, Hawley Field, was a major cause of the run barrage. The field measured 375 feet to dead center and only 310 feet down the lines.

In the first game, every West Virginia starter had at least one hit and scored a run as the Mountaineers pounded UMass.

West Virginia (24-13) scored its first 11 runs with two outs as six doubles and four homers paved the Mountaineers path. Sophomore firstbaseman John Kuzemchek broke open a fairly close 7-3 game with a two-out grand slam in the fourth inning. Senior rightfielder Bob Bernardo added a grand slam in the seventh before Greg Gilbert chipped in with a two-run short in the eighth.

Starter Jim Knopf (3-4) took the loss for UMass , lasting four innings before giving way to Steve Allen and Matt Subocz. Lefthander Rich Schlieper (8-1) was the winner and went the distance allowing 13 UMass hits.

UMass scored its runs on a Bruce Kingman homer, a Darrin O'Connor two-run shot and Jack Bloise's run-scoring single.

On Saturday, UMass sent five pitchers out against Penn State as the Nittany Lions pounded out 24 hits for the easy victory.

Penn State scored seven in the second, six in the third to rebound from an early 5-0 deficit as UMass started strong.

Senior shortstop Angelo Salustri led UMass with an RBI double in the first and fifth and added a homer in the seventh. Todd Comeau started the scoring for UMass in the first inning by tripling in Kingman (after a school record 43rd walk). Salustri then doubled in Comeau before Steve Messina singled in the shortstops and O'Connor ripped a two-run homer to left.

Starter Bob Kostro, after a scoreless first inning, didn't last the second as Penn State ripped five fits, two for home runs.

UMass, with 15 hits and 11 walks, got within five at 16-11 in the fifth as Kingman lifted a sacrifice fly, Bloise singled in a run and Comeau tied the UMass seasonal RBI record at 41 with a two-run single before Salustri doubled in the big designated hitter.

Firstbaseman Dan Clifford had three hits. He and Salustri had five each in the two-games. Penn State was them eliminated by West Virginia 14-9. Temple also gained the final, beating West Virginia 7-3.

UMass manager Dick Bergquist said, "We have no excuses, this is a terrible park for college baseball but the park didn't beat us."

Knopf, who said he never played in park similiar to West Virginia's credited the Mountaineers after the first game saying, "They hit a lot of pitches and everything was with two outs."

"The thing is, you have to forget about it," UMass pitcher Jeff Jensen said after the Penn State massacre.

Softball plays well but falters at Atlantic 10 championship

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team finished third in the Atlantic 10 championships for the third year in a row this weekend but the Minutewomen were consoled by the fact that they played some of their best softball of the year.

"We played some phenominal ball," junior co-captain Beth Talbott said. "We played better than we have all season. If this is any indication of next year, there will be no stopping us. We finally saw the team we knew we had."

The top-seeded Temple Owls proved to be UMass' downfall this weekend at University Park on the campus of Penn State. Temple beat UMass 3-1 in the first round before Umass came back to knock off Rutgers 6-0 in the consolation bracket on Saturday.

However, Temple sent UMass home with a 2-1 , eighth inning loss that ended UMass' A-10 title hopes. UMass is now 23-21-1 on the year with four games to go.

"I was very proud of them," coach Elaine Sortino said. "They showed so much character. They are finally realizing what they can do."

Second baseman Carol Frattaroli, pitcher Lynn Stockley and utility fielder Cathy Reed (1B/P/DH)were named to the A-10 all-conference team. It was the second straight year for Stockley and Frattaroli.

In the first game of the tourney, UMass tied the game 1-1 in the top of the fifth. Chris Ciepela singled and Emily Bietsch sacrificed her over to second. Sally Maher then stroked a triple to get the RBI and tie the game against Temple.

But a single and two Temple doubles in the sixth sent UMass into the loser's bracket. Stockley gave up seven hits on the day and struck out five.

Maher went two-for-three with a triple and RBI.

Both shortstops were hurt in the first Temple game. Paige Kopcza hurt her ankle sliding into second in the bottom of the sixth.

Kopcza came back on Saturday to play both games despite a swollen ankle.

In the 6-0 consolation game win over Rutgers, UMass gained some revenge over the Knights that had swept UMass twice earlier this year.

Hobart shakes Gorillas, 15-10

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Defending Division III national champions Hobart College broke a 2-2 tie with six unanswered first-period goals and went on the defeat the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team 15-10 at Hobart on Saturday.

UMass dropped to 5-7 with the loss and remained unable to put together two victories in a row. The Gorillas are at C.W. Post on Tuesday afternoon.

The Gorillas hung with the Statesmen for the remainder of the game but couldn't overcome the first period barrage.

UMass scored two early goals as Tom Lukacovic notched his 19th of the season just 1:57 into the game for an early UMass lead. Hobart scored twice before junior Defenseman Tom Aldrich scored his second goal of the season with 4:20 gone to tie the game.

Hobart then went on a tear, scoring six straight to run to an 8-2 lead after the first period. UMass cut the deficit to 10-6 at the half but never go close enough to make a serious run at the Statesmen. For the Gorillas, senior attackman Mike Fiorini

Reds blank Whites 14-0 as defenses dominate

Shelmire finds his position at safety

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Bob Shelmire is finally having some fun.

After two seasons of playing as a reserve fullback and suffering various injuries as a result of practice beatings at the hands of defensive players looking to impress the coaches, Shelmire has found his spot on the University of Massachusetts football team.

After a 1984 season that saw the 6-1, 210 pounder from Lexington gain only 29 yards on six carries, Shelmire was shifted to safety, as coach Bob Stull looked for a way to shore up a pass defense that allowed 2,496 yards and 14 touchdowns.

"It's a hell of a lot better to be hitting people rather then being hit," he said after his Red team pinned a 14-0 loss on the White team in the annual spring game Saturday before 400 at Alumni Stadium.

"At safety, I think I've found a way I can contribute to the team. I wasn't playing as much as I wanted as a fullback so, if I can play more on defense, I'm all for the switch."

Shelmire and his defensive backfield mates, most notably Carlos Silva and Paul Platek, kept the three white team quarterbacks to just seven-of-22 passing for 50 yards. The white defensive backfield, led by Scott Brown, former running back Duckworth Grange, stuffed the red passing attack for just four completions for 18 yards and no touchdowns.

The scoring was limited to a one yard plunge by quarterback Dave Palazzi with 11:10 left in the second quarter and a five yard run by junior-college transfer Al Neri with 12:49 to go in the fourth period. Former soccer player Tony Richardson added both points after.

The UMass quarterbacks went a combined 11-for-40 for 68 yards as the wind swirled through the stadium. Two-year starter Jim Simeone was only three-of-12 for 14 yards. Palazzi directed both scores but completed no passes. Alabama transfer Tim Hecht was continually pressured by the defense and was three-of-seven for 16 yards.

Bright spots included the punting of Jim Tandler (seven kicks for a 36 yard average) and Nick Salmon (seven for a 36 yard average). Neri was the leading rusher with 68 yards, including one 19 yard sprint, with Frank Fay adding 45 yards and a 25-yard jaunt. Mike Keogh had 49 yards.

Defensively, the line of Mike Dwyer and Ed Sullivan continually pressured the white quarterbacks. Both big men had fourth quarter sacks of Bob Williamson.

The Red score in the fourth period was set up by Jim Earle's interception of a Hecht pass at the 34. Earle, another former offensive player, also looked strong in a new position.

"I'm a little disappointed in the offense, but overall we've had a good spring and I'm not going to let this get us down," offensive coordinator Mike Dunbar said.

Stull said that the quarterback situation depended a lot on the game and with no one signal caller impressive, summer practice will decide the issue although it will take some doing to dethrone Simeone, who still has the best arm of the six candidates.

College Students Show New Interest in Apartheid Protests

by Chris Allen

Recent protest against apartheid in South Africa--especially the arrests of picketers at the country's embassy in Washington are arousing renewed interests in the issue among college students. One result is expected to be an increasee in efforts to persuade colleges to get rid of their invesments in companies that do business in South Africa.

Demonstrations, forums, teach-ins and letter-writing campaigns were among the plans for February, March and April among such organizations as the American Committee on Africa, the American Friend Service Committee, Free South Africa, the TransAfrica Forum and the United States Students Association and it's affiliate, the Third World Student Coalition.

Most of the students coordinators for those organizations said they had received a growing number of requests for information about how to start and manage divesture camnpaigns on campuses.

Some campus protest have already taken place. About 1,000 students, faculty members, and community activist staged a three hour demonstration on the steps of the University of California at Berkley in December . Thirty-eight demonstrators were arrested. Students have been trying to get the University of Texas system to sell its stock in companies doing business in South Africa, but the institution's board of regents voted in December to keep the investments.

The increase in student interest in the issue can be traced to the media coverage of Bishop Desmond Tutu's receipt of the Nobel Peace Prize, as well as the demonstrations at the South African Embassy. Since those protests began last November, several hundred people have been arrested, including twenty-two members of congress. TransAfrica officials estimate than more than a thousand people have been arrested in anti-apartheid demonstrations nationwide.

"On the first day of the demonstrations, about six hundred students came to Washington by bus", Cecelie E. Counts, student coordinator for TransAfrica said. "But that number soon dropped 250 and then lower, because it was exam time."

Although the embassy demonstrations have received a good deal of publicity, organizers pointed out that the criticism of apartheid been continuing on many campuses since the late-1960's.

"The unlikely coalitions may be the results of a linking of other issues to the anti-apartheid movement," said the American Committtee on Africa student coordinator, Joshua F. Nesson. One of the student national demonstrations planned for April 20, for example, brought together students protesting unemployment,United States military involvement in Central America, and racism in this country, as well as aphartheid in South Africa.

Since 1980, thirty United States companies have sold their investments in South Africa, including Bethlehem Steel Corporation, according to a recently released survey by the Investor Responsibility Research Center, a not for profit research center based in Washington. However, eleven United States companies began operating in the country since 1980, according to the report.

The report listed two hundred and eighty-four American companies operating in South Africa including fifty-seven of Fortune Magazine's top one hundred corporations. The companies total South African investment at the end of 1983 was 2.3 billion dollars.

Below is a summary of Apartheid protests in the past week...

About one hundred University of Iowa students conducted a sit-in inside the University presidents office Wednesday and said they would not leave until the school sells stock it holds in companies that do business in South Africa.

The Iowa students marched from the rally to the presidents office chanting,"U of I, you can't hide, you are supporting apartheid."

University President James Freedman who said Tuesday the University would not divest, was in Ames attending a State Board of Regents meeting. Sit-in leaders met briefly with Phillip Jones, vice president for student affairs, who repeated the University's position that it would not take a "political stand" on apartheid, South Africa's system of racial separation.

"Those people will not leave the office until you come to us to negotiate the demands," student Genelle Rucker told Jones.

The University of Iowa holds 2.2 million dollars worth of stock in forty-one companies believed to be involved in South African commerce.

In Ithaca, New York sixty-three people were arrested Wednesday for refusing to leave the administration building at Cornell University, where more than one thousand people have been arrested in April

In Eugene, Oregon, police arrested twenty-nine people on trespassing charges Wednesday night after they marched downtown from the University of Oregon campus, entered the Federal Building, and allegedly refused to leave.

At Harvard University, about two-hundred students barricaded the door of a room where a South African diplomat was speaking Thursday until a phalanx of campus police led him through the chanting crowds.

Abe Hoopenstein, consul-general of the South African consulate in New York was escorted to an unmarked car about an hour after he was scheduled to leave. There were no arrests.

Hoopenstein, who was at Harvard to participate in a panel discussion on apartheid on Wednesday night, has been asked to a private reception at noon Thursday by the Conservative Club.

Students gathered at Lowell House dormitory, surrounding the meeting room and barricading the door pledging to keep Hoopenstein inside until midnight.

"We want to demonstrate the parallel with Black South Africans who are imprisoned by officials, to give him a taste of what it is like," junior Sara Jane Holcombe said by telephone interview from the dormitory.

Black activist Angela Davis was among one-hundred and twelve people arrested Thursday in a California anti-apartheid protest,"I think that the reverberations of these demonstrations are being heard around the world," Ms. Davis, who teaches at San Francisco State University, told three hundred and fifty people at a sunrise rally Thursday at the University of California Berkeley campus. "South Africa is going to be free - divestment or not."

Ms. Davis and the others were arrested on charges of obstructing access to the building, campus police said.

Visions of Women's Struggle

Josefina Rodriguez
Family Committee
Chicago, Illinois

Personal Statement:

I have been for the past five years an active member of the Family Committee in support of Puerto Rican Prisoners of War and Political Prisoners. I have been a guest speaker at various Universities in the United States and Puerto Rico. I have participated in many workshops, seminars and conferences addressing the issues concerning the Independence Movement in Puerto Rico and in specific conditions of confinement of Puerto Rican Prisoners of War and Political Prisoners.

Two Visions of the Women Struggle

First, the issue of women struggle is actually given general consideration, as it applies with the same force to all women. Historically the question of the women has always been applied to all women and has not been placed in its correct context: The need to analyze it from a class perspective. Since it has not been understood nor analyzed in this manner, many differences and weakness have been brought to the women's movement. In other words, the oppression of the bourgeoise women is not equivalent to that of a proletariat women. It is crucial that we analyze the women question within the context of class struggle. The women question cannot be dealt from a general approach anymore because each women finds herself in a different class structure, will have different interests and a different vision of the objectives it wants to achieve. The women movement takes on from the beginnning two diametric opposite orientations.

On the one hand, women who are part of the bourgeoise and petty bourgeoise are different from proletariat women in their liberation aspirations exclusively of the context of the social order they live. To assume that they will be sought by equalizing the rights of bourgeoise women to that of the bourgeois men as the only definite solution goes against the liberation of the proletariat women.

On the other hand from a revolutionary perspective, the working women aspiration for liberaton differ eradically from the previous mentioned.

August Bebel explains very well in his book Women and Socialism that:

Supposing that the feminist borgeoise movement imposed all its equal rights with men , it would not be for the abolition of slavery that is found in most marriages, it would not be to stop material dependency that women have with their husband.

The bourgeoise feminist movement is geared to the attainment of higher levels of education, getting a doctorate degree or getting scientific or administrative positions. This will not alter the general sex roles in society

In conjunction the feminist sex roles are impeded: On one hand,it suffers under social dependency of men, it eases some, but does not eliminate the formal equalities of rights before the law and, in the other hand through the economic dependency women generally find themselves anbd in particular proletariat women in the same position as the proletariat men.

What results is that all women without distinction to their class base, as a dominated sex and prejudiced by the masculine world.

Editorial

The following article is a reprint from an earlier NUMMO issue(Nkrumah Lumumba Olinga, Volume 4, Issue 2, September 12, 1977).

Question, do people who use the phrase Third World really understand the origin and connotations it denotes? This article is timely and important because most people of color , progressive and non-progressive,permit others to put them into a numerical digit that negates being the first. It is serious and dangerous for a people to continue to use Third World without investigating its' origin.

Charles Deguale first used the phrase when he had to give a report to the then European power block of the world at that time. Deguale was apologizing for losing the war to Brother Ho Chi Minh in North Vietnam. The great countries of the world at that time were afraid of the outcome of people of color really controlling their own destiny. Back in the early 1950's o.e could see the eventual fight between the Soviet Union and The Republic of China. The struggles of Mao Tse-Tung is a prime example of people of color organizing among themselves to fight against the powers of Europe.

People of color must realize their potential as oppressed people and become critical thinkers. A lot of progressive people think the term Third World is exceptable because of Franz Fenon (The African Psychiatrist who used the phrase in his two major books: The Wretched of the Earth and Black Skin White Mask). People of color soon forgot this brother's contradictions that he eventually admitted to in the Wretched of the Earth. He did not support the oppressed Africans in Algeria until he came to the conclusion that there was a war going on between the Oppressed and the Opressor, and then had to decide like other Freedom Fighters who desire freedom from the common oppressor who they will support, Brother Franz came to his conclusion almost too late, he had treated too many French soldiers for their emotional problems from killing and emotionally defeating the Africans.

People of color must begin to see that language is a large part of their oppression. Today in the United States and other parts of the world oppressed people have not yet realized that they hold a balance of power in the world today. People of color must refuse the phrase Third World. Comments can be directed to NUMMO NEWS 103 New Africa House, Amherst, Massachusetts 01003.

Editorial

This is a rebuttal to the "Slap in the Face" article written by Joel Rabinowitz in the Collegian May 3, 1985. Neither the Third World Caucus, Scera nor the majority of the other senators at the May 1st Senaate meeting intended any harm when we voted to allow a women to speak as a guest speaker who happens to be a member of Palestinian Liberation Organization.

The Third World Caucus voted along with the other senators to allow a speaker with a different perspective to be heard. This so called liberal campus should allow people to speak from various backgrounds, just like the world is run by people of various backgrounds.

Joel, just because the Third World Caucus and Scera were not on your side for one issue out of many does not mean we have abandoned you or your group and it also does not add up to total insensitivity. The vote was not to defend the issue between the Palestinian Liberation Organization and Israel, but to defend freedom of speech on this Campus.

To Whom It May Concern:

As Caribbean students who recently saw the production of "Moon on a Rainbow Shawl", we are disturbed by the direction of the play. The cast members did their best, but their performances where hampered by poor directing.

Ms. Mandle did not have a clue about the Caribbean life-style. Our people were portrayed as very sad and destitute people. Any one who has a modicum of knowledge of Caribbean Culture would have directed this play differently.

No West Indians were casted although several auditioned and one of them is a Theatre major at Smith College. One character was even cut completly from the play.

Was it that the director would have felt threatened by the more knowledgeable West Indians being in the cast and seeing their culture mis-represented through ignorance? We think so and we hope though that Ms. Mandle does lots of research before she directs another play and mis-represents people's cultures again.

To the Readers of Nummo News

NUMMO NEWS, a Third World newspaper, was formed in 1972 as a result of the systematic exclusion of oppressed people from the media in the United States. All one has to do is turn on the radio, television, or read a magazine to further substantiate this. The need for NUMMO NEWS is a result of the distortion of the imagery of Third World people, by the nation's media.

However the system has effectively perversed the nation's media to such an extent that a college campus is only one of the few sanctuaries where the thoughts and perceptions of people from all over the world can be viewed, for the good of all, without being tainted by the ignorance and corruption that plagues much of the outside world. Today Third World people are breaking away from the patterns of yesteryear, an forming a philosophy of their own. This philosophy comes from the souls of a people who represent two thirds of the worlds population. NUMMO is one voice for millions of people who are demanding economic, social and political equality. In defense of this philosophy, NUMMO will not look to others for information concerning ourselves; for if we did, we would continue to be mis informed and highly miseducated.

Those who will read NUMMO will find that it is designed to enrich the intellectual, cultural and socio-political concious of it's readers. For those who do not understand, NUMMO is the pen with which the reader can possibly burst the dark bubble of fantasy, which he or she was brought up to believe. However, only the reader can use what we provide to burst that bubble. For those who nonchalantly discard NUMMO they may later find their bubble burst... but by then, it may not be with a pen.

The staff of NUMMO NEWS will provide for it's readers news and news analysis from the viewpoints and perspectives of Third World people living within, and outside the United States.

Through the course of cultural development interested in eliminating the present state by changing laws and present social and political order of institutions. Majority of women are interested in transforming the roots basis of social and state order in existence toward eliminating not only wage slavery of the proletariat, but also sexual slavery tied broadly to our conditions of property and profits.

Bourgeoise women do not understand the necessity of this radical transformation. Influenced by their privileged position they see the feminist proletariat movement, more advanced, as dangerous aspirations which they would combat. The class conflict which is open between the capitalist and the workers and which becomes more pronounce day by day to pasify our relations, also exist within the feminist movement.

Without a doubt the advised sister have, a series of points of contact in which she can direct the struggle, that is the great proportion that the masculine world is divided into class struggle, but instead has proceeded separately and striking at the same time. This occurs in all the ambits of equality of rights for women with men, within the actual social and political order , this is, the participation of the women in all grounds apt for its energies and capacities for the total equality of civil and political rights with the women. These areas are very important and they will be seen with amplification. Additionally the feminist proletariat world is especially interested in challenging shoulder to shoulder the masculine proletariat world through all its norms and institutions which protect the working women from the physical and moral degeneration and guarantees its faculties of motherhood and educator of their children. The proletariat has together with the masculine comrades of some class structure destroy the struggle for the radical transformation of society with the end of establishing a situation that facilitates complete economic and spiritual independence of both sexes through the corresponding social institutions. Therefore it is not about realizing equality of rights of men and women in the present social and political order which what constitutes the objective of the bourgeoise feminist movement, it is more to eliminate all barriers that make women dependent of men and also dependent of one sex to the other. The solution to the feminist question is the solution to the problem of the racial order.

As this quote from August Babel,"the true liberation of the women will be obtained when we accomplish a complete change in the economic, social and political system". Nevertheless, this process must start now. The task of conscience raising of the working women of her oppressed condition is the responsibility of all concious men, including those that although do not belong to the proletariat class recognize that it is their vanguard and are willing to extent the limits of equality up to its last consequences.

Although the process of women liberation (which is that process past and parcel of general struggle of the working class toward socialism) will be principally in the hands of the working women, because of its exploitaited condition, she yet has the conscience of her historical responsibility. It is for this reason, that it is the task of men and women of conscience to point out to these compaheras the necessity to become invalue in this process,that their task is to look for its place of equality in society. Without a doubt, the only society where there will be a posibility to reach a true emancipation will be in a socialist society.

Women and Organizations

Departing from the first vision that is, in the first place that women's organizations for the struggle is necessary. Nevertheless, we do not believe that we should organize ourselves apart from our companeros and we then limit our struggle exclusively to the rights of men. We should share this struggle with our companeros, equal to equal and we should though organizing that it not only be true to our feminist condition, but also true to our exploited conditions. On the other hand, the men should participate in the struggle for the women, because men will not be free if he keeps his equal in slavery and exploitation.

For that reason we understand the tasks inside our left wing organizations, unions and other organizations that struggle should share all tasks equally between men and women. The left organization has the biggest responsibility, nor only to analyze the question of the women, but also to implement a politic that in its practice demonstrates as an example that men and women can and will live under equality. The reason to realize these tasks and bring forth positions of major responsibilities should not be determined by the sex but by the capacity demonstraded by the militants be them men and women. Only working through this basis we will star work towards reaching the liberation and improvement of all human beings.

Josefina Rodriguez was the Keynote Speaker in the Women in Resistance conference that was held this past weekend at the University's Campus Center.

Noted Black educator and social activist Mary McLeod Bethune is honored and recognized as she appears on a new twenty-two cents stamp. It is the eighth stamp in the Black Heritage series which was issued on March 5th 1985 in Washington, D.C.

Bethune was born in Mayesville, South Carolina, in 1875, the 15th of 17 children born to former slaves. Through the beneficence of a rural school teacher, she was taken out of her family's cotton fields and sent to Scottia Seminar in Concord, North Carolina , to receive an education.

In 1904, with only $1.50 in her pockets, but with great hopes and dreams, she rented a rickety, two story frame building and, with only five students, the Daytona Educational and Industrial Training School for Negro Girls was born. In 1923, the former grade school was merged with Cookman Institute to become Bethune-Cookman College with 600 students, 32 teachers and Mrs. Bethune as president.

In addition to her role as an educator, she was appointed by President Franklin D. Roosevelt to head the Negro Division of the National Youth Administration, the highest goverment job then held by a Black woman. In 1935, Mrs. Bethune founded the National Council of Negro Women, forming a coalition of the leading Black Women Organizations of her days.

NASTY DREADS

by:
Makumba

I cried: Ja my dreads are gone
Echoes in my empty head
Repeated where are my beautiful dreads
Echoes that repeat again and again
Wat's up man
What did you do to your hair
You are not Jamaican
You are Puerto Rican
Puerto Ricans do not wear their hair like that Nothing it's up man, only my hair
PuertoRikans
Jamaikans
Dominikans
Black amerikans
We are all Afrikans!
Echoes that repeated in my head
Everyone should let their hair into natty dreads
And maybe we all be Brothers and Sisters again
Echoes in my head that talk about nasty, dirty dreads
Trying to bring us together again.

He Never Called Again

Oh baby you look so fine
I love you baby
You make love so nice
You make me feel so good and fine
In between the sheets you and I whisper sweet and pretty things
Oh baby you make me feel so g-o-o-d
I love you baby

As the sun rises his pants also rise and he departs
He's leaving for good, she never thought he would
She never knew
She thought he was different, not like the others
It happens to other girls, silly girls, not smart girls like me
She waits for his call
She leaves him a message and gets no answer from him and none from her ovary
Like him, it never calls
She weeps tears as clear as rain
She wishes to see the sight of blood
He bought me a hand made blouse and took me to dinner
These were the prerequisites for getting me into bed
I fell for his game, I guess that I'm sick in the head
Caught by a man or a boy pretending to be a man
He's a kid, a silly macho kid
He cares not for me, but for himself, his lousy self
He never called me again and so
I became another Black teenage mother.

were sold, were arrested quietly on tresspasing charges Thursday after they refused to leave. They had spent the night in the exchange's lobby.

The six sang "We Shall Overcome" as they were put into a police van.

Their action followed a rally of about two-hundred people outside the office Wednesday.

Twenty seven UMass students were freed Thursday from police lock-ups after a sit-in, all part of continuing efforts to end college investment in companies doing business in South Africa.

"Each day that investment continues is a black spot on the University," said Matthew Shakespeare, 19, one of the arrested students at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

A total of thirty-three students were arrested after they refused to leave the office of campus Treasurer Robert Brand on Wednesday.

Coors issue remains open after forum

By VICKI A. SPAGNOLI
Collegian Staff

A forum last night to address the Coors beer controversy at the University of Massachusetts left many issues unresolved after nearly three hours of name-calling and debate.

The forum was organized by the Campus Center Board of Governors "to present both sides' arguments to the student body and to educate the students to the board's reasons for its decision (to recommend that Coors be banned from the CC)," John Hayes, BOG coordinator, said.

Representatives from the Coors company did not speak at the forum because they said the company had already done so at a BOG meeting last month, and because there would not have been adequate time to respond to allegations made by the AFL-CIO at the forum.

Eric Riggle, company spokesman said earlier yesterday Coors representatives preferred speaking to the students from an information table set up on the CC concourse.

"We've got a forum right here where we can disseminate the facts to interested students and interact with them on a more personal basis to offset the half-truths and misconceptions that the union is putting out," he said.

Arthur R. Osborn, president of the Mass AFL-CIO, spoke in favor of the BOG position at the forum.

Beginning with the question, "Where are you Peter Coors?" Osborn told the audience of nearly 100 students he would not debate the BOG decision in the absence of an official Coors representative.

"I came out here on the presumption that it would be a debate with corporate members of Coors," Osborn said. "Coors has insulted the students of UMass by not being present here tonight with me."

Three of the four members of the forum against the BOG decision were members of the Students for Government by Referendum. The group, whose members wrote the referendum to be voted on by the student body this Thursday, said the BOG's decision interferes with the students' constitutional right of free choice.

Neil McCabe, spokesman for the group, said the BOG "overstepped its bounds" in its decision.

"People like Coors beer, and they should have the right to drink it," McCabe said. "When an entity tells the students on this campus that we don't have the choice...it's time for the students to stand up and say no."

John Brigham, a UMass professor of political science, speaking in favor of Coors beer said, "The issue seems to me to be not who makes the choice, but whether or not the right decisions was made."

"The BOG made a decision, they're elected to do that and they have not overstepped its bounds," William Clay, a UMass student who is here from Canada on exchange, said "The board members are acting as a student organization as to what is happening on our campus."

Osborn said the Coors company is against everything the union supports. He said Coors supports non-union policies nation-wide through the Coors family's support of right-wing political organizations like the Heritage Foundation.

Riggle blamed the AFL-CIO for the BOG's decision. He said the AFL-CIO has made allegations against the Coors company since the union was voted out of the Coors brewery in 1977 following a union strike. Riggle said the AFL-CIO has made no attempt in the past eight years to reinstate a union and instead distributes misinformation nationwide about company worker policies.

Number of employment offers to seniors on rise

But, report shows salaries lag

By NANCY A. BUKAR
Collegian Staff

Although the number of job offers to graduating seniors has increased, salary offers lag behind in growth, according to a recent study by the College Placement Council.

The report, which is from data compiled from placement offices at colleges and universities nationwide, was announced last week by Dr. Arthur Hilson, director of placement at the University of Massachusetts. This year's study confirmed that although the economy is stronger now than it had been, salary offers are running only 2 to 3 percent higher-figures that are lower than the inflation rate.

As for majors, scientific fields still net the highest salaries and number of job offers. "There's a good 60 percent of on-campus recruiting that involves computer, engineering and other scientific fields," Hilson said.

Hilson explained that these figures can be "misleading" because liberal arts majors are also in high demand. "Liberal arts majors with concentrations in computers and business are caught in a catch-22 because it's hard to get these classes," he said. There is currently a demand in the job market for liberal arts majors with these specializations, Hilson said.

"Clearly, if you're into computers, let's face it, the market calls for it," Hilson said.

Hilson emphasized the gains made in the recruiting of liberal arts majors. "The most significant gains have been with liberal arts because these people are very flexible. They become viable and productive employees," he said.

"Even in engineering firms, a lot of them can't communicate, can't write. The well-versed person has shown that they can go through the system," Hilson said.

Despite the gains made for graduating liberal arts majors, the best salaries can be found in scientific fields, according to the report. Petroleum engineering tops the salary list, with an average offer to start at $32,920 a year, followed by chemical engineering at $28,499 annually. The third highest salary offers are being made to computer scientists. They can expect an average offer of $24,612 per year, only a 0.2 percent increase in salary offers from last year.

A previous council study conducted in October found that employers planned to hire 8 percent more college graduates than last year.

Nicaraguan official on campus today

Ernesto Cardenal, a priest, poet and high ranking official in the Nicaraguan Sandinista government will deliver a poetry reading today at 1 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium and then answer questions about the current political situation in his country.

The Nicaraguan Minister of Culture, who has been in the U.S. since Friday and spoke at Mt. Holyoke College last night, is coming to the University on an educational and cultural visit, Jeanne Stover, asociate director of public information, said.

Cardenal will speak in Spanish through an interpreter and will be introduced by UMass political science professor Harvey Kline.

Kline said only students in his Inter-American Relations class would be allowed to ask questions, although the event is open to the public.

Cardenal is making appearences here despite the imposition last week by Ronald Reagan of a total U.S. trade embargo on Nicaragua in reaction to that country's alleged military buildup and its ties to Cuba and the Soviet Union.

Cardenal was quoted recently in a New York Times article as saying the "true Kingdom of God is a Communist society and Marxism is the only solution for the world."

Protesters set to fight against Reagan policy

Students at the University of Massachusetts today will join peace activists in selected parts of the nation in answering their "pledge of resistance" protesting President Ronald Reagan's recent trade embargo against Nicaragua.

About 62,000 people nationwide signed pledges last November to protest in their areas if the U.S. "escalated involvement in Central America," according to Jim Sweeney, a national organizer of the movement. Although the national organization has not called on for the enactment of the pledge, Sweeney said, regional protests against the embargo have been called for in New York, Chicago, Washington and throughout Massachusetts, among other areas.

Protestors in western Massachusetts will gather at noon in front of the Federal Building in Springfield for "responsible and respectable civil disobedience" Regina Ryan, a UMass organizer of the protest said. Participants at UMass will rally at the Student Union Building at 9:15 a.m. before marching to Amherst center and then to carpool to Springfield, organizers say.

Sweeney said that the pledge was not being activated nationally because only "certain areas of the country are much more able to activate."

"Boston has the history of the Boston Tea Party and is capable of leading us once again," he said.

Activists in Northampton have planned several events to "put the focus on the embargo," according to Francis Crowe of the American Friends Service Committee. Crowe said she plans to send toothbrushes to Nicaragua to symbolically break the embargo.

"Why should they have to go to the Soviet Union (for merchandise)," she said.

WORLD AND NATIONAL NEWS

Reagan in Spain for sensitive talks

MADRID, Spain (AP) - President Reagan, fresh from urging cheering German students to "create a new Europe," arrived yesterday for talks with Spanish leaders opposed to his Nicaragua policies and pressed by street demonstrators to oust U.S. forces form Spanish soil.

Leaving behind a difficult economic summit and controversy over his visit to a Nazi gravesite in West Germany, Reagan and his wife, Nancy, stepped off Air Force One into brilliant sunlight. They were greeted by King Juan Carlos and Queen Sophia.

The day before, 200,000 anti-American demonstrators marched in Madrid and other Spanish cities to protest the visit. They urged closing four military bases leased from Spain under a 1953 agreement, and pulling Spain out of NATO.

At the airport, the two couples reviewed troops, while, out of their sight and earshot, some 30 Nicaraguans protested the U.S. trade embargo imposed on their country, another major issue on Reagan's agenda here.

With the government refusing demonstration permits on weekdays, protesters urged Madrid residents to shut off their lights and bang pots and pans for 10 minutes during Reagan's first evening in Spain. Only a modest din was heard in the city center at the appointed hour and most lights remained lit.

From the airport, the Reagans left for their residence during this two-day stay, El Pardo Palace, a 63-room estate nine miles northwest of Madrid which served as home and headquarters to Spain's authoritarian ruler Gen. Francisco Franco from 1939 to his death in 1975.

There, Reagan met briefly with Socialist Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez, who favors a reduction in the U.S. military presence and whose foreign ministry has criticized the Nicaragua embargo.

As the two leaders posed for photographs, Gonzalez said, "I hope we will talk about everything."

Assembly to focus on Helsinki violations

OTTAWA (AP) - An assembly of government specialists on human rights from 35 countries opens tomorrow, and Western nations plan to accuse the Soviet Union of violating pledges made in Helsinki a decade ago.

Canada, the United States and all nations of Europe except Albania are represented at the meeting. It was called to review progress in human rights since the 1975 Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe at Helsinki, Finland.

"We're hammering at the theme that human rights is an element in the business of strengthening cooperation," said Harry Jay, Canadian ambassador to the meeting, which is expected to last about six weeks. "The focus of attention on human rights will be very greatly reinforced."

The Ottawa meeting stems from a previous assembly of the same 35 countries in Madrid, which ended contentiously in 1983 soon after a Soviet warplane shot down a South Korean passenger jet, killing all 269 aboard.

That conference directed that "experts" from the participating nations gather to review "respect, in their states, for human rights and fundamental freedoms."

Richard Schifter, U.S. ambassador to the meeting, said he would cite Soviet violations of the Helsinki accords, "not case-by-case, but topic-by-topic" with particular concern for the repression of members of groups established to monitor compliance with the Helsinki provisions.

Schifter said at least 38 Helsinki Watch activists have been jailed or banished in the Soviet Union.

Because any decision at the meeting must be taken by consensus of all 35 countries, there is little prospect for quick or dramatic action.

Mel King among men arrested in protest against apartheid

BOSTON (AP)—Three men who began a sit-in against sale of South African gold coins at the Deak-Perera office in the financial district were arrested yesterday on charges of trespassing.

Fahamisha Brown, coordinator of the Free South Africa movement in Boston reported that after police drove off with the three Deak-Perera employees locked the doors temporarily as three other demonstrators tried to enter.

She identified those arrested as Mel King, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology faculty member who was candidate for mayor of Boston in the last election; Boston TransAfrica President Willie Johnson and a Unitarian minister, the Rev. Jack Mendelsohn.

"There were no problems," she added. "They went peacefully."

Ms. Brown said the three pleaded innocent at arraignment in Boston Municipal Court and had their cases continued to June 4.

The three had entered the Deak-Perera lobby about 11 a.m. The arrests followed about 90 minutes later.

Judge denies retrial request in 'Big Dan' rape

BOSTON (AP) - Four men serving prison terms for taking part in the notorious 1983 gang rape at Big Dan's tavern in New Bedford lost their battle for a new trial yesterday, setting the stage for a legal appeal.

Superior Court Justice William Young, who presided over the six-week trial in 1984, issued a 65-page decision rejecting more than half a dozen arguments raised by the defense in seeking a retrial.

"The next step is automatic," defense attorney David Waxler said. "The motion for a new trial becomes merged with the motion for appeal."

In March 1983, the case drew widespread attention when the victim, whose name was withheld from the public, claimed that she was repeatedly raped on a barroom pool table while onlookers cheered her attackers.

At trial, prosecutors established that four men took part in a sexual assault. The four men, all Portuguese immigrants, were convicted and are now serving prison terms.

Following their conviction, the first remedy available under Massachusetts law was a motion for the trial judge to consider the need for a new trial. In part, the defense argued that prosecutors withheld important information that could have influenced the outcome of the case.

Waxler, reached at his New Bedford office, said Young's action exhausts the possibility of "horizontal appeal."

Challenger comes home safely with live lab animals on board

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) - Laden with scientific treasures from a week of orbital research, Challenger brought seven astronauts and 26 animals down safely in the California desert yesterday - triggering sonic booms that set off burglar alarms as it descended.

The stubby-winged space shuttle touched down on the centerline of a dry lake bed runway at 12:11 p.m. EDT, completing a flight of 2.9 million miles and 109 orbits.

"Challenger, welcome home," called out Mission Control as commander Bob Overmyer brought the shuttle to a stop "Nice job, Bob."

The ship's return touched off twin sonic booms over Los Angeles as it flew over the city and headed eastward to the desert. The booms rattled windows, setting off burglar alarms throughout the area.

Tucked into the Spacelab 3 module in Challenger's cargo bay is enough research data to fill 50,000 volumes of 200 pages each, said Spacelab mission manager Joseph Cremin. There also are miles of film and more than 3 million frames of video data, some of which will be studied by scientists frame by frame, he said.

Two small squirrel monkeys and 24 rats, riding in special cages in Spacelab 3, were to be removed quickly and flown to Cape Canaveral, where they will be examined and tested. The rats will be sacrificed and dissected.

UMass student S.E. Chase: outstanding service.

Women's studies major captures award

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

S.E. Chase, a University of Massachusetts women's studies major, admits her grades this semester are not too hot but there is a good reason why. And that reason, the time she spends fighting violence against women, was rewarded last week when she was presented with an award by the UMass Department of Public Safety.

Best known simply as "Chase," she was recognized with the Citizenship Award for Outstanding Service and Assistance because of her "history of involvement in preventative consciousness raising around the issue of violence against women," said Mary Dumas, head of the UMass sensitive crime unit who nominated Chase.

Dumas was referring to Chase's role in organizing last year's pornography conference and this year's Take Back the Night march, as well as her work as an educator-advocate at the Everywoman's Center and as a member of the women's issues team of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA).

"For the past couple of years she has been a major force in fighting violence against women," said Director of Public Safety Gerald O'Neil. "After talking to Dumas I felt she should be recognized.

"These awards we do not give out very freely and she most certainly deserves it," O'Neil said.

Chase, who said she was "very pleased and very honored" by the award, recalled that her involvement began when she first came to UMass and made friends committed to combatting violence against women and "opened her eyes," she said.

Once her eyes were "open," she decided to "put her energy" into the fight, by joining SCERA and the educator/advocate program from which she runs workshops to raise awareness.

Asked how prevalent violence against women is, Chase replied, "it's astounding how much violence goes on that people don't know about."

"The number of rapes reported on campus are only a fraction of those that occur," she said, citing the Federal Bureau of Investigation statistics that indicates the number of reports should be multiplied by 10 to arrive at an accurate number of incidences.

Chase accuses the media of having a major role in creating and perpetuating such violence because "it pictures women in ways that aren't empowering," she said.

Women are often shown as commodities or as having perfect bodies and violence occurs "when men find out they're not," she said.

Further, Chase believes that violence against women reflects a society in which "men are taught they have the power," so that when "things don't go their way," they exert this power in the form of violence.

Chase suggested that education can be a major force in reducing this violence by "teaching women what they should not have to tolerate" and by showing men how their behavior "perpetuates the submission of women," even though they might not feel they directly abuse them.

After she graduates next semester, Chase plans to stay in the area and work in community education or a rape-crisis center because the issue of violence against women is "something I'm very committed to," she said.

"Chase has incredible energy for combatting women's oppression and her commitment goes beyond her job and is in every aspect of her life," said Heidi Holland, a co-worker at SCERA.

Sports rally set for lunchtime

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

A rally to gain support for a public referendum concerning varsity sports budget cuts is scheduled for 12:15 today on the Student Union Building front steps.

The referendum asks whether the current athletic fee should be used to fund the seven varsity sports slated to be dropped to club status next fall.

The "Save Our Sports" (SOS) rally will protest the May 1984 decision by the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees to eliminate men's and women's tennis, skiing, golf, and wrestling by May 1986.

Senior John Sommerstein, captain of the men's tennis team and rally organizer, said he hopes the rally will gather student support on the referendum question offered Wednesday and Thursday.

The final decision on the sports funding was left to the trustees, Athletic Director Frank McInerney said yesterday.

Sommerstein said 75 student athletes and faculty will speak in support for the continuation of the teams.

The seven sports were cut because officials believed the University could not adequately fund all 28 varsity sports.

"We don't want teams to go out there that can't adequately represent the University," McInerney said. "It's very expensive out there. We used to have one of the highest number of varsity sports in the nation (28). Then, reality set in.

"You can't buy a Cadillac on a Chevrolet budget," he said.

The seven sports were originally cut from varsity status in May 1984 but a trustee ruling extended the changeover "for a period not to exceed the 1986 season," McInerney said.

Wrestling ended its varsity program in March.

Changes with the remaining 21 varsity sports include full scholarship aid for men's football (70 scholarships), men's and women's basketball (15 scholarships each) and men's lacrosse (14 scholarships).

More scholarship aid was also given to the 15 remaining sports.

Concert arrestees enter innocent plea

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

Two men pleaded innocent yesterday to charges of disorderly conduct and assault and battery of a police officer after they and one other student were arrested during the weekend concert in the Southwest Residential area.

The Southwest Area Government concert prompted numerous incidents of vandalism, violence and other problems that kept University of Massachusetts police busy the entire weekend, police said.

Kyler B. Foster, 21, pleaded innocent in Hampshire District Court yesterday to charges of disorderly conduct, assault and battery of a police officer and malicious damage to a police cruiser, a court official said.

Police said Foster injured two officers while they were trying to restrain him at Sunday's concert. The student kicked and dented a police car after police observed him yelling and screaming in the middle of the road.

Police broke Foster's knee with a night stick while trying to control him. One officer was bruised and scratched while the other was kicked in the groin, police said. The officers were treated and released from University Health Services and Foster was treated and released from Cooley Dickinson Hospital. A pre-trial date has been set for May 22.

Also, Kevin Bowe, 24, was arrested and charged with assault and battery to a police officer and disorderly conduct. The former UMass student, now of Northampton, will appear in a pre-trial hearing May 22. Michael J. Barrette, 19, was charged with conduct after police arrested him for fighting at the concert.

Although UMass Police Chief Robert G. Joyce said, "people acted like animals," Program Director Michael D. Jones of the student activities office said the concert was extremely well administered. Jones said the crowd of about 7,000 people were generally well behaved.

"The University is going to have to look at the entire concert picture," Joyce said. "What started out as an event opened up to a free-for-all for anyone coming through."

60 RAs walk out from weekend training

By JEANETTE DeFORGE
Collegian Staff

The 60 Residential Assistants who walked out of a campus wide pre-service training session last weekend have not lost their jobs, according to Housing officials yesterday.

"We are not protesting R.A. training, we are protesting the timing (of the meeting)," said Laura Koumjian, an R.A. from Grayson.

The pre-training session was held during events on campus such as the Gay Pride March, National Woman's Weekend and Southwest Week.

"I'd rather spend my time stopping people from having a keg on my floor," Chris Herreid, aSouthwest R.A. said.

The R.A. session consisted of a morning meeting and small groups followed by teambuilding games, such as egg tosses and musical chairs."

Many R.A.'s said the session would be better as a part of training held in August since during the summer, there is much more excitement and enthusiasm for training.

Another complaint the R.A.'s had was that some were not informed of the meeting until Tuesday.

"It was on the calendar. All staff may not have been informed, though," Mary McCanus, the staff development coordinator of Residential Education East, said.

"The dates were advertised in the RA news letter, which few people read," Ben Brogan, an R.A. in Van Meter, said.

"Several clusters wrote complaint letters to Residential East, but none were answered," Brogan said.

"I received four of them (letters), only one wanted a direct response," McCanus said, "I answered it, but it didn't ask for any other action than cancelling the training."

Students are able to get involved in the planning of the events, but few do, McCanus said. But Herreid asked, "Who has the time?" Herreid later said he was going to start a panel to aid in the planning of future events.

"It was time for the R.A.s to stand up and say we are human beings," Brogan said.

New hope for students with learning disorders

By BETHANNE MOSKOV
Collegian Staff

Students with learning disabilities no longer have to be embarrassed or ashamed to admit their disorders due to the efforts of the University of Massachusetts' Dyslexic Student Organization (DSO).

At a conference held yesterday by the DSO, the problems faced by both dyslexic students and their parents were addressed in a series of meetings and lectures.

Dr. Charles Drake, Headmaster of the Landmark School for dyslexic students located in Prides Crossing was the keynote speaker.

"A dyslexic student may feel frustrated and discouraged at their performance, but it is important for that individual to learn how to be productive within the restraints of their disorder," Drake said.

Drake explained that it is never too late to learn to read properly. The problem is that too many students think they are too old to develop new skills.

Drake also stressed the importance of parental support but said it was necessary to practice "tough love" with children.

"Parents should give only support when it's needed and remove it quickly when the right time comes. This is the best way that a dyslexic student can learn for themselves," Drake said.

Also held at the conference was a panel discussion of representatives from various departments, programs and agencies providing services for students with learning problems. These services include academic advice, peer counseling, testing services, and emotional counseling.

Patrick S. Costello, president of the DSO, said, "The role of the dyslexic student organization is to provide counseling and act as a referal agency for students to get further help."

No harm intended

This is a rebuttal to the "Slap in the Face" letter written by Joel Rabinowitz in Friday's Collegian. Neither the Third World Caucus, SCERA nor the majority of the other senators at the Wednesday's Senate meeting intended any harm when we voted to allow a woman to speak as a guestspeaker who also happens to be a member of the Palestinian Liberation Organization.

The Third World Caucus voted along with other senators to allow a speaker with a different perspective to be heard. This so-called liberal campus should allow people to speak from various backgrounds, just like the world is run by people of various backgrounds.

Rabinowitz, just because the Third World Caucus and SCERA were not on your side for one issue out of many does not mean we have abandoned you or your group and it also does not add up to total insensitivity. The vote was not to defend the issue between the PLO and Israel, but to defend freedom of speech on this campus.

David D. Moore
Third World Caucus

Not a 'slap in face'

I was surprised to find out in Joel Rabinowitz' letter Friday that as a Jewish student I was slapped in the face by the invitation of a PLO member to talk on campus. Well, I am an Israeli student and I wish to congratulate the Everywoman's Center for its invitation.

How many wars with Lebanon, how many years of Israeli occupation in the West bank and Gaza strip do we still have to go through before the Jewish community in the U.S. realizes Israel does not have the monopoly on justice anymore? Yes, the PLO has done terrible actions killing innocent people but what about Israel? What about the air-bombings of civilians in Lebanon? What about shooting demonstrators in the occupied territories? What about blowing up houses, closing universities? And since you have mentioned the "goal" of the PLO to destruct Israel (which unfortunately is probably true for many of the PLO) how do you feel about 18 years of denying national rights to the Palestinian people. Or maybe you are also against inviting Israeli officials to UMass. Somehow I have the feeling this is not the case.

Like it or not, the PLO is still the main representative of the Palestinians. If we ever want to reach a peace agreement it will have be done with them. I only wish the Israeli government and the PLO leadership were faster in realizing this.

Rabinowitz, you want to support Israel, that's fine. Support the peace movement there (and it is quite big), support the anti-racism movement, support the progressive religious people. Our future in the Middle East depends on the success of all these. We do not need any help in saying no to the Arab world; the Israeli government is already doing that enough.

Ortega had no choice

I don't see why Nicaragua is being criticized for seeking or receiving aid from the Soviet Union. Nicaragua has been devastated by the revolution. It cannot rebuild on its own. It needs aid or at least loans from another country. U.S. aid was cut off in 1980 and since then several loans from U.S. banks have been blocked by our government. Trade between the U.S. and Nicaragua has fallen sharply since the revolution and now Reagan has imposed an embargo. This means a loss of $110 million to Nicaragua in imports from the U.S. and $51 million in exports to the U.S. So much for Reagan promoting free trade. So much for Reagan keeping the government's hands out of the private sector. If the U.S. is not going to help—and in fact is going to damage—Nicaragua financially, there is only one country able and willing to help: the Soviet Union. Daniel Ortega did not visit the Soviet Union to "strengthen ties with the Soviet bloc"—he did it to try to keep his country afloat.

Reagan does not mean to honor Nazis

I am rather surprised at the short sightedness displayed by some of the people in opposition to the president's visit to a West German military cemetery. As news of his planned visit was released, opposition arose because some of the graves in that cemetery contained Nazi SS officers. I now find rumors of the President visiting a "Nazi" cemetery to honor "Nazi" officers quite prevalent. I find it rather ludicrous and shallow-minded that people actually believe that the President is honoring Nazi SS officers and their movement. Maybe President Reagan will join the American Nazi Party for re-election in 1988?

Another misconception that I find hard to swallow is that every soldier buried in that cemetery believed in what he was fighting for, or that he supported the holocaust. How many U.S. soldiers do you think supported their efforts and killings in Vietnam despite the fact that they were drafted? Do the people who oppose the President's visit believe that the Germans who opposed the Nazi movement had the same freedom to show their opposition in Nazi Germany as our youth did bacak in the 60s? Many German families saw their sons consumed by the Nazi war machine never to be seen again just as they saw their Jewish friends and neighbors disappear. I think it would be an insult to the German people who opposed the Nazi movement for the President not to at least recognize the German victims of that period. It is one thing to die fighting for something you believe in, but a tragedy to die fighting for something you were opposed to.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Typical

Seven varsity sports are slated to be cut from the University's athletics budget. That decision, which a number of students plan to protest today, was made public last May after classes ended. Like many other administrative decisions at UMass, it was reached with no input from those whom it affects the most.

Officials in Boyden, with help from other administrators and the Board of Trustees, decided there is simply not enough money to keep men's wrestling and men's and women's golf, tennis and skiing on the varsity level while continuing to espouse this institution's sports philosophy.

That philosophy, as put forth by the administration, holds that since varsity sports are part of the overall education experience, they should not be funded unless they can be funded fully, with the kind of training facilities and full-time coaching the seven teams in question lack. It also demands "maintaining respectability and competitiveness" in the NCAA's Division I by buttressing more visible sports like football and basketball.

The organizers of today's "Save Our Sports" rally have a different view. They feel that diversity in the varsity sports opportunities offered to us is more important than NCAA stature and high-minded "educational" outlooks.

Director of Athletics Francis P. McInerney is quick to point out that the fate of the seven teams was discussed for many months by trustees and members of various branches of the administration. "I don't know of anything else that's been so carefully considered," he says.

But when were students ever asked for their opinions on the cuts, or on what the University's athletic philosophy should be? The advisory Athletic Council, on which seven students sit, did not discuss the decision until after it was made.

Perhaps it makes sense, in a budget crunch, to reduce to club level the teams with the fewest participants and spectators. But this issue should be decided by the entire UMass community, with attention paid to this week's campus-wide referendum on the subject—not by administrators who always seem to act first and try to explain later.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the Collegian Board of Editors.

American policy 'undemocratic and immoral'

The Faculty for Peace in Central America urges members of the University community to oppose U.S. policy in Central America—policy we believe to be undemocratic, immoral and not in our national self-interest. Three areas of special concern are U.S. interventions against the popular forces for social reform in El Salvador, Guatemala and Nicaragua.

Reagan's economic embargo against Nicaragua is clearly such an intervention. This action, which will severly damage its economy, amounts not only to an act of war, but is an outrageous example of a large nation bullying a very small one (Nicaragua only has three million people). It is hypocritical: Reagan claims to be defending democracy when he is violating democratic self-determination: a 67 percent majority voted for the Sandinistas in elections in which 10 opposition parties and the opposition press participated. Furthermore, supporting an embargo against Nicaragua only forces them to rely more on countries like the Soviet Union and weakens the possibility for survival of this pluralist mixed economy.

The Reagan administration is waging war against a country many of us believe is embarked on the most important experiment in revolutionary yet democratic social change in the world today, yet it refuses to censure South Africa, a fascist country where the black majority has no right to vote, freedom of press or movement. Why do we ignore the massive violations of human rights of our allies yet exaggerate those of non-aligned governments with socialist leanings? Why does the Reagan administration continue to provide aid to El Salvador and now propose renewing aid to Guatemala, countries where death squads still kill off any opposition, the military increases a deadly air war against civilians, and supposed "democratic" elections force people to vote for the "right" party on pain of death?

Find out more about your government's policies if you really believe in democracy. There is a vigil today at the Springfield Federal Building to protest Reagan's embargo against Nicaragua. Ernesto Cardenal, Nicaraguan Minister of Culture, will read poetry and answer questions today in Bowker Auditorium. Tomorrow there is a teach-in.

Finally, if you agree that the U.S. should cease all acts of aggression against Nicaragua, not merely the embargo, but funding of the contras (to be re-introduced into Congress next week), that the U.S. should sever diplomatic recognition with South Africa until apartheid is abolished, that the U.S. should cease aid to the El Salvador and Guatemalean governments until serious negotiations are begun to address the insurgent demands—please write your Congresspeople to oppose all such Reagan policies and consider signing the Pledge of Resistance against U.S. intervention in Central America.

Dow: 'the best'

Contrary to the mindless left-wing criticisms of his writings, Peter Dow remains the Collegian's best opinion page columnist. His consistently good writing and unwavering clarity set him apart from the bulk of his fellow writers.

Dow also provides a much needed relief from the pathetically worn-out radicalism which dominates so much of the Collegian. While his critics may choose to disagree with his politics, they should acknowledge that his columns are endowed with a vital freshness that is sadly lacking in the columns of his ideological opponents.

Save our sports

Wednesday and Thursday, students on this campus will finally have the opportunity to voice their unanimity when a referenda to Save Our Sports appears. For a year now I have steadfastly fought against the Athletic Department's decision to cut seven varsity sports teams: men's and women's tennis; men's and women's golf, men's and women's skiing; and men's wrestling. Their decision shocked many student athletes, parents, alumni and faculty. Indeed, the public outcry became so fervent against the timing of the move (during finals, after the Collegian stopped printing) and against the disregard for diversity that the board of trustees subsequently reinstated the teams for a period "not to exceed two years." This temporary maneuver has slackened the opposition somewhat, but I implore, the time to fight is now.

The Athletic Department and its director, Frank McInerny, have claimed that the cuts were made in order to avoid future cuts. The facts say otherwise. UMass has a $1.5 million athletic budget, primarily funded by the student athletic fee (which incidentally is increasing $25 per student next year). Furthermore, the University has hired an experienced professional to obtain funds for intercollegiate athletics. Rumors have it that $300,000-$500,000 a year is not an unrealistic goal. Unbelievably then, at a time when funding is on the rise, the Athletic Department is curtailing.

Yet another inconsistency is detected by the choice of sports. Three of them: tennis, golf and skiing can be enjoyed long after graduation. Is not the role of a public university to promote diversity and opportunity as such? Cutting one quarter (seven of 28) of the varsity sports teams runs contrary to that admirable quality.

I invite all students to join a rally on the Student Union steps at 12:15 p.m. on Tuesday May 7th. Help publicize the referenda, fight for students' rights, and refuse to let sports teams with a combined budget of a mere $75,000 be eliminated.

Math department moves 'don't make sense'

It has recently come to my attention that the math department is in the process of making cuts in pre-calculus programs for the upcoming academic year and, incidentally, allowing one of the finest instructors with whom it has been my pleasure to study, to depart.

I feel strongly as a tax payer as well as a graduating senior at the University of Massachusetts that these cuts in math department programs in the name of funding for research bring into serious question the math department's hierarchy of committment. Although I fully understand and support the need for research and further realize that research can generate outside capital, I nevertheless feel very strongly that a university's primary responsibility is to straight-forward classroom instruction. Without this the university seriously jeopardizes its ability to produce future researchers, be they involved in math or some other field. I also feel that drastic cuts in the pre-calculus program give a strong message to non-traditional students and non-math majors such as myself. At age 38 I returned to college, with the goal of completing my BA degree so that I could continue on in an MBA program. It had been a number of years since I had had any math. Your Math 106-107 sequence gave me the background I needed to continue on into Calculus 120. I could not have managed to acquire sufficient background had I been forced to take Math 104, the one semester offering which combines 106 and 107. I needed more than a fast review. My math experience at UMass has been highly successful, and I have been admitted to a competitive MBA program. Your message to prospective UMass students would now seem to be "math deficient students need not apply."

But the problem does not end with the question of departmental priorities—money for the classroom. There is yet another issue at stake, and that is the issue of how we choose to recognize and reward those few truly gifted teachers. Robert Cooley is an outstanding instructor. It has been my experience, both in my own education and that of my three children, that a school system is very lucky if one out of five instructors is truly excellent. This is not to suggest that there are not a lot of good teachers in this world—there are—but rather to suggest that there are very few top notch, truly committed people—the cream of the crop. Cooley is, in my opinion, one of these few rare individuals who fit into this category. He is among the most outstanding.

The math department's current moves do not make sense. To cut a course area that is generally over-subscribed and clearly meets a strong need and at the same time to cut a from the staff one of the outstanding instructors exhibits poor judgment. The math department should look closely at its new chosen direction. Clearly it has re-ordered its priorities so that classroom education and a chance for all students comes second to research and the support of that elite group. I urge you to reconsider both your decision to cut your pre-calculus programs next year and your decision to release Cooley. The math department is establishing a most unfortunate precedent which may have grave consequences. The University community and the math department ultimately stand to lose far more by these actions than by cuts in their research budget.

Enterprise zones won't help urban areas

By NORMAN HILL
Special to the Collegian

President Reagan's only idea about how to help America's depressed urban and rural areas is to endorse the creation of "enterprise zones," as set forth in the 1983 bill co-authored by Reps. Jack Kemp (R-N.Y.) and Robert Garcia (D-N.Y.), to be introduced again in the present Congress.

Under the plan the federal government would offer tax cuts: new companies in a zone would be exempted from all capital-gains taxes and 75% of corporate income taxes. Their workers would also receive individual income tax credits.

The impulse behind the enterprise zone is good: to create attractive opportunities for businesses to open and create jobs in areas where they wouldn't normally want to operate. It is a plan that appeals to the pragmatic desire to help people help themselves and their communities, by eliminating the conditions that discourage private initiative. It is this type of pragmatic populism that makes Republican Jack Kemp well-liked.

The president of the National Federation of Idependent Business, John Sloan, says that the NFIB surveyed small business owners in 85 cities and "found taxes to be among the least of the problems for urban entrepeneurs. Far more important, especially for the labor-intensive retail and service concerns that zones must attract if they are to cut unemployment significantly, include access to capital and a qualified labor pool, immediate market viability, adequate police protection, and affordable insurance." Sloan continues: "Enterprise zones spring from a fundamentally flawed concept. Tax breaks are not an irresistible stimulus to business startups because most new companies don't make enough in the 'hostile' environments dubbed 'enterprise zones' to be able to use the incentives offered."

The problems with the plan are several. First, the plan would mainly encourage already existing companies-companies large enough to see a real advantage in the tax cut-simply to relocate, probably bringing their employees with them. It wouldn't encourage new businesses, or create new jobs, or help out the businesses and workers in the neighborhood.

Another problem is that there are a great many more than 75, or 300, depressed urban and rural areas. Cities and states already see the need to compete with each other for the "advantage" of not seeing businesses move.

Enterprise zones already put in place by states and cities have a poor record. A 1983 study by the Sabre Foundation, which is a strong advocate of the idea, tries to put the best light on it, but even its own figures show that the "average" zone saw 1.9 businesses start up and 1.1 businesses expand or stay put-and 29 percent of the new companies found in the study are located in one building! Why zone advocates are impressed with this is hard to explain.

Problems of unemployment and urban blight are complex-and the sooner we all realize that there is no quick fix, the sooner we'll be able to carry out the mix of sensible public and private initiatives-job training, job creation, tenant-owned housing, education, church leadership, low interest loans for new businesses-necessary to fight poverty in our cities and towns.

Editorial

By SAL ASSAD
Special to the Collegian

These days the Reagan administration is engaged in all kinds of attempts to fabricate a so called threat where it does not exist. Taking advantage of all kinds of propaganda techniques of disinformation, lies, jingoism, and outright hypocrisy, all in the best tradition of the Ronnie Horror Show, all consistent with a man who calls the Napalm Bombing of Vietnam a noble thing.

In the process Reagan is engaged in more than just lies. He is also spending through all kinds of legal and illegal channels, millions of dollars on a very bloody campaign waged by thousands of mercenaries, or the ex members of the late Dictator Somoza. This was condemned by the World Court, opposed by the Congress, and unpopular in this country, is costing the Nicaraguan economy hundreds of millions of dollars, and pushing them further and further towards the Soviet Union, while being a venture beyond immoral, a Sadistic exercise of machoism!

In the process, thousands upon thousands of Nicaraguan women have been gang raped by the Contras, thousands upon thousands of civilians have been killed or tortured, all under the disguise of some so-called crusade against "international communism."

Ronald Reagan, (especially with his hated visit to the Bitburg cemetery, where he laid flowers upon the tombs of SS officers), has proven that he is willing to sacrifice all principles to his warped ends. In the case of Nicaragua, it is more than principles which are being sacrificed. It is lives. By stepping in the direction of outright Vietnam type intervention against the people of Nicaragua, he will be sacrificing more than his honor, something that he has proved he does not have.

DOONESBURY By Garry Trudeau

SO WHAT'D YOU DO WHEN YOU GOT HOME, JIMBO? DID YOU GO BACK TO SCHOOL?
ARE YOU KIDDING, MAN? VIETNAM WAS ALL THE EDUCATION I COULD HANDLE! HOW'S THAT?
I LEARNED TO SURVIVE, MAN. I ALSO LEARNED TO KILL, TO GET WIRED AND TO FORGET. HELL, I EVEN LEARNED TO COUNT! YOU DID?
SURE, MAN. ONE, TWO, FOUR, SEVEN, TWELVE. HEY! YOU DID BODY COUNTS, TOO?

GORDY By Gorde

C'MON, GORDY, TALK TO ME. BIG DEAL IF I'M PRODUCING LIONEL RICHIE'S NEXT ALBUM THIS SUMMER!
DON'T BE LIKE THIS, MAN. I KNOW YOU'RE SICK WITH ENVY. I CAN'T HELP IT IF I'M "MUSICALLY GIFTED."
DOES IT REALLY MATTER THAT I'M ONLY NINETEEN AND MAKING THIRTY-THOUSAND DOLLARS? C'MON, GORD-MAN, SAY SOMETHING!
IT'S A CRUMMY SUMMER JOB, MAN!!!
CRUMMY SUMMER JOB?

Attention all artists...

If you know how to draw and think you have a sense of humor, the Collegian is accepting submissions for daily comic strips for next fall. Entries should be in black ink on plain white paper or posterboard; 10 strips minimum should be submitted to Anne McCrory in the newsroom, 113 Campus Center, by May 15. All types of strips encouraged. Lend your humor and artistic talent to the pages of New England's largest college daily today!

WEATHER

Today—Chance of showers, mainly in the morning, then partly cloudy and windy. Highs 60 to 65.
Tonight—Clearing and cool. Lows from the 30s to the mid 40s with a chance of frost inland.
Wednesday—Mostly sunny, highs 60 to 65.

CLEAR SUNNING FOR OILY SKIN FROM CLINIQUE

When oily skin goes sunning, it's open to two kinds of danger: breakouts if you use an oily sun lotion, and burns, damage and aging effects if you go without.
Clinique has the solution: Oil-Free Sun Block. Water-clear, greaseless, it allows a gradual tan without the aging damage of sun or the disturbance of added oil.
To find out if it's right for you, consult the Clinique Computer at any Clinique counter.

linebacker where depth is still a question. The freshman quarterbacks, depending on how they look in summer drills, could also contribute.

The receiver positions, if Saturday is any indication, could still be a problem.

Barnwell is the leading returning receiver followed by flanker John Crowley, who caught only 19 passes. After Crowley, no player caught more than 10 passes.

Junior college transfer Lonnie Brock, showed his outstanding speed in getting open, but was either overthrown or hit while catching the ball. He didn't catch a pass on Saturday.

Ray Jackson, a tailback, and Jack Burrill, a fullback, caught two passes each. Among the wide outs, only Bart Fuller, Dino Maye and Tom Cioppa caught passes. The Minutemen's freshmen receivers could make an immediate impact, especially if Stull throws the ball as much as he wants to. UMass switched to a Barnwell oriented attack late season as the passing game grew increasingly ineffective, but Stull made his reputation on coaching the passing game and undoubtedly will want to air his attack out, if he has the players.

MINUTEMAN MUTTERINGS: Paul Platek, a senior defensive back, and Barnwell, a senior tailback, were elected co-captains for the upcoming season. Brock looked sharp on kickoff returns, running back two kicks for 30 yards. The kicking situation, with the graduation of George Papoutsidis, is also a question. Former soccer player Tony Richardson booted two PAT's, but missed badly on a field goal. Papoutsidis is trying out with both the Giants and Patriots in the coming weeks.

Red-hot Sacred Heart challenges softball; baseball, lax on the road

By GERRY deSIMAS and
PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

So you think you have seen some good softball pitchers before? Look out for Sacred Heart University's Debbie Tidy, whose Pioneers take on the University of Massachusetts softball team today in a 2:30 doubleheader at NOPE.

The men's lacrosse team is also in action this afternoon in a 3:30 p.m. game with C.W. Post. The baseball team is at Dartmouth.

Check out these numbers on Tidy. She is 24-1 this year and Sacred Heart is 43-3. Tidy has struck out 168, has a 0.00 ERA, four no-hitters and two perfect games to her credit this season.

Last year, the sophomore from British Columbia, Canada was 30-4, 0.16 ERA, 348 K's, with six perfect games, and 11 no-hitters. Sacred Heart, headed to its fourth straight NCAA Division II tournament Friday, took third last year.

Also on the Pioneer roster is a player from Vancouver, Canada and one from Johannesburg, South Africa.

Massachusetts then faces quite a challenge as it attempts to finish its season on a wining note. UMass 23-22-1, has today's games with the Pioneers and two with Adelphi on Saturday left on the schedule.

Shortshop Paige Kopcza (.419) is questionable with a swollen ankle. Backup Alisa Fila, is out with a hurt leg. If Kopcza can't go, Carol Frattaroli will move to short and Tina Morello will move to second.

All-conference hurler Lynn Stockley (14-8, 0.41 ERA, 110 K's) will throw in the opener. Stockley threw the only shutout of last weekend's Atlantic 10 tourney, a 6-0 win over Rutgers. Lisa Rever (7-7, 0.741 is the probable second game starter.

"I'm really looking foward to this week," coach Elaine Sortino said. "The kids are finally realizing what they are capable of."

The men's lacrosse team will travel to Long Island this afternoon to face quickly fading C.W. Post.

Post, once ranked fifth in the nation, has slumped to 11-3 after a 12-10 loss to lightly-regarded Penn State. UMass is 5-7 and is coming off a 15-10 loss to the defending Division III national champions Hobart.

UMass beat Post 18-8 last season as Ken Freeman had three goals and two assists. UMass moved the ball well against Post last season and should be able to again this year.

"They're a fast break type of team, like we are," senior attackman Mike Fiorini said. "I think we'll be able to move the ball upfield against them. We're capable fo beating them again."

UMass is hampered by injuries to leading scorer (19 goals, 31 assists for 50 points) Tom Carmean (leg) and to co-captain Karl Hatton (shoulder). Toni Lukacovic continues to lead the team in goals with 21.

The UMass baseball team, still smarting from two poundings in the Atlantic 10 tournament, will be looking to get on the winning track when they travel to Hanover, N.H. to face Darmouth in a doubleheader today.

The Minutemen, losers of four straight, have given up 72 runs in those four losses. The two pitchers who started the tournament games, Jim Knopf and Bob Kostro, will start against the 15-18 Big Green.

UM is slowed by injuries to shortstop Augelo Salustri (ankle), designated hitter Todd Comeau (ankle), outfielder Bruce Kingman (foot), and second baseman Jack Bloise (leg).

UMass is still hitting .318 as a team, led by Comeau's .374 with 41 RBI. The pitching staff's earned run average has risen to 5.86.

"We're terribly disappointed in the pitching staff," UM manager Dick Bergquist said. "The main job at Dartmouth will be to get people out."

UM was a 6-5 loser to Dartmouth in the final game last season. "We'd sure like to get back on the winning track and forget about the past week," Bergquist said. "It's been like a nightmare."

Junior-college forward signs, BU guard possible transfer

The University of Massachusetts basketball team signed 6-7 forward Ben Jones of Gainsville (GA) junior college to letter-of-intent early yesterday.

Jones, the fifth player to sign with UMass, averaged 21 points and 13 rebounds for Albany (GA) High before scoring 18 points-per-game and gathering in nine rebounds for Gainsville. He also averaged three assists.

Jones led Gainsville to an 18-8 record and will enter UMass as a junior, eligible to play immediately.

"Ben has very good skills inside as well as from the perimeter," UM coach Ron Gerlufsen said. "He can hit the 15-to-18 footer and gives us good depth in the frontcourt."

Gerlufsen also said he is considering taking Boston University guard Jim Christian as a transfer. Christian, a 6-3 sophomore who can play either guard position, beat UMass in triple-overtime last season with a 22-footer. The decision will be made contingent on Gerlufsen's pursuit of a point guard prospect. He is currently trying to sign Fork Union Military Academy's guard or place Springfield's Chris Baily in that school before getting him next season.

Women's lacrosse falls again to New Hampshire in ECAC

Fall to 9-3 despite out-shooting Wildcats

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Staff

Following Saturday's preliminary round 10-6 victory over James Madison University, the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team dropped a 6-4 decision to the University of New Hampshire in the championship game Sunday.

The loss left the Gazelles with a 9-3 mark for 1985 and extinguished any hopes the team had for receiving a berth in the NCAA tournament.

Having disposed of James Madison, UMass moved into a contest it awaited with open arms. Aside from the NCAA tourney possibilities, the Gazelles hoped to avenge a 10-9 sudden death loss to UNH earlier in the season. That UNH victory ended a six game UMass winning streak.

"We played really well against James Madison but it was the kind of game that you go into knowing you are going to win so even during the JM game we were thinking about UNH," said UMass forward Bunny Forbes.

"It was just a matter of going out and working hard against James Madison but all the time having UNH in the back of our minds. I think we might have even been saving a little something from the first game for UNH," added Forbes.

UMass got its first goal against UNH from Liz Schueler. Senior Pam Moryl scored UMass' second and third goals. Ginny Armstrong tallied the Gazelle's fourth and final score on a strong individual effort.

UNH got goals from Sarah Kittredge (two), Karen Geromini, Sandy VanderHeyden, Pauline Collins, and Suzie Haynes.

While UNH jumped out to the lead and held a 3-1 edge at halftime, the Gazelles managed to come out stronger in the second half, playing UNH to a 3-3 tie. Umass managed to out-shoot UNH by a two-to-one ratio but the problem lay in where those shots were going.

"We ran our offense well and we deninitely slowed down their normal pace of attack," said UMass assistant coach Pauline Keener. "But we just were not able to hit the holes in the cage. We had plenty of opportunities and we were taking good high-percentage shots but putting them in the right places."

Keener credited UMass goalie Debbie DeJesus' preformance against UNH saying "She gave us an excellent effort out there in the net." DeJesus, a senior co-captain, saved nine UNH shots. UNH keeper Robin Balducci saved 11 UMass shots.

"The loss was a disappointment," Forbes said. "The defense played great, the midfielders got the turnovers, and it was just a matter of shots with the attack. Sometimes it goes your way and sometimes not."

Prior to the ECAC's, UMass was ranked sixth in the nation. Winning the tournament would have seen UNH, the number five team in the country fall in the polls leaving UMass and the University of Virginia (number four) to vie for the final bid in the four team NCAA championships.

Spring football notebook

Minutemen showing promise

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Offensively, the coaches were hoping for a little bit more of a rout. There was never any question that the red team, made up mostly of starters, was in control of the annual University of Massachusetts spring football game on Saturday but a few more touchdowns would've been nice.

"It wasn't the prettiest we've looked offensively," assistant coach Mike Dunbar said. "For most of the spring we've looked better. I'm just settling into my second year as is coach (Bob) Stull. Last season we had our ideas and philosophies and the returning coaches had theirs. I think we're finally on the same wave length."

The Minutemen totaled only 256 yards (both teams) in the game and registered only 15 first downs. The swirling wind in Alumni Stadium held the six quarterbacks that saw action to just 68 yards passing and 11 completions. The Red defense stuffed the White offense, allowing only 61 total yards, a mere 11 on the ground for an average of 1.08 per play.

UMass, after two straight 3-8 seasons, will be a better team come September. The running attack will be considerably more flexible as junior-college transfer Al Neri can play fullback and free up Frank Fay (who looked impressive despite recent injuries) with some blocks. Last season's leading rusher, George Barnwell, missed the game with a leg injury after a couple of 100 yard games in previous scrimmages.

Barnwell's return will give the running back corps a big play threat and mean Saturday's rushers will provide some depth for the first time in a few seasons.

UMass still must hope the highly-touted freshmen recruiting class can fill gaps on the offensive line and at

Coors vote held today

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

A referendum of three questions will be held today to gather student reaction to the University of Massachusetts Campus Center Board of Governer's recommendation to stop the sale of Coors beer in the Bluewall and administration plans to reduce seven varsity sports to club status and students willingness to pay $2 on next semester's bill to aid the plight of starving people in the United States and Africa.

The first question will ask, "Has the Campus Center Board of Governers overstepped it's bounds by calling for the banning of the sale of Coors beer in the Campus Center and Student Union buildings? The second question asks, "do you feel that the Athletic fee (which was increased this year) should be used for funding the above mentioned seven varsity sports teams, so that they will not be demoted to club status starting with the 1987 acedemic year?" This will be accompanied by a statement listing the seven sports to be cut: mens and womens tennis, skiing, golf, and men's wrestling.

The third question asked, would you be willing to pay a fee of $2 on your next semester bill, $1 of which would go to relieve the plight of the starving in the United States, and the second dollar would be given to aid the plight of those affected by famine in Africa?"

The BOG recommended to halt the sale of Coors on campus citing the company's alleged anti-union activities, and discriminatory hiring practices and ties to right-wing political organizations.

William Harris, director of Campus Center administration said he would follow the board's recommendation and sell out the inventory.

The UMass Board of Trustees voted last May to reduce the seven sports to club status, and the trustees agreed to fund the sports through the 1986 season. These cuts save the athletic department about $75,000 according to Al Rufe, assistant athletic director.

The polls will be located at Franklin Dining Commons for Orchard Hill and Central Area residents, Worcester Dining Commons for Northeast Area residents, and Berkshire and Hampshire Dining Commons for Southwest area residents. All off-campus and Greek area residents may vote at the Hatch in the Student Union Building.

BOG member Dan O'Hare said the banning of Coors is not a moral issue, but is being done in the interests of unions which the Coors company has opposed in the past.

Knapp to suggest trustees revise investment policy

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp announced yesterday that he will recommend that the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees revise the wording of the University's investment policy to prohibit investment in any company or lending institution doing business in or with South Africa.

Knapp's announcement is the result of a deadline set by the Commission on South African Investments. The commission, formed as a result of demands made when students took over Vice Chancellor Dennis Madson's office April 1, was charged with determining if University stock holdings violated the University investment policy.

Upon discovering that the University held stock in businesses operating in South Africa, the group requested that Knapp act by May 8 to divest these stock holdings.

The commission also recommended tht the University investment policy be revised to include not only "businesses operating in or with South Africa," but businesses whose subsidiaries or affiliates do business in or with South Africa.

Members of the commission said they were pleased that the proposal went through, but expressed disappointment that the short-term proposals calling for immediate divestment were not addressed.

However, Esther Terry, an associate professor of Afro-American studies and a member of the commission, said that "if the recommendation is passed there will be fewer holes to slip through."

In an announcement supported by the entire commission and released last night by commission member Chris Alibrandi, the group states that:

"We applaud the strong support President Knapp has given to our unanimous recommendation of the change in the University's investment policy, and urge the trustees to accept the president's recommended changes in all haste.

"However, we regret that the president has not chosen to divest from the four companies which we have again unanimously identified as in violation of current university divestment policy. We urge speedy action to divest from the Foxboro Company, the Procter & Gamble Corporation, Banker's Trust and the J.P. Morgan and Company Corporation. We also urge the enactment of our recommended improvements in the monitoring procedures of the investment policies."

Knapp's announcement said that if the board adopts the recommendation at their May 28 meeting, "the University treasurer will review the University's investment portfolio and make divestments as necessary, to ensure consistency with the intentions.

Report says women's funding is down

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

The National Council for Research on Women announced last week the results of a study which found that federal funding for research on issues relating to women has sharply declined since 1981.

University of Massachusetts professors see this information as having an indirect effect on the Women's Studies Program and affecting research on women throughout all university communities.

Marian Chamberlain, president of the council, comprised of 47 centers and organizations that conduct research, policy analysis, and educational programs of concern to women, said the study began last year when the council held its annual meeting at which "the group became alarmed at the decline in funding for women's issues," she said.

Among the findings released last week:

•From 1981 to 1983 the National Endowment for the Humanities cut research on women by more than 50 percent, from 1.9 million to $876,000.

•The National Institute on Education cut research by more than 90 percent, from $3.4 million to $168,000.

•The National Science Foundation cut research by 30 percent, from $2.3 million to $1.4 million.

The council also documented severe cuts in the study of women's issues by the U.S. Labor Department's Training and Employment Administration, the Labor Department's Women's Bureau, the National Institute of Mental Health, the Department of Defense and the Justice Department.

According to Chamberlain, much of the research is crucial to clarifying such issues as the feminization of poverty, comparable worth, the gender gap, equity in

Senate speaker arrested at meeting

By RITA MURPHY and SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

The speaker of the University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate was arrested during last night's meeting and charged in connection with last week's divestment protest.

John L. Ruddock III, 21, from Brooklyn, New York was taken to the UMass Department of Public Safety at the start of the senate meeting and was later released after paying a $50 bail, according to his lawyer Charles DiMare, of UMass Legal Services Office.

Police refused to comment on the charges against Ruddock. DiMare also refused comment on the charges except to say "he was fined $200 for a felony."

After "extensive negotiations with the Clerk of Court," bail was reduced to $50, DiMare said.

Ruddock said the police "could have shown better judgment by arresting him before the senate meeting rather than after it had started.

According to DiMare, a warrant was issued yesterday for Ruddock's arrest in connection with last week's South African divestment protest in which 32 UMass students were arrested and one non-student was arrested.

Ruddock was not arrested last week.

"I think it's particulary outrageous that they would arrest the speaker of the senate on the senate floor and then post

WORLD AND NATIONAL NEWS

Workers, residents clash in S. Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) - Migrant workers and residents of a black township battled with hatchets, knives and stones on a 24-hour rampage that left 11 blacks dead, authorities said yesterday.

Police fired rubber bullets and tear gas to restore order, and roadblocks sealed off the township.

The fighting in Tsakane township east of Johannesburg pitted migrant men, enraged by the burning of their beer hall, against permanent residents of the township, witnesses said. The township was described as quiet late yesterday after the estimated 1,800 migrant workers were escorted out of the township by a dozen armored vehicles.

Streets were littered with glass from windows smashed in hundreds of homes during the fighting that started Tuesday night and ended yesterday.

Elsewhere, police reported rioting in several black townships, mainly in the eastern Cape province, and controversy raged over the death of a prominent trade union activist of head injuries soon after his release from police detention.

Police described the Tsakane battle as a fight among tribal factions, saying most of those killed were from the Xhosa tribe based in the south of the country.

But residents said the fighting broke out over the migrants' anger at local youths who burned their beer hall to protest white rule. Beer halls, which provide revenue for the white-government's local black councils, have been frequent targets of rioters attacks in recent months.

Charles Marx, chief director of black affairs for the eastern Johannesburg region, said there were 1,800 migrants living in hostels and 45,000 permanent residents of Tsakane, 14 miles east of Johannesburg.

In the eastern Cape province, police supported by army units moved into two black townships outside Port Elizabeth.

Cease-fire may take hold in Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)— Christian and Moslem militiamen fought a string of battles in downtown Beirut yesterday, but a cease-fire appeared to be taking hold after 11 days of fighting.

Police reported three militiamen and a civilian were wounded yesterday. Since April 28, 77 people, mostly civilians, have been killed and 400 wounded, police said. Thirty-eight of those killed were slain Tuesday in the heaviest shelling in Beirut in nearly a year.

The cease-fire was shattered hours after it was declared at sundown Tuesday. Artillery and gun battles broke out during the night, but tapered off yesterday into exchanges of machine-gun and rifle fire.

The relative lull gave civilians, who have been huddling in basements and bomb shelters, a chance to get out to buy food.

GOP rejects proposals

WASHINGTON (AP)— The Republican-controlled Senate yesterday rejected, 63-35, a Democratic-sponsored plan to trim $44.7 billion from the federal deficit in 1986 through a combination of tax increases and spending restraints, including a six-month delay of Social Security benefit increase.

The proposal, by Sens. Lawton Chiles, D-Fla., and Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., was one of two Democratic budget packages offered as an alternative to the besieged budget compromise reached between President Reagan and Senate GOP leaders.

The Senate then turned to the second Democratic offering, a proposal by Senate Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., that would save about the same amount of money and would also include a tax increase—but would not touch Social Security cost-of-living increases scheduled for next January.

Maintenence of animals is recently improved at UMass

By JONATHAN PERRY
Collegian Correspondent

ANIMAL RESEARCH

Editor's Note: This is part two of a three part series examining the issues of animal research at the University of Massachusetts. Portions of interviews are from last December.

Judging from all reports gathered, including first hand tours of laboratory facilities in Paige Laboratory (department of Veterinary and Animal Sciences) and Tobin Hall, UMass has made advances over the past several years to improve the problem of animal maintenance.

Mike Weinburg, assistant vice chancellor of research at UMass said "there is a heightened consciousness on campus to maintain animals properly."

The first steps taken towards a rejuvenation of laboratory facilities resulted from a $5,000 fine levied against UMass by the United States Department of Agriculture for inadequate maintenance facilities. Although the inspection of the premises took place in 1982, UMass was not notified of the violations until a year later. The major infraction was inadequate caging.

Weinburg said the USDA "told us to keep the money to improve the animal facilities. We added an additional $7,000 to the original fine to buy new caging." This money was extracted from the Trust Fund Interest Account, a fund within the UMass president's office in Boston used for emergency purposes.

The old caging was deemed inadequate because it was made of galvanized iron, and rusted due to the acidity in the animals' urine, Weinburg said. Most of these cages had been purchased in the 1960s, although some "had been here 35-40 years, if not longer." New stainless steel caging was purchased as a result, he said.

This year, UMass has applied for a special grant from the National Institute of Health to upgrade animal facilities in Tobin, Middlesex, Morrill and Thayer. Half of the $1 million request will be matched by UMass if the grant is given.

"For every dollar available to this campus, there is $20 worth of need for it," Weinburg said. "Unfortunately, when there's a crunch, instead of spending the money to avoid a potential problem, it's left until the potential problem has become a reality. It's typical bureaucracy."

Associate professor of psychology and zoology Melinda Novak places the blame of inadequate and outdated facilities on the state government.

"They want to put band-aids on everything," she said. "If the parents of this state knew the stories about this campus' condition, they would be absolutely 100 percent appalled." Novak said that Massachusetts was 48th out of the 50 states in providing public aid to public education in 1983.

This is not the opinion expressed by Dr. Glen Brown of the Food Science and Nutrition department, who said that "Massachusetts is a state that cares about these things." He concedes that UMass has a tremendous deferred maintenance problem and "We are struggling to keep our laboratories' ventilation problems, for instance, under control," he said.

UMass has recently purchased two new state-of-the-art cage washers, Brown said. The old cleaning method was to put the cage in a huge tub of water, not a very efficient means of cleanliness. The new washers employ high pressure sprays that ensure complete sanitation.

The "real answer" to solving UMass' animal housing problems Brown said, would be to build a central animal housing facility. He said this development is not too far off in the future. The facility, which would cost about $3 million dollars, "is far up on the list of priorities," Brown said. "Everything that can be done is slowly but surely being done. As much as we'd all like to see improvements in the twinkling of an eye, it just doesn't happen."

Professor Don Black, a veterinary liaison in animal science who is on the Animal Care Committee, emphasized during a tour of Paige Laboratory the effort being undertaken to uphold the Animal Welfare Act regulations. The facilities house numerous breeds of mice, hampsters, guinea pigs and rabbits. Black says that all incoming animals are kept briefly in an isolation room to make sure that they are not diseased or a danger to other animals.

Dr. Michael Katz, the consulting veterinarian to UMass, said UMass "has excellent facilities, perfect in every case. We've been told by federal inspectors tht the place looks really good." Katz, whose job entails conducting routine inspections, said he likes to do so "when the researcher's guard is down. I make it a point to do when it's most awkward." Inspections are conducted roughly every two weeks, and have revealed little maintenance problems, he said.

Students, officials approve fee proposal to save Index

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

Students and administrators have been given the go ahead for a marketing strategy to ensure the publication of a 1986 Index yearbook.

Index, which was denied funding in the 1986 Student Government Association Budget Act, may be saved by a proposal to charge an optional $15 fee accompanying the semester bill, allowing students to purchase their copy of the book in advance.

The separate charge will be accompanied by a letter drafted by members of the Index staff, the Student Government Association, and Student Activities Office explaining what the Index is and the funding problems it has encountered. The letter will be accompanied by a postage paid envelope.

According to Dean of Academic Support Services Larry Benedict, the administration has agreed to "foot the bill" for postage and printing.

Benedict said the administration was first concerned with setting an unwanted precedent of supplying student groups in financial trouble with funds.

"I think the administration realized that the Index is an important aspect of community life, that it is important to alumni and everyone involved with the university," Benedict said.

Index editor Cindy Orlowski said she thinks the strategy will be "very successful" adding, "I don't think it will start any negative precedent because it is just for this year."

Orlowski said that in coming years, the Index could be funded through the probable increase in the Student Activities Fee, or by a permanent "optional" fee printed on the semester bill.

Health Day to focus on youth

The state commissioner of public health will discuss the impact healthy youths will have on the future at the University of Massachusetts today as part of World Health Day.

Dr. Bailus Walker, who has held the position for the past two years, will speak on "Healthy Youth, Our Best Resource" at 10:30 a.m. in Campus Center Room 904-906.

"The idea is to get people around the world to think about one health issue," Andrew Sorensen, director of the Division of Public Health said.

World Health Day, which focuses on a different theme annually and is celebrated internationally, centers on young people this year.

A videotape of a lecture by Dr. Jerimiah Stamler, chairman of the department of community health in preventive medicine at Northwestern University School of Medicine will follow Walker's lecture. The videotape, titled, "Mild Hypertension: Preventive and Therapeutic Challenges" will discuss how hypertension in the young, if detected early, can prevent future cardiovascular disease.

such an excessive amount of bail," DiMare said.

Marc Kenen, 24, a UMass student and a member of the self-named April 1 coalition which overtook the office of Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson in Whitmore administration building early last month, said Ruddock's arrest was an "act of intimidation by the administration to break down the protest movements that are developing on this campus."

During the senate meeting, provost Richard O'Brien was asked his opinion concerning threats by the administration of disciplinary action to be taken against last week's protesters. "I would be astonished if there were anything but the main, very minimal punishment imposed by the administration," O'Brien said.

DiMare said in the six years he has been a lawyer at UMass, he has never seen disciplinary action taken against a student protester.

He added, "The administration would be ill-advised to take such disciplinary action."

social security and the role of women in economic development.

She said cutbacks on this research will mean a "lack of background information" leading to "poorly informed policy decisions" affecting women.

Commenting on the findings of the study, UMass Professor of Women's Studies Janice Raymond said, "most of us have known about cutbacks but what surprised me were the percentages, which are much larger than I had thought."

" The amount of dollars given for research on women was so infintesimaly small in the first place that to cut it is disasterous," women's studies staff assistant Arlene Avakian said, adding "it's not like cutting the defense budget which you could cut in half and still have a lot left."

Cathy Portuges, director of the UMass women's studies program, described the reduction in research as a "mistake, shortsighted and unfortunate."

Asked whether it would have an impact on the women's studies program, she replied that although it would not have a direct effect on the current undergraduate body, it might jeopardize the program's recent application for a grant from the Fund for the Improvement of Post Secondary Education to introduce a graduate program.

According to English Professor Margo Culley, FIPSE, a fund she described as "known for financing progressive efforts," is already being faced with abolition.

She said she had just received information of government plans to fund FIPSE with "zero dollars," adding that even if the plan fails to pass Congress and FIPSE continues, it will still "be much less willing to take risks."

"It's important not to get too anxious or panicked about this," warned Portuges, noting that other foundations may be interested, that the program has survived previous shifts in government priorities, and, "as usual we will find whatever ways we can to pursue research work we think is important."

"The study of women won't collapse without federal funds," Raymond said, suggesting that there was a myth that the government funded all feminist research.

She said that although the funding of mainstream research on women might be affected, more radical research which has never relied on or received government monies will continue as before.

According to Culley, the indirect effects of the cuts at the University level will include difficulty in getting grants for research on women by both faculty and individual scholars, a reduction in data on women available to students and a general decline in "what we know about women," she said.

She also noted that the federal cuts may influence private foundations which already "spend less than one percent on women's issues."

"The federal precedent gives private institutions the lead to act with 'oh boy' types of behaviors," she said.

According to Chamberlain, the results of the council's study reflect the "lack of concern for women" shown by the Reagan administration which upholds "a philosophy that doesn't believe in affirmative action," she said.

live wire
by Peter Wissoker

I was riding on a bus this morning and a small child accompanied by a couple of nuns said, upon seeing the Hampshire Mall, "This looks like a big farm without animals", that reminded me today was the last livewire of the semester. How fitting that as the semester passes so passes out of existence one of the great area bands, like a shooting star now bright, now gone, so Mongrel Puppy has broken up. You followed them here and now what is left to life?

Well, there's always spring concert, which, contrary to yesterday's Tubes picture, is on Sunday, to keep you from going out and buying beer. UPC wants to teach you not to squander all your capital before you will want it. So here's the rundown of the activities for next week and some on into the summer.

Spring concert (the Sunday one, that is) will be at the pond. In case you don't know the line up is Eliot Easton of the Cars, Johnny Copeland who is a Texas blues musician, The SOS Band, a great disco/funk band, and finally the Tubes who are the Tubes, once avant-garde, now MTV.

There will be some other free stuff on the flagstones above the entrance to the Campus Center, actually above the Blue Wall both today and tomorrow. First, at noon today, Jonathan Kleezing will be playing solo electonic/synthesized guitar. Then at 1 p.m. Box Sound will perform. They are a post-industrial ensemble of construction and deconstruction; a sure sign that they will be interesting as well as Noho hip. On Friday, Circle will be playing out on the terrace for free. They will also be playing at the Rusty Nail tonight.

So what else is new. Tonight Los Jaivas, a Chilean rock band will be playing at Pearl Street. They seem to be an interesting (again) mixture of new and old music. They now live in Paris. The Advocate (for what it's worth) has an interview with them this week which makes attendance seem desirable.

Tomorrow night Billy Bragg will high-ho his solo guitar act into the Rusty Nail for one show. Jessie Colin Young will be at the Iron Horse for two nice performances. Perhaps most importantly, one of the only men who can sing like his heart really depended on it. George Jones will be playing tomorrow and Saturday at E.M. Loew's in Worcester.

Also on Saturday: The Sighs will be playing with the Bamboo Steamers who will be replacing the Pups on the bill. Roberta Flack will be at the Fine Arts Center.

Pentagle guitarist John Renbourn will be at the Iron Horse on Sunday for two shows, in case you want to calm down after spring concert. He will be there on Monday as well. Phil Collins will be at the Centrum.

Let's talk Talking Heads one last time. New album, summer. No tour, no new concept, sorry Anthony. There's an interesting interview with them in last week's New York Times Magazine. That's not to mention the article about Richard Thompson in the last Rolling Stone. Rolling Stones stadium dates this summer?

Tuesday night the Beat Farmers will be playing at the new-wave Iron Horse. There, music is a combination of blues, folk, and other styles, ie. the Velvet Underground. The floor will be open to dance.

Son Seals will return to the Iron Horse on Wednesday night. He was a much talked about guitar player when I was growing up. He can still play the blues, although he plays them a little more in the second set than in the first.

Three more weeks until the Drake closes which means three more Wednesday nights with the UMass Blues Band (not Ensemble). Three weeks from yesterday they'll be closing the Drake in style.

Well what's coming while you're going? Next Thursday, a week from now, Roomful of Blues will return to the area for those who wanted to see them at the East Side concert. They will be at Pearl Street. Up at the Rusty Nail, the Neville Brothers will be playing, same night of course. This is some kind of New Orleans rave-up; the Bayou and all that. Opening will be Wailin' Dave and the Blue Dogs.

In the further future, Katrina and the Waves will be at Pearl Street as will Divine, that mass of throbbing transvestite talent. During that same period of time the Iron Horse will have Silly Wizard and Elizabeth Cotton (not together). John Sebastion will be at the Red Balloon.

Summer brings the Washington Squares and Fairport Convention to the Iron Horse and the 3 O'Clock to Pearl Street. Goodbye.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Who's self-righteous now?

South Africa ia a time bomb that's ticking. Two hundred people have been killed in protests there in the past nine months, according to government sources—300 according to non-government sources reported in the New York Times.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, in his report on South Africa and the American student delivered to last week's Faculty Senate meeting and partially reprinted in Friday's Collegian, calls for students to do more than just call for divestment. He calls for students to devote part of their lives to working for change in ways that help rememdy the situation. We agree with him and applaud his concern. We realize that divestment is an easy issue, requiring only vocal assent and little, if any, self-sacrifice. Yet, easy or hard, divestment is, most importantly, right.

It is, as the chancellor calls it, "institutional witness which express(es) our condemnation of the system of apartheid." But we do not, as the chancellor writes, "entertain the illusion" that the South African government will be brought down as a result of our actions. In fact we are at a loss to discover just who the chancellor believes is so deluded.

We realize that if the University, in fact if all universities, were to sell their stock in companies that do business in or with South Africa, somebody else will buy it. Likewise, we do not expect the United States government to impose sanctions any time soon, because minerals available only from South Africa are used in weapons production in this country.

We believe, simply, that public pressure brought about by complete divestment by institutions that wish to express their repugnance of the racist South African government might shame the government into reforms quicker than if little or no pressure is brought to bear.

The question is, again in the words of the chancellor, "the definition and degree" of divestment. If we accept the chancellor's and the University's "widely accepted definition" of divestment, then we must also accept investment in South Africa. We believe that by accepting some investment in South Africa, we implicitly approve of some apartheid. But some apartheid is some racial segregation—it simply cannot be condoned or accepted, explicitly or implicitly. Our cries of condemnation and repugnance ring hollow if we continue to allow our money to flow to South Africa. Therefore, we must take steps to ensure that our actions reflect our words.

The chancellor writes tht recent suggestions advocating complete divestment "seem to suggest that the University should have nothing to do with South Africa." While doing little more than adding a bit of sophomoric rhetoric to the debate, the chancellor is surprisingly close to our position.

We have already offered in this space alternative language to the present "operate in" clause of the trustee document. The language offered is not sacred. The point is it would cover disputed companies such as Foxboro Co. and Bankers Trust Corp. We now offer two specific suggestions: First, banks that continue to loan money to the private sector—such as Bankers Trust and J.P. Morgan Co. Inc.—should not be acceptable investments because many of these loans are to South African banks that then use the money as they see fit, fundability in financier's terms. Second, companies that deal directly with South African corporations should be excluded. Thus Foxboro Co., which deals directly with a South African international representative, would be excluded. While Procter & Gamble, which licenses the manufacture and distribution of pharmaceuticals by a third party, which then distributes them in South Africa, would be acceptable.

We believe the chancellor to be a reasonable man. We agree that demands made by protesters last Wednesday, that the University sell its stock in the four disputed corporations immediately, were unreasonable. But we believe that the trustees should act on the matter before their next meeting, May 28. If poet Dennis Brutus is to speak at commencement, we believe the issue should be resolved before then.

Finally, we ask that the chancellor take his own words to heart and avoid that which much of his statement was given to, "moral posturing, self-righteousness, facile condemnation of the motives of others and moral intimidation." We agree that "such attitudes make no positive contribution to the struggle." If the chancellor desires more from his students, he might offer more himself. We are sure he can do better.

CHAMBERLAIN RETURNS FROM GERMANY, 1985

Investment aids apartheid

Meredith Carlson

With President Reagan's visit to Bitburg, Germany and the anniversary of World War II in the news, it is important to remember that the Republic of South Africa is the only country in this century to adopt the ideology of Nazi Germany in its legal statutes. The leaders of the South African Nationalist Party, some avowed Nazis themselves, were deeply committed to the principles of fascism and thus, implemented the doctrine of white supremacy. Under this mandate, a matrix of laws forbids the black majority to walk, talk, sleep, gather and simply be in areas which are for "blankes" (whites) only. As a young girl in South Africa, I remember seeing the big army truck pass by our house every afternoon, packed with blacks who had been picked up for some violation of the pass law. Blacks are convicted of crimes under this law simply because of their color.

In 1948, South Africa legalized its 30-year practice of racial segregation and oppression by adopting the policy of apartheid. Blacks were then secured as a cheap migrant labor force, subservient to the white ruling elite. Three million blacks have been hauled to "resettlement" camps. Although they constitute 72 percent of the population, they are restricted to 13 percent of the land.

It is understood by both American corporations invested in South Africa and the government itself that the $2.5 billion in investments help to maintain white rule and provide little more than a trickle-down value for blacks. If divestment would hurt blacks more than whites, as some claim, then why has the regime made it an indictable offense to support divestment? In his own words, former South African Prime Minister J.B. Vorster has said that, "Each bank loan, each investment is another brick in the wall of our continued existence." Despite this stern statement, there are some who still entertain the illusion that corporations facilitate social change. As Citicorp of New York, the largest lender to South Africa has stated, the company "can survive only if we are successful in demonstrating to the local authorities that our presence is useful to them." In reality, investments have not brought about majority rule or made the political and economic infrastructure more equitable.

Divestment is a non-violent way of dismantling apartheid and can only lead to positive change. It seems therefore logical that institutions of higher learning such as UMass, should encourage this movement. History has shown in Zimbabwe that economic sanctions, boycotts and divestments are instrumental in bringing about fundamental change. It was only five years ago that neighboring Zimbabwe gained its independence, even with Rhodesia's Ian Smith claiming, "Black rule, not for 1,000 years."

Students play an important role in the struggle to abolish apartheid. Unlike in South Africa, where protest is illegal, in the U.S it is traditional. The students at UMass and across the country are among a diverse majority, who are becoming acutely aware of the situation in South Africa and the need to divest. As the become aware, they act, as demonstrated by the recent protests on this campus and others.

However, it should be pointed out that on other campuses, arrest has not been the only reaction to student protest. For example, at Columbia University, authorities sought a court injunction to disband the protest. This gave students an opportunity to respond to the issue, rather than the charge. It seems to me more productive for UMass authorities to seek dialogue and debate over the underlying issues, rather than invoking the sanctions of the criminal law. In the interests of the University and student community, I wonder if Chancellor Duffey would be willing to participate in an open debate on this issue. There are numerous prominent people willing to debate the issue.

Meredith Carlson is a resident of Amherst.

Random Notes
Abortion and 'convenience'

Trying to keep track of the liberal justification for abortion can be challenging. The basic liberal position hasn't changed, but its arguments have a chameleon-like quality. As writer James Sobran has pointed out, they have argued at various times that nobody can know when life begins, that the issue is essentially religious, that the fetus is merely a part of the mother's body, and so on. When any of these assertions is refuted, he notes, they never reconsider their position; they merely find a new prop for their pet issue.

He has a point. Is the liberal stand on this issue open to reason, or is it a matter of faith on their part?

Liberal fervor for abortion does seem to be less than reasonable. If a court is given sufficient reason to believe that new evidence might vindicate a defendant, judgment is stayed until that evidence can be evaluated. However, in the face of mounting evidence that a fetus is a human individual, the pro-choice line grows ever more adamant.

Here is a case in point. In the early 1960s, Dr. Bernard Nathanson founded the National Abortion Rights Action League (NARAL) with Betty Friedan, Carol Greitzer and Lawrence Lader. NARAL was the pioneer group for abortion, pressing the unpopular position into national debate. After the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision, Nathanson performed or supervised some 75,000 abortions. He was one of the first involved in fetology (the study of the fetus), eventually heading up a major fetology clinic. Nathanson is not a religious man, and yet today he refuses to perform abortions, and actively campaigns against them. Through the use of new technologies, he says, it became "unmistakably, ineradicably, incontestably clear that the fetus thinks, breathes, feels, listens, hears, makes attempts to communicate, can distinguish between sounds and music, urinates, defecates and sleeps on certain very predictable periodic cycles of activity."

It is also viable at earlier and earlier ages with the technology we've been developing, he says.

Other "experts" in the fields of gynocology and obstetrics have said that they are "unaware" that a fetus can feel pain. However, as Nathanson points out, abortion is a multi-million dollar industry now. It would not be profitable for them to say anything else.

The compelling question facing the abortion clan is this: what, if anything, would cause you to reconsider your position on abortion? Daily it becomes more obvious that compassion for women is not the real issue, or there would be compassion for the child. The real issue is that babies aren't "convenient."

The needs of others are seldom convenient. Liberals, of all people, should understand that.

Questions about BOG and beer

Coors is good. Coors is bad. Well, that's for you to decide. Let's take a minute to look at the questions at hand in the "Coors ban controversy." Where did it come from? Why is it here? And exactly what questions should we be asking? Some ask whether Coors Beer should be sold on campus, suggesting that it is discordant with the mission and purposes of the University. Others agitate that the student governing board of the Campus Center has overstepped its authority in making its decision to recommend the discontinuance of the sale of Coors in the CC/SU complex. The two parts of this "question" deserve separate consideration.

The decision-making process by which the Board of Governors operates is based upon the same republican democracy under which our federal government operates. Representatives are elected to a decision-making body. They research issues which concern their constituents, and to make decisions which best serve the interests of their constituents. The beauty of this system is the efficiency and sensitivity through which it is able to accurately address the concerns of the populace.

The BOG was presented with both sides of the Coors Beer issue, and in two separate meetings it voted (by a wide majority) to recommend the discontinuation of the sale of Coors Beer in the CC/SU complex. The decision was made in light of the comparison of facts, evaluated in terms of the purpose of this University. It was not a hasty decision. The individual members of the BOG, both undergraduate and graduate students alike, know and respect the good name of the University in considering the human scale of things, and applaud its progressive edge in supporting the rights of individuals and groups to freely hold diverse beliefs and practices.

The BOG has the constitutional authority and obligation to protect and promote student interests in the Campus Center/Student Union complex. The BOG membership feels strongly about the implications of its decision—and believes that its decision best supports the mission of the University and the best interests of the student body. Even more, the BOG believes that if all its constituency had the opportunity to review the issues and facts, as the BOG has over an extended period, it too would by a similar majority make the same decision.

The referendum question does not ask about the Coors issue per se, but whether the BOG members "overstepped their bounds" by making their decision. Clearly, they did not. The BOG recommended that the CC/SU stop being a marketplace for this product; following that, the administration acted on the board's recommendation.

The true issue is not whether the BOG has overstepped its boundaries, but the more basic question of whether Coors Beer should be eligible for marketing in the CC/SU complex. In an effort to bring an understanding of its decision to as many students as possible, the BOG organized an open student forum on Monday. After the announcement of this campus forum, today's referendum was organized by the Students for Government by Referendum. This direct vote is not addressing the true issue of concern: whether the sale of Coors Beer in the CC/SU is actually in the best interests of the students at this University—rather it is questioning the legitimacy of the Board of Governors as an agent for representative democracy. The "Coors question" has become side-stepped, and there is an "informational sideshow" on the concourse.

It is blatant deception to ask whether the BOG has overstepped its bounds. The answer is no. Both legally and implicitly, the BOG has the authority and responsibility to try and safeguard student rights and interests in its sphere of campus governance.

Don't be deceived by another trick question. Support the BOG in making decisions. It's the board's job. You elected them. Get the facts and make your own decision on Coors. Come into the BOG office in Room 817 Campus Center and let your views be known.

Barry Wray, James Shaw and Ginger Lavoie are members of the Board of Governors.

A few thoughts from an insider

In reference to the controversy surrounding the Adolph Coors Company and a recent decision to hold a campus-wide referendum concerning the Coors on campus vote, I would like to submit a few facts about the company as witnessed from first hand experience—I work for Coors.

When 60 Minutes visited the Adolph Coors Company in 1982 to investigate AFL-CIO allegations against the company, they found none of the charges to be true. What 60 Minutes found was a company that respects its employees and offers exemplary salaries and benefits. (Although I graduated from Michigan State in 1980 and have help a couple of "professional positions" with well known companies, it is only now as a Coors employee that I have the opportunity to finally shoot for the growth I need within the business community.) Yes, the beer industry has traditionally been a male-dominated business, but in New England as in the rest of the nation, Coors has taken decisive steps to increase the number of women at the company.

In 1986, women comprised approximately 11 percent of the total workforce, and in 1984 they made up more than 21 percent of the total number of employees. Coors has also increased minority representation to 14 percent of its total workforce—an amount that is comparable with minority employment among breweries. Cutting quick the allegations concerning the misuse of polygraph tests, the tests are administered by a company contracted to give the test to any potential employee, however, no questions regarding sexual preference are given and Coors is one of more than 40 companies that requires such a test.

It's your choice...Today, the whole student body will be given a chance to express its own choice on the Coors issue. There is clearly more at stake in this vote than giving Coors another shot in the campus pub. The larger issue centers on the importance of informed representation not just in college elections, but in any election. Actually, the "Coors on campus" has been a good exercise for anyone concerned with the basic tenets of a democratic system. In conclusion, I wish all of you success in the up and coming referendum—a success that depicts a clearly defined voter's choice.

Kathy A. Contino is the Assistant Area Sales Manager for the Coors New England Division.

The truth about Coors

Recently, the Board of Governors passed a motion suggesting to the director of the Campus Center that the sale of Coors beer in the Blue Wall be discontinued. Since then, Coors has become an issue of much concern on this campus. Unfortunately, it has also been an issue of much confusion. The student population should be knowledgeable of the reasons why Coors is being boycotted nationwide, and why the BOG decided against Coors.

The Coors Company has for years used unfair and illegal labor practices.

In the past 20 years, Coors has destroyed 19 unions of its workers. In 1969, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) charged Coors with unlawful employment practices against Chicanos and blacks. In 1977, Coors settled out of court with the EEOC on a discrimination suit. In 1970, the Colorado Civil Rights Commission found Coors guilty of racial discrimination. Coors distributors have historically been forced by Coors to employ scab labor in the event of a strike.

In 1977, Brewers Local 366 struck the Coors Brewery over human dignity issues. These issues included forced lie detector tests and search and seizure by the company's private police force. After 18 months, a decertification election was held. Striking workers were not allowed to vote and the union was decertified. These issues that forced the strike still exist.

It is for these reasons that the BOG, your elected representatives, suggested Coors not be sold. We, of the University Democrats, hope that you see these labor practices for what they are, illegal and immoral. We hope you utilize your freedom of choice in a unified boycott of Coors beer. We also hope that you keep these facts in mind when you vote on the referendum today.

Give a voice to Palestinians

Eleven Israeli athletes killed at the 1972 Munich Olympics. Scores of bombings on civilian buses and in marketplaces in Jewish towns and cities. Twenty-two school children murdered during the 1974 Ma'alot, Israel massacre. Who was responsible for all of these senseless acts of violence? The Palestinian Liberation Organization.

Last Saturday, the Third World Women's Task Force of the Everywoman's Center sponsored PLO member Somalia Barghouti to discuss the conditions of Palestinian women in Israel. The Third World Caucus and SCERA both supported her visit. Legally, these campus groups may have the right to promote any speaker they choose, but morally they have displayed a severe lack of responsibility. The allotment of $200 of student funds to this woman will continue to finance the PLO's reign of terror in the Middle East. Why didn't these groups simply obtain a non-PLO Palestinian to talk here? As a result, the Third World Women's Task Force, the Third World Caucus and SCERA have dimished their own statuses as legitimate, reputable student organizations.

The PLO is a splintered terrorist group which does not, contrary to popular belief, represent all Palestinians, just as activist Meir Kahane is not a reflection of the opinions of most Jews. Let's give the Palestinians a voice on this campus...not the PLO.

Columnist causes deception

In response to Peter Dow's column, "Leftist deception all around us," where are the facts? For the first time the Nicaraguans have a government which is truly working for them and has produced tangible results. Land is being distributed to peasants with government assistance, illiteracy has been reduced from 52 percent to 13 percent. Malaria has been wiped out and diarrhea has been dropped from the number one cause of infant mortality to number six.

His "facts" are that the Sandinistas disregard basic human rights as can be seen through their treatment of the Indians. But brutal violence is something that is not foreign to Nicaraguans.

Does Dow remember a family call the Somozas who ruled Nicaragua in a totalitarian regime not supported by the Nicaraguans? The U.S. provided Somoza with the military means to stay in power when all of Nicaragua was being brutalized. Conversely, when 12 percent of the population (Indians) suffers a degree of oppression, we arm insurgents and apply economic pressure on the Nicaraguan government.

The basis of his oppression argument relied on the plight of the various Indian groups in Nicaragua. Last week the New York Times reported that Brooklyn Rivera, leader of the Misurasata faction signed a ceasefire with the Sandinistas who admitted that their treatment of the Nicaraguan Indians was morally wrong and based on cultural misunderstandings. All 50 Indians in jail for fighting were released and most of the Indian demands short of total autonomy were being met.

Equally disturbing when compared to his outdated facts and theoretical dogma, is Dow's use of blatant lies. He confuses the MI-24 Hind helicopters which he says are used for the "frequent devastation of Indian crops, livestock and life" with American UH-1 helicopters which are being used for the same purpose in both Guatemala and El Salvador. The MI-24 has in fact not seen air service as of yet.

Dow also attempted his frequent charge of communism on a Great Decisions radio show in April and Professor James Der Derian of the political science department asked him to do some more homework on the situation. Dow was also not allowed to continue as the professor felt that people listening to public radio should not be subjected to such ridiculous, unresearched assertions. So instead Dow continually offers the same theories in print.

Also, how can Dow blame the leftists who are fighting against any U.S. interference in Nicaragua if the U.S government chooses to intervene. His premise that U.S. intervention in Nicaragua is even more likely now that contra funding has been denied by Congress is easily seen as false by a congressional report issued by Reagan. In the report Reagan detailed a plan in which the contra forces would be expanded to 35,000 soldiers. If they could not accomplish their task then U.S intervention would have to be explored.

Dow is the cause of deception for many people who choose to allow his misguided columns to influence their views on Central America.

The game of the year: Syracuse here tomorrow

Top-ranked Orange tangle with rival Gorillas

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

If you don't know about it ,you should. If you don't have the time to go, make some. If you miss it , you'll probably wish you hadn't.

The nation's number one lacrosse team, Syracuse University, will play the University of Massachusetts at Boyden Field tomorrow at 3 p.m.

For Massachusetts sports fans, the 1984-85 season has been one of disappointments. No major spectator sport registered a winning record and the lacrosse team was supposed to remedy that.

An up-and-down season resulted, and the gorillas sit at 6-7, unranked and out of playoff consideration. A victory against the Orangemen would bring immediate respect for both the team and the school.

Syracuse, 11-1, went to the NCAA title game last season only to lose 13-10 to Johns Hopkins. In a two year period, the Orange are 36-2 (they lost 8-6 to Hopkins in their second game this year).

Syracuse at UMass

When: Friday at 3 p.m.
Where: Boyden Field
Records: UMass is 6-7, Syracuse is 11-1 and ranked first in the nation.
Season series: Syracuse leads, 5-4.
Common Opponents: Delaware (UM 15,Delaware 14; Syracuse 12, Delaware 6) Cornell (Cornell 13, UM 9; Syracuse 12, Cornell 10) Rutgers (Rutgers 12, UM 9; Syracuse 15, Rutgers 6) Army (Army 11, UM 9; Syracuse 10, Army 9) Harvard (UM 13, Harvard 8,Syracuse 13, Harvard 9)
Leading Scorers: UM: Tom Carmean (23 goals, 33 assists-56 points) Tom Lukacovic (22-12-34) Mike Fiorini (19-14-33) S. Tim Nelson (14-53-37) Brad Kotz (30-10-40) Tom Nelson (22-15-37)
Injuries: None for either team

Coach Roy Simmons Jr., like his father before him, has established Syracuse as the premiere team in the North. Syracuse has won five national titles and produced countless All-Americans, including footbal hall-of-famer Jim Brown who played on 1957's 10-0 team.

Only three men have coached Syracuse lacrosse in 69 years. Laurie Cox (1916-1930), Roy Simmons (1931-1970) and Roy Simmons Jr. (1971-present). The Orange also won the 1983 national title with a 14-1 record, making them 50-3 over the past three seasons.

Syracuse is lacrosse the way UCLA is college basketball and Nebraska is the standard of college football.

"Syracuse has done a lot to popularize the sport in New York and all over the region," UMass head coach Dick Garber said. "They have a great program with some class people. It's always great to beat them."

UMass has played the Orange to a virtual standoff in the past. The gorillas are 4-5 in nine meetings with Syracuse. They lost 12-5 last season in the Carrier Dome, but were 12-8 winners in 1981 after trailing 7-2 at halftime.

The Orange don't go far in recruiting. Of the 32 players, all but four are from New York and nine are from Syracuse high school power West Genesee.

Midfielder Brad Kotz and attackman Tom Korrie are West Genesee products and have since been college All-Americans. Kotz,SU's face-off man, has scored 30 goals and dished out 10 assists this season. Korrie has 22 and 14. Senior Tim Nelson the country's leading attack man (14-53) and his brother Tom (22-15) he also offensive keys. Tim is another Orange All-American. Goalie Tom Nims, another West Genny player, has allowed only 85 goals in 12 games.

But UMass has it's West Genesee connections as well. Junior defenseman Tom Aldrich and Mark Stratton know SU's big guns well after playing them in practice and in games in high school. Midfielder Neal Cunningham and freshman Brad Kelley Carr also went to the school.

"They're good kids and good players," Simons said yesterday about UMass' West Genesee players. "It's a good area for lacrosse and whenever we meet it's for summer bragging rights. I expect it will be a good, hard nosed game."

Simmons said he knows little about UMass. "We know they'll play us straight up, no fancy stuff or tricks on defense, just good lacrosse. I expect that being a Dick Garber-coached team, they'll be well coached and ready for us. They're better than their record indicates."

The Orange crushed Penn 27-9 in their last game. UMass was a 19-13 victor at C.W. Post. Both Penn and Post were highly ranked teams that took savage beatings.

The Orangemen seniors graduate on Sunday and the team is involved in final exams. The Gorillas are loose and have nothing to lose. For Syracuse, the NCAA bids come out Sunday morning and the outcome is vital for the playoff seedings.

"Beating them would make our season and show people what we can do," Aldrich said. "I've always dreamed of beating them. It's my goal. I think we can do it."

"If we do beat them," Kelley Carr chipped in, "they aren't going to hear the end of it this summer."

Massachusetts Karate grabs titles at New England tourney

The New England Collegiate Karate Conference held it's 37th bi-annual championship tournament at MIT's DuPont Gymnasium. Massachusetts Karate, from the University of Massachusetts walked away with titles in the three catagories of competition for fighting and forms of movement.

With Master Kazumi Tabata, head of the NECKC and NAKF, presiding, the competition was divided into three areas: K.U.M.I.T.E. (point sparring), K.A.T.A. (forms movement), and the infamous "Boston Battle" two-on-two combat. Massachusetts Karate (trained by Captain Ray Stone) won advanced team kumite with a combined effort by Mike Seliger, Rod Nangle, Marvin Johnson, Foster Lin, and Dave Cadrain, who came through with two clutch, tie-breaking stand-offs. Second place went to Southeastern Massachusetts University. In advance team kata, the team of Henry Chang, Victor Bieniek, Lin, Jane Lin, and Diane Weingartner also were victorious, using a combination of power, technique, and fluidity to defeat second place Boston College. And in the Boston Battle, Dennis "Bolo" Mahoney and Lin fought their way to a first place finish, usurping the traditional reign of the University of Lowell.

In the NAKF (North American Karate Federation) individual's competition (brown belt division), women's kumite was won by Jeanie Gido (for her second title) and second went to Hane Lin, who also grabbed second place for kata. Marvin Johnson held onto third place in men's fighting. Finally, in the black belt division, Weingartner took second place for Women's kata, while coach Keith Gauthier won forth place in the heavy competition of the men's middle weight kumite division.

Massachusetts Karate's showing was it's most successful in many years. The last kumite championship was won in the Fall of 1983, at Boston College.

West Virginia bolts A-10

The Atlantic 9?

That's what the West Virginia University would like to see as the Mountaineers are preparing to leave the Atlantic 10 conference.

West Virginia's athletic department has made noises about trying to get into the metro conference. The Mountaineers were one of the A-10's better teams, winning the regular season basketball title, the baseball title and having strong swimming and tennis seasons.

The A-10 tried to get Holy Cross when it first formed, but the Crusaders do not seem league-bound. Possibilities include James Madison or Virginia Commonwealth. The UMass basketball teams play WVU twice each season.

Intramural tourneys in action

By DAN SOBEL
Collegian Staff

Beta Kappa Phi defeated Ex-Hogsters, 13-4, to capture the Weeekend Softball Tournament sponsored by the Intramural Program.

In the fifteen team tourney, Beta Kappa Phi defeated Power Alley, 12-0, Slippery People, 6-5, and Big Chunks, 11-5, to gain a berth to the finals.

Ex-Hogsters, led by the Recla brothers, Rob and Pete, and pitcher Mike Galvin, strung together victories against Bombsquad, 8-5, Cavity Creeps, 9-4, and Big Chunks, 20-2, to face Beta Kappa Phi.

In the fourth inning, Ex-Hogsters held a slim 3-2 lead, but, sparked by Dean Strang and Mike Raditz, Beta Kappa Phi exploded on offense and scored nine runs in one inning to put the game out of reach.

Today, the men's and women's intramural finals will be held at 4 p.m. with the Co-Rec and Grad/Fac meeting at 5 p.m. Sly and Joey's and The Wagon will face off in the men's final.

In Volleyball action, A.A.S.A. took the Co-Rec championship in beating Thrusters, 15-9, 15-13.

In the first game, A.A.S.A. server Benson Chin registered six straight points to give A.A.S.A. the early lead. After Thrusters came back, Paula Mar served the game winner to take game one.

In game two, Steve Geryk gave Thrusters an early lead with three straight points. Pui Ng brought A.A.S.A. back with three straight points of her own to tie the match.

Thrusters came back to take an 8-4 lead. but, led by Chin, A.A.S.A. fought back to lead it 12-10. Calvin Wong put together two savage spikes to take the game and the championship.

Sports Notice - Any university women interested in competing for the 1985 cross-country season for the University of Massachusetts must attend a team meeting on Tuesday, May 14 at 5 p.m. in Boyden room 223.

Sports Log

Tony Botros

Just a few thoughts.....

I've heard of Magic Johnson, of course there's Dennis Johnson, there was a president named Lyndon Johnson, but Vinnie Johnson? His name sounds more like a KISS 108 DJ than a basketball player, and I'm sure the Celtics would rather see him doing a show with Sonny Joe White than doing the number he did on them last Sunday....Vinnie was, to say the least, hot in the fourth quarter, scoring at one point 22 of Detroit's 26 points. It's hard to believe that the Pistons are beating the Celtics via the bench, long a Boston strongpoint. The Celtics should take the series, but after dogfights against both Cleveland and Detroit, Philadelphia must be licking its chops.

The 76ers are doing the right thing, peaking at playoff time....The Round Mound of Rebound, (thanks Flip), Charles Barkley is looking lean and hungry as are the rest of Billy Cunningham's club. They are going to be well-rested for the Celtics, and look like strong candidates for the finals....Their probable opponent, the L.A. Lakers, are also playing well at the right time. What impressed me most was game three in Portland. They overcame a Portland comeback and held on to win at a place where any team has trouble with the Trailblazers. That was the first test for the Lakers, and they passed it....That must have been harder than an FS&N 130 test, and they didn't even have the old exams.

Turning to baseball, Peter Uberroth is making quite a bit of headway as the new commissioner with this new drug policy. Under this plan, every baseball employee, excluding major league players, must undergo a drug test upon entering the position. Pro ballplayers are excluded because they are under a contract stating that test would be "dehumanizing" to them. Now that everyone else is taking the test, it won't be detrimental to the player, according to Uberroth....He is very crafty in his dealings, and he is going to be the best thing for baseball since the New York Mets (If you didn't read last weeks column, then you are unaware of the gospel according to Nancy, who declares the Mets as the potential World Series winners. So, if you disagree with the above statement, address all correspondence to Nancy Bukar, Amherst or drop by Boyden Pool).

Now some news from the wrestling front: Paul "Mr. Wonderful" Orndorff has fired manager Bobby "The Brain" Heenan. Yes, that's right folks. You can sleep at nights knowing that once again, good has triumphed over evil....Wrestling has the best nicknames--The Missing Link, The One-Man Gang, King Kong Bundy, Kamala-The Ugandan Giant, Superfly Snuka, just to name a few. You've got to give them credit, they are creative.....The announcers, on the other hand, sound as if they've swallowed a cliche book. The only good one is Jessie "The Body" Ventura. Number one Syracuse battles UM lacrosse today

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Rarely in your four years of college will an event come along that is big enough to make you forget about finals, overdue assignments and other academic matters.

Today is one of those events.

The number one lacrosse team in America, the Syracuse Orangemen, invade Boyden Field at 3 p.m. today to face the University of Massachusetts.

Syracuse is 11-1 this season and heading into the NCAA playoffs. The Orange are 50-3 over the past three seasons and are the best offensive team in the nation, averaging 16 goals-per-game.

For years, lacrosse has been the major student spectator sport at UMass and with the top-ranked team playing at Boyden for the final game of the season, upwards of 6,000 people are expected for the game.

"I expect that people interested in lacrosse from all over New England, our hard-core group of student fans and people just wondering what everybody else is doing will be there for the game," UMass coach Dick Garber said.

"It's the type of game most fans will like, both teams are running and scoring teams that play a quick tempo game. It should be a great game," Garber said.

UMass is 6-7 after an up-and-down season that has included victories over nationally-ranked Delaware and C.W. Post. A win today would probably boost UMass into the rankings and give the team national recognition.

UMass lost to the Orangemen 12-5 last season in the Carrier Dome. The Gorillas missed on several one-on-one chances in front of the goal. Garber said that trend has to be reversed for his team to come out on top.

"We have to be patient, get good shots, but most importantly make out good shots. It's the type of game where mistakes are magnified one thousand times," the coach said.

Syracuse arrived late last night and its 10 seniors will be returning home to graduate tomorrow. The entire team is involved in final exams and hasn't had full attendance at practice all week. The Gorillas have nothing to lose and have

Students oppose Coors decision

Use of athletic fee for sports supported in referendum vote

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

Sixty-nine percent of those students voting in the referendum questions yesterday said they believe the Board of Governors (BOG) overstepped its bounds by "calling for the banning of Coors beer in the Campus Center and Student Union buidlings" while 29 percent believe they did not.

The second question, asking, "Do you feel that the Athletic Fee (which will be increased next year) should be used for funding so that the men's and women's tennis, skiing, golf, and men's wrestling, will not be demoted to club status starting with the 1987 academic year," received an 80 percent yes vote while 17 percent voted no.

On the third question, 74 percent of those who voted, said they would be willing to pay a fee of $2 on their bill next semester, $1 which would go to relieve the plight of the starving people in the United States and $1 which would aid the plight of those affected by the famine in Africa. Twenty-three percent opposed the $2 fee.

"Although the board's position was defeated, the focus of the Coor's issue should not be if we have the power to make decisions like this. The board was constructed to make recommendations of that nature," Karina Gray, BOG vice-chairwoman, said.

Results of yesterday's S.G.A. referendum

Coors: Did the B.O.G. overstep its bounds in recommending the banning of Coors?

YES	69 percent	1,786
NO	28 percent	744
No opinion:	three percent	54

Athletic Fee: Should the athletic fee be used to support the seven varsity sports to be cut?

YES	80 percent	2,067
NO	17 percent	438
No Opinion	three percent	84

Famine Relief: Would you be willing to pay a $2 fee on your next bill with $1 going to combat hunger in the U.S. and $1 to fight African famine?

YES	74 percent	1,920
NO	23 percent	600
No Opinion:	two percent	64

On March 28 the BOG recommended to the Campus Center administration that they halt Coors sales because of that company's reported union-breaking and discriminatory hiring practices. William Harris, director of the Campus Center, agreed with that recommendation and chose to buy no more Coors beer.

According to the chairman of the SGA Governmental Affairs Committee, John Crowley, the referendum questions were conducted to assess student opinion, and will have no binding effect.

Campus concerts to commence

By PATRICK JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

The hills and the valley will come alive with the sound of music this weekend with the Orchard Hill concert on Saturday and the Union Program Council concert at the campus pond Sunday.

The Sunday show begins at noon with Eliot Easton first on the bill. Scheduled for 1:30 p.m. is Johnny Copeland and at 3:15, the SOS Band will take the stage. The Sunday line-up will close with the Tubes performing from 5:15 to 6:15.

Gerald T. O'Neil, director of public safety said, he expects between four and 5,000 people to be on hand Sunday. However, Lance Foley, president of UPC said if the weather is sunny and warm, the size of the crowd could swell to 10,000 people.

UPC requests that all going to the show observe the alcohol policy by refraining from bringing kegs, bottles or large coolers onto the concert grounds.

O'Neil would not say exactly how many people will be working crowd control because "people will be watching and counting them. Roughly, it works out to one security officer for every 500 people."

The Orchard Hill Area Bowl Day will start at 10 a.m. with a road race. Students will be able to register for the event up to an hour before it begins. An aerobics demonstration will follow at 10:45 a.m.

Teaching awards honor three professors and T.A.'s

By DAN MILLER
Collegian Correspondent

Recipients of this year's Distinguished Teachers Award say they are grateful for the student recognition which enabled three professors and teaching associates to receive the $2,000 prize.

The names of the recipients were obtained by the Collegian from the Graduate School office before they were to be officially notified by mail later this week.

"This is the best news I've had in a long time," education professor Clement A. Seldin said. "This honor represents recognition not only by my peers but by my students as well. Sometimes when I'm up correcting papers late at night, I wish I were doing something else. But I have a deep commitment to my students," he said.

Seldin, who received his doctorate here in 1976, taught grade school in Arlington, from 1971 to 1974. While in graduate school here in 1975, Seldin was an administrative assistant in the Integrated Day Teacher Education Program at the School of Education.

Professor Louis S. Greenbaum, who teaches eighteenth century history, said, "The people who deserve this award are my students." Greenbaum received his doctorate from Harvard in 1955, the same year he came to UMass. In 1960, he was a co-founder and the first director of the academic honors program at UMass. He said that the program was developed to "foster academic excellence" consistent with his belief that "the fundamental purpose of the University is teaching."

In 1963 Greenbaum was awarded the Adelphia Men's Honor Society's "Outstanding Teacher Award." He was chairman of the Committee for Scholarship and Study Abroad from 1964 to 1970. During his 30-year career at UMass, Greenbaum has published books and articles especially on the Church and medicine during the eleventh century. Presently he is working on a book on hospital reform in the eighteenth century.

General Business and Finance professor J. Nicholas Filler was surprised when the Collegian called and told him that he had won the award Wednesday. "I thought I'd lost it (the Distinguished Teachers Award)," Filler said. "All my students were consoling me over it (Tuesday.)"

Defense build—up curtailed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole struggled yesterday to nail down final details of a revised budget that would cancel next year's Social Security cost of living increase and sharply pare President Reagan's defense buildup as part of a three-year plans to cut spending by $300 billion.

Administration officials said Reagan had agreed to the proposal, despite the change in defense spending and the resurrection of numerous domestic programs he had proposed killing, including the Job Corps, Urban Development Action Grants and the federal subsidy for Amtrak.

There would be no tax increases in the proposal, which Dole said would cut spending by as much as $56 billion next year alone. In all, the plan was assigned to reduce federal deficits in half over three years, to roughly $100 billion.

Dole said the chances were "50-50" he could win approval for the revised blueprint within hours, but Democratic Sen. Lawton Chiles of Florida, and opponent, said the GOP leader was still "horse-trading."

Bank of Boston gunman flees with over $5,000

GREENFIELD, (AP) - Authorities yesterday sought a gunman who stole $5,000 to $8,000 from a Bank of Boston branch and fled on foot into nearby woods with the money in a shopping bag.

Police said they hoped to locate an unidentified woman whom they believe called from a pay telephone and described the man's flight into the woods after the robbery yesterday.

None of the three female bank employees was hurt during the 3 p.m. robbery.

The man showed two tellers a handgun and ordered them to "give me all your money, now," Lt. Joseph LaChance said. He made no threats, and no shots were fired.

Police were notified by a bank alarm shortly after 3 p.m.

Husband kills dying wife

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — A 75-year-old man who used a mercy killing defense was convicted of first-degree murder yesterday for shooting his ailing wife, and a judge sentenced him to life in prison.

Roswell Gilbert had testified that he shot his wife Emily, 73, out of compassion because of her suffering from progressive senility and a bone disease.

Judge Thomas Coker Jr. immediately sentenced Gilbert to life in prison, with a 25-year minimum, mandatory term. Because the state waived the death penalty, Coker noted Florida law allows no other punishment for first-degree murder.

"He's numb right now," said defense lawyer Harry Gulkin, adding he would appeal.

Witnesses testified that Mrs. Gilbert had longed for and begged for death.

Gilbert sat stoically as his only child, Martha Moran, burst into tears when the verdict was read after five hours of deliberation.

"They killed my father," Mrs. Moran wept.

The jury, which recommended leniency, also could have returned lesser verdicts of 2nd-degree murder or manslaughter.

Animal research depicts philosophical clash

By JONATHAN PERRY
Collegian Correspondent

Editor's Note: This is the last of a three part series examining the issue of animal research at the University of Massachusetts.

ANIMAL RESEARCH

The issue of animal research perhaps boils down to one question. Will there ever be a viable solution or compromise regarding animal research agreed upon by research proponents and opponents?

"I don't see it happening," Rick Brenner, a member of the UMass Animal Rights Coalition, said. "People who are extreme, like myself, will never see eye-to-eye with researchers, because I want it stopped and they don't."

However, both groups agree that communication is a vital ingredient toward understanding each other's positions and educating the public.

"Animal abuse probably does happen elsewhere," Sy Berger, chairman of the psychology department said. "If we can communicate to the public what we're doing, then we can show the animal is not being hurt."

Judy Radousky of the coalition said establishing open communication with researchers will be a problem because "science is so secretive. If people are shut out of laboratories, they feel there's something going on in there."

"Animal workers are coerced into silence, because of the fear of what may happen. People want to make their information public, but they're afraid of irrational action," Berger said.

Fearing for the life of her animals and herself is nothing new to Melinda Novak, an associate professor of psychology and zoology, who said she has "gotten messages such as, 'you don't deserve to live, you better watch your car.' I looked in the hood of my car for weeks." Novak, who teaches a graduate level course on animal welfare and research with UMass veterinary liaison Michael Katz, said, "There's a lot of hysteria out there. It's helpful to show what we're doing, because the imagination does run wild."

Jeffery Blaustein, a psychologist, said that despite any efforts made, "There are some people that will be extremely emotionally involved and won't listen to reason or logic or facts." Blaustein cited the importance of weighing both sides of the issue, "rather than just walking by a table and seeing a picture of a mistreated cat or monkey and drawing conclusions from that, that all scientists do that sort of thing."

Several researchers criticized past actions taken by research opponents, such as attempts to "liberate" animals by breaking into laboratories and freeing them. This type of behavior at UMass has resulted in animals getting hit by cars, starving, or being killed by the "liberator" when the animal attacked them. Jane Lidsky said the coalition has never "liberated" animals.

"Those people are jackasses and should be sent to jail," Kathleen Kinsolumy of the coalition said. "The person who did that is a sick vandal."

Several coalition members agreed that the Animal Liberation Front, a national organization which regularly releases captive animals, is good for the animal rights cause.

"If they do it the right way, with a lot of caution, it's very good," Kinsolumy said. "anything to take an animal out of its misery is very good."

Novak said that her animals live in an environment that induces natural behavior, "which is probably the best measure of the type of good care the receive. We're duplicating the good parts of the environment and not the bad parts. There are no eagles swooping down," she said.

Despite acknowledging that UMass probably has better facilities than many institutions, Brenner said that "the conditions the animals are living in are such a minor deal. What's the big deal if an animal lives in a clean cage, then is tortured?"

So, no matter how well maintained laboratory animals are, basic philosophical differences remain.

But, recently, for the first time, UMass professors (Novak and Gerald Meyer) addressed an animal rights coalition meeting. At least the communication has begun.

UM student arrested on cocaine charge

State Police arrested and charged a University of Massachusetts student with possession and possession with intent to distribute about three and a half ounces of cocaine after a staged drug raid on a Brittany Manor apartment early yesterday morning.

Peter R. Holbrook Jr., 21, of 171A Brittany Manor, was apprehended during a party a 2:30 a.m. yesterday, by members of the State Police Crime Prevention and Control Unit. They were assisted by Amherst Police.

Estimated street value of the cocaine is more than $9,000.

Holbrook pleaded innocent to both charges in Hampshire District Court yesterday morning and was released on $500 bail. His case has been continued until Aug. 7, the district attorney's office said.

According to local attorneys, increasing numbers of drug busts in the Hampshire County area are a result of increased funding in the district attorney's office. Attorneys say it is easier and cheaper to make smaller busts and then pressure the small-time dealers to implicate the bigger dealers.

Sources who refused to be identified said that some students collaborated with police, acting as informers or "plants" who pretend to be drug buyers so the police can catch dealers red-handed.

State Police said the case is still under investigation.

Women engineers must overachieve

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

Women in engineering must "outwork and outreach" their male counterparts, according to the keynote speaker at the second annual Women in Engineering Awards Program held yesterday in the Campus Center by the UMass Society of Women Engineers.

DeLynden Lersch, manager of Engineering Systems and Computer Graphics at Stone and Webster Corporation, was elected as corporate woman of the year in 1976 and 1977 and honored in Engineering News and Record Magazine in 1983 for her contribution to the construction industry.

Stressing that integrity, happiness and confidence are most important attributes for women entering the engineering field who want to get ahead, Lersch said, "You have to decide to like your job. When you don't do something because you say you can't do it, it's really only because you're afraid to try but you can't admit it."

Citing statistics that reveal only 17 percent of engineering students are women, Dean of the College of Engineering, James John said, a goal he wants to reach in the near future is having 30 to 40 percent of that departments' students to be women. "Here we have 19 percent (women). We've come a long way, but not long enough," John said.

To reach that goal, Assistant Dean of the College of Engineering and Director of the Women's Program in that department, Nancy Hellman said, "We are doing more talking to young women in high school. We're working to have role models; like alumni to come back so students can see just how successful these women are."

Admissions reveals record number rejected

By RENEE BACHER
Collegian Staff

Over 6,000 of those who applied to the University of Massachusetts were rejected this year, more than any other, due to the University's increased popularity and consequent selectivity.

"This is the most selective or competitive the University has been in the history of the institution," Timm Rinehart Acting Director of Undergraduate Admissions, said. The criteria for admission is more difficult for out-of-state students because a Board of Trustees law allows for only 15 percent of the student body to be made up of students from outside of Massachusetts. A lot of recent effort has been made to expand that number to 25 percent, Rinehart said.

"We want that flexibility," he said. "We exist in order to serve the citizens of the Commonwealth...as a system." In response to the increased number of Massachusetts residents rejected this year, Rinehart says they have the option of attending a state or community college.

There has been heavy interest, from prospective UMass students in the School of Management, Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration and Computer and Information Science, programs that have relatively few spaces. "There's still a heavy demand for engineering although it's slackened somewhat," Rinehart said.

Jim English, college counselor at Roslyn High School on Long Island recommends UMass to "generally solid students with a 'B' average." However, this year, many students who previously regarded the University as a "safe" school were unpleasantly surprised at notification time, English said.

"We want to be a University of Michigan, UNC (University of North Carolina) or a UVA (University of Virginia),"

Professional Association discusses worker wage scale

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

Expressing its displeasure with University administrators, the Professional Association at the University of Massachusetts (PAUMA) discussed a proposal yesterday which would set wage scales for professional employees.

The Olney study, conducted by an outside agency and completed in November, looked at how professional positions are paid in 15 universities and average the wages.

PAUMA members are concerned that, if implemented, the program would put a cap on wages.

"This study will cap certain jobs," Judy Toyama, of Minority Graduate Student Recruitment, said, "We are concerned with people who have shown loyalty to the University."

"We could not accept the proposal as it is," PAUMA Speaker Sara C. Ives said. PAUMA had sent a memo outlining several concerns about the study to Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey and several vice-Chancellors upon initial receipt of the study.

Ives said the administration's response was distribution of a memo which "only addressed one concern out of six."

"A letter has been sent to the chancellor," Ives said, "expressing our extereme displeaure with the program. We are deeply dissatisfied with the program and how it has been handled by the administration."

Ives said that the chancellor had not yet responded.

"All is not well with the Olney study," George Clay of Health Services said, "its implementation seems to ignore our concerns."

Ives said PAUMA is concerned with the construction of the study, "How can we be sure that the universities we were compared with are really comparable?" She also said that PAUMA was concered with the way the program would be administrated.

"This study creates a ceiling on everyone's salary," Ives said.

Gerry Quarles, director of Housing Services said that with the program, "in order to get a raise you'd have to get a triple promotion. It is no good for employee morale. There is no way we can acceopt it."

"We haven't gotten any response other than a memo," Quarles said, "they should have answered our questions and concerns. No response implies that this is not a negotiable subject."

Ives said that although the job classifications had been ranked, there were no figures available.

"We have been asking for this information that affects our salaries, and we haven't been told," Ives said.

When questioned on what would happen if the administration does not respond to PAUMA's request and implements the pay scale, Ives said it "would be up to the individual professional to decide what action is warranted."

"Law can be a very dry subject," he said. "I try to make it interesting--tell a few jokes. Maybe that's why I won the award."

Zoology teaching associate Janet Barsomiam said "I've had a bunch of good students. It's really nice working with them." Barsomiam added that the award will "look good on my resume, because I hope to get a teaching job."

Robert Hosmer, a teaching associate in the writing program said he is "very grateful" to his students for the award. He said that nomination for the award alone "is better than a lot of things I know."

Building Authority to fund Campus Center renovations

By MICHELLE SEGALL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Campus Center will undergo extensive repairs over the next two years at an estimated cost of $3.5 million.

Edmund Ryan, director of construction for the Physical Plant, said the funding, part of a total bond of about $25 million, will come from the state Building Authority.

In addition to the Campus Center and its garage, the bond will fund major repairs for North Village apartments and repair and renovate residence halls and dining com ons.

The Campus Center, 16 years old, "has been plagued with leaks for many years," Ryan said, adding that the leaking has been severe for several years. He said waterproof seals have failed to keep rain out of the building.

"We don't anticipate having to close down any portion of the Campus Center." Ryan said. Parts of the garage will have to be closed during the repairs, but the garage will remain open.

"We are still in the infancy stage of design development," Ryan said. The Boston engineering design firm of Zaldastani Associates was selected by the Building Authority about five or six months ago and "they've only been working on it roughly a couple of months." The bond was approved last fall.

The repairs have been divided into two phases. The first, repairs to the garage, include fixing the underground structure, repairing the waterproof membrane, and then repairing the garage itself. Preliminary drawings for this phase are scheduled for June 1, Ryan said.

The second phase of the project is repairing, the plaza deck of the Campus Center itself, "where the majority of the leaking is occuring," Ryan said.

Yvonne Treloar, project engineer for the Physical Plant, said it will take at least two years to complete the repairs. "They will work on both phases simultaneously," she said., Treloar represents the University on this project, the North Village project, and 10 other University contracts.

Ski club starts refunding

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts ski club has begun refunding security deposits to the 60 students, out of an original 180, who had not received refunds from the January trip.

But some students are still angry and dissatisfied with the organizational and financial management of the club.

Club officer Susan Hart was outside the locked ski club office yesterday with $400 in cash out of the $1,500 in unreturned money. Hart was returning money to people who simply mentioned their names. She did not ask for any kind of indentification.

Ski club member Ilana Levenson said she picked up $25 for her brother who now lives in Boston and was never notified about the availability of his refund.

"I'm trying to make ends meet at the end of the semester," said Levenson, who finally got her $25 deposit back four months after the ski trip.

Susan Deshaw, treasurer of the club said the money had been tied up with Snow Search, a private Amherst travel agency the club used for the January trip. "Our travel agent has been in Florida and his phone has been disconnected," Deshaw said.

Robert Jenal, business manager in the Student Activities Office, said he is "a little uncomfortable" with an RSO doing business with a private, outside organization. This "dual status creates a liability for the University or individual students," Jenal said.

Levenson also complained about the selection of ski club officers.

Article XII Section 1 of the ski club constitution states that, "All officers shall be elected at the last meeting of each academic year." But, Levenson said when she asked about being an officer for the fall she was told they had already been chosen by friends who were leaving or graduating.

Deshaw said officers will be at the office today in room 304 Student Union, with deposit money.

Women must fight for equal pay, strikers say

By MARIANE MEUSE
Collegian Staff

Working women struggling to receive pay comparable to that of men must organize and fight together if they wish to win, according to representatives of a Yale University clerical union.

Ellen Bedard and Beverly Lett, of Yale Local 34, speaking yesterday in the Campus Center as part of the Working Women's Lunchtime Series, said that the key to pay equity is organization.

Local 34, the union of clerical and technical workers at Yale Universtiy, which went on strike last year claiming that the Yale administration discriminated against women employees, eventually won a contract that many saw as a victory for comparable worth.

"We won the strike because we talked all the time, we organized students and we organized faculty," Lett said.

Bedard said that before the strike, her job as a senior administrative assistant, was paid only $15,600 a year, while a truck driver made an average of $18,000 a year. With the contract drawn up after the strike, she will now receive $20,000 a year within the next three years.

Both women said that the problem of Yale is not a unique one. Lett called the situation "a reflection of the national problem of comparable worth."

Comparable worth is the concept that people holding jobs involving similar responsibilities should be paid the same, regardless of sex. It recognizes that the sex-segregated labor market of today is discriminatory because women are paid lower wages than men holding similar jobs.

On a national average, women receive only 64 cents for every dollar a man earns, and the strike was an attempt to make Yale deal with the problem, Bedard said.

"When we first began, Yale said there was no discrimination. We had to make them admit it was there and deal with it," said Bedard.

This means more marginal (C students) may not be coming to the University. However, any resident of the Commonwealth who is refjected has a second chance to attend UMass by applying again for transfer admission. Transfer students currently make up one-third of the graduating class.

Although the Office of Transfer affairs has received fewer applications this year than expected (due to the fact that freshman admissions received 18,240, a record) Kathy Ryan, director of transfer affairs, projects that this year's rejected high schools seniors will probably be applying for transfer next year.

Politics, economics stressed in debating acid rain issue

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The problem of acid rain is not as simple as just reducing the polluting emissions from smoke stacks, the director of the Water Resources Research Center at the University of Massachusetts said yesterday at an acid rain forum.

Paul Godfrey, the coordinator of UMass' Acid Rain Monitoring Project, said the point he was making at the forum "was to look beyond the environmental impact to bring awareness to the economic and political factors."

The forum attended by 40 people and titled "Acid Rain, An Environmental Catastrophe In the Making?" had scientists, industry representatives and a government official discuss the economic impact of acid rain.

Tim Shea, staff member for U.S. Rep. Silvio Conte R-Pittsfield, said Conte is "pressuring the administration and sponsoring his own bill." The bill would force the nation's 50 top polluters to install mechanisms to reduce sulfur emissions and call for a surcharge of about 40 cents on utility bills around the country. The surcharge would then go to states and be used for further sulfur emissions reduction at the discretion of individual states.

Shea said the economic concerns include the unemployment problem faced when Midwestern plants switch to reduce the emissions, and the concern that legislation "must have a reasonable price tag to minimize cost on the public."

John Gastler, from the environmental office of the Connecticut division of Northeast Utilities, said the "greatest economic impact of acid rain is on the Midwestern utilities. We've largely taken (regulatory) measures that are asked on them."

Gastler said Northeast Utilities has made the necessary change over to burning low-sulfur coal, but the midwestern utilities "are faced with making expensive regulatory changes."

Steve Howards, a UMass graduate now working as a Washington lobbyist for the National Wildlife Federation, said he supports legislation where "older plants come into the same tougher controls," to protect the environment.

"We need a 12 million ton reduction of sulfur dioxide," Howards said, referring to the goal cited by the National Academy of Sciences as necessary to prevent further environmental damage.

Divestment will only hurt

George Morancy

In South Africa, a white minority government of Afrikaaners practices a policy of apartheid (properly pronounced apart-hate) that is repugnant to all who value liberty and freedom. Many called for the United States to stop "supporting" this policy, to withdraw all U.S. investments in South Africa. What seems on the surface to be a simple choice — to continue to support racism and discrimination or to stop — is actually a more complex and difficult problem to solve.

The policy of the Reagan adminstration has been one of contructive engagement, an approach designed to bring South Africa's apartheid policy more in line with U.S. interests by exacting small but steady concessions from the Afrikaaner government in exchange for continued American economic cooperation. This policy nowhere implies support for apartheid; in fact, the administration has consistently condemned South Africa's human rights violations.

The United States should not abandon its constructive engagement policy, it should strengthen it. South Africa is a society undergoing the most fundamental of changes. Very fundamental pillars of apartheid have begun to erode in the face of overt economic reality. American businesses in the country have often been at the forefront of movements challenging the basic principles of apartheid. The demise of the practice of job reservation, as well as the recognition of black trade unions, were hastened by the actions of such American businesses as Ford Motor Company. Economic necessity has also tended to reverse the policy of segregating blacks to the homelands, in favor of urbanization. The economy remains as a pressure for the apartheid regime. It cannot expand with the exclusion of a black work force, which along with black economic power, has begun to grow.

The major sin of the Reagan administration is that it has not recognized the momentum of the situation. When Senator Edward Kennedy visited South Africa in January, he was confronted everywhere he went by mobs of angry young blacks who seem to be dedicated to a very violent solution to apartheid. Many of those dedicated to this violent solution favor Marxism in a post-apartheid South Africa, ignoring the abysmal failure of such Marxist African regimes as Ethiopia. It is time for Reagan to apply real pressure before the situation deteriorates too far.

But divestment would hurt South Africa's blacks and solve nothing. "To stand on American indigant principles by withdrawing diplomatically and economically from South Africa," writes Mangosuthu G. Buthelezi, hereditary leader of the Zulu people of South Africa, "is a luxury that the vastness of American wealth could afford. But indulgence in that luxury for the sake of purity of conscience, whatever genuine motives produce that conscience, would do no more than demonstrate the moral ineptitude of a great nation in the face of challenges from a remote area of the globe.

"Black South Africans have to confine their options to realities, and we have to seek to bring about radical change in such a way that we do not destroy the foundations of the future."

Good luck to them.

Practice what you preach

Money is the root of all evils. But the underlying meaning of this saying becomes more poignant when if refers to U.S. support of South Africa's apartheid system through investment. By injecting money into the racist government of Pretoria through loans to the public and private sectors or through investment in companies doing direct business or through their subsidiaries, the University of Massachusetts and other institutions of higher learning are leading actors in the oppression of 23 million blacks.

Perhaps University administrators and national leaders who believe total divestment is not the way best to begin to end the repugnant and immoral system should be reminded that since the inception of apartheid in 1948, 350 laws or acts have been enacted targeted solely on the black majority. Among these include the illegality of a black supervisor over a white employee. Ironically, this contradicts the Sullivan principle which encourages U.S. companies to advance blacks into managerial positions.

But other social and political conditions point to the opposition. Realistically speaking, how can a black have power over a white man when according to the system under which they live, he is less than a human? The principle in itself focuses only on a minute percentage of South African labor force. In June 1983, 127,000 South Africans were employed by U.S. companies. Only 90,000 of these worked for companies abiding by the Sullivan Principle.

Similarly, in 1982, blacks working in signatory companies only comprised 0.3 percent of low paid an unskilled jobs. Ninety-seven percent of the managers and 89 percent of all professional employees were white.

As Nobel Peace prize laureate Bishop Desmond Tutu said, the Sullivan principle is making U.S. and foreign investment a "buttress and evil system." Although black South Africans are and will be the decisive factor in the inevitable abolition of the repulsive system, the U.S. can help by divesting their 6,000 firms doing business in the country.

According to researcher Elizabeth Schmidt, U.S. companies control 33 percent of the motor vehicle market, 44 percent of the petroleum product market and 70 percent of the computer market. U.S.-made computers do not only run the Johannesburg Stock Exchange, but also aid in the management of the oppressive "pass law" system.

The oppressive regime of President P.W. Botha purchases tires from Goodyear and Firestone, some of which are used on police vehicles to maintain law and order as they claim they did when they murdered more than 300 black protesters of the white-minority government.

Although some claim divestment would be more harmful to blacks than whites because it would create more black unemployment and spark racial tension. But in fact, divestment would be the first step leading to democracy. By ending its support to apartheid rough divestment, America will make it more difficult for Pretoria to grant political and economical privileges to whites only.

With such policies such as President Reagan's "constructive engagement" and the Sullivan Principle, what America is doing is retarding the democratic process from being formed. America should practice what it preaches and it should start in South Africa by putting people before profits.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

We won't be bullied

In recent months, students have seen first hand how frequently campus administrators and police use poor judgment in dealing with events and issues relating to students.

We have seen how others in authority have both used and abused their power working in the best interests of themselves but against the best interests of students.

Others' poor judgment had invariably lead to students being treated with anything but respect. Wednesday night such an incident took place when the University of Massachusetts Police chose to arrest the speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate during the weekly meeting instead of immediately before or just after it.

Whether John L. Ruddock III is guilty of the felony he is charged with (jumping on and damaging a car belonging to a campus police officer at last week's divestment protest) is not at issue here, what is is the blatant lack of good judgment on the part of the Department of Public Safety, which entered the senate meeting while Ruddock was attempting to take roll call.

Why didn't the police arrest Ruddock earlier in the day or week?

UMass Chief of Police Robert G. Joyce said the reason was because police were busy with the 33 other arrests made May 1. Were they that busy that they couldn't find time to arrest Ruddock just before the senate meeting?

It seems obvious that by waiting one full week to arrest an individual the police were not concerned that a "criminal" was roaming the streets, so why not wait until after the senate meeting?

We believe the police action was an attempt to intimidate and show students what happens as a result of protests. Students are not children and are well aware that during a protest, arrest are always a possibility.

We need a police force which will protect students and enforce the law; we do not need one which attempts to bully students by arresting the speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate during a meeting.

This has been a year of living dangerously and desperately. Students have decided to leave the comforts of apathy and have crossed over to a life of dangerous living. Rallies, arrests, sit-ins and die-ins have awakened us from our lethargy. We have seen the bobbing protestors' signs and heard the heartfelt chants as students devote themselves to one issue after another. They call us to do the same — to abandon the dregs of drowsiness and to commit ourselves to the challenges of living dangerously. They desperately beckon us to seek the solutions that would save this earth from nuclear destruction, racial oppression and political subjugation.

As a journalist, I have been forced to come out from behind my usual shield of objectivity which often is conducive to non-commitment. While my fingers are still bound to these typewriter keys and not to the bobbing mass of protest signs, I have begun to feel a different desire for a solution. I see men and women clinging to revolutionary ideals but I don't see the solutions.

A revolutionary is one who sees a need and meets it through radical change. Jesus Christ was a revolutionary. His insight was so acute that He could look beyond the injustices and oppression that were commonplace in the Roman Empire and see the need. Unlike the people, He realized this injustice and oppression were surface manifestations of a deeper need that could not be met by political maneuvers. Thousands desperately rallied behind Christ to make Him their political king in hope that He would alleviate their oppression. But His plan was more radical. He said the only way to change the world was to change individuals. For an individual to realize that he or she needs to change is much more dangerous than clinging to ideals because it addresses the root issue. Jesus Christ said the real problem is sin, that is, doing what we want instead of what God wants. It is an attitude that everyone has and is characterized by active rebellion or passive indifference towards Him. Because of this attitude we are necessarily separated from the holy and perfect God.

This is a desperate dilemma that confronts each of us. But Christ offers a radical solution. He died on the cross to pay the penalty for our sins. And now the decision is ours. We can continue to do what we want and merely cling to revolutionary ideals or we can revolutionize our lives. Christ wants to be the Lord of our lives, forgive our sins and make us the kind of people He wants us to be. This is more than a religion, or culture or politics — it is a challenge. The challenge is this: will we individually invite Him to meet that need and be the Lord of our lives?

I applaud those who have nobly fought oppression and injustice by choosing to live dangerously. But to confront the real need, we must choose Jesus Christ.

A contradiction in policies

Rashid Sheedfar

Last week the Reagan administration, once more, revealed its intention of overthrowing the Nicaraguan government. Having failed to get the military aid to the contras passed in the House, the administration imposed a total economic embargo on Nicaragua. This move by the administration can be equated with an act of war against Nicaragua. Economic embargo is supposed to be an act of last resort, one step short of military engagement, when all diplomatic means are exhausted. In the case of Nicaragua, the pre-mature economic embargo was the most extreme measure available to the administration in the face of widespread opposition to direct military intervention.

The economic embargo comes at a time when Nicaragua still has diplomatic relations with the United States, and has repeatedly announced its commitment to the Contadora process as a negotiated settlement. It comes at a time when Nicaragua has promised to lift the national emergency situation and all its restrictions if the U.S. proxy war against her is ended, and has sent 100 Cuban advisors home as a gesture of good will. Finally, it comes at a time when Nicaragua, according to the New York Times Magazine's reporter, is still a pluralist society in which opposition, unlike other Latin American dictatorships, is tolerated, and in which private enterprise still dominates agriculture, cattle raising, commerce and industry.

It is true that the Nicaraguan government is not perfect. It is a rather inexperienced government in which there are hard liners as well as moderates. And there have been mistakes and cases of over-reaction. But it is also true that the Nicaraguan government does not want and cannot afford to alienate the United States, and has made many peace proposals to normalize relations with the U.S.

The economic embargo as a blind ideological and not logical move will inevitably have the following effects: a) it will further drive Nicaragua away from the United States and toward the Soviet Union; b) it will intensify anti-American feelings and will bolster the position of hard liners c) it will force the Nicaraguan economy into further centralization to cope with the adverse effects of the economic embargo. This is how the administration's prophecies about Nicaragua become self-fulfilling.

Nicaragua, having emerged from long years of Somoza dictatorship, is still young in its experience of democracy. It lacks a long and solid democratic tradition. Democracy is to be learned and perfected through a practical process. This process cannot be carried out under siege. The development and non-linear nature of democracy makes it a complex and multi-faceted issue in the context of the Third World. Those self-righteous, Westocentric, elite-minded policy-makers who tend to judge every Third World revolutionary society by their own yardstick are bound to come up with undesirable — or desirable — results. And what makes it more tragic is the application of double standards to revolutionary and fascist regimes. It is these double standards which account for the U.S. contradictory policies toward Nicaragua vs. South Africa or Chile.

Letters to the Editor

Holy cow!!!

This letter is not about a very pleasant topic. It is about horse shit. Last May I was amazed at the amount of horse manure deposited on the sidewalk in front of NOPE. However, what appalled me was that no one ever bothered to clean it up.

In an idyllic setting, such as the University, there is always a lot of talk about human rights. I firmly believe that the residents of Sylvan and the people who use NOPE have the right to walk to class on clean sidewalks.

Tonight as I was strolling down to Elab I barely missed stepping into the first deposit of the new spring season. This made me very mad. Here is just one more tension to add to the list of the usual end of semester frustrations. I certainly do not believe that it is the Physical Plant's place to clean up this disgusting mess. I ask that the people at Tilson Farm show the common courtesy of cleaning up after themselves to make springtime a little more pleasant for all of us.

Eileen Hebert
Sylvan

The paragraph in yesterday's policy editorial should have read:

The chancellor writes that recent suggestions advocating complete divestment "seem to suggest that the University should have nothing to do with companies that [illegible]e anything to do with companies that have anything to do with South Africa." While doing little more than adding a bit of sophomoric rhetoric to the debate, the chancellor is surprisingly close to our position.

Random Notes

BOG vs. Coors—forums and responsibility

The failure of the Board of Governors' Program Council-sponsored Coors forum highlights much of what is wrong with our student government. From Coors' initial corporate decision not to attend, to the petty politicized bickering at the forum itself, attitudes insured the destruction of what began as a noble concept.

It seems unfortunate that nobody came to defend Coors, for they really are the central issue. How can we determine if the BOG acted correctly or incorrectly if we can't even discuss the point of contention? Can we consider University policy toward South Africa without understanding the situation in that country?

Sadly, Monday's forum was an evening of obfuscation. The anti-Coors coalition lodged cheap shots about tangental issues (such as one enigmatic allusion to abortion), which probably did them more harm than good. The opposition, basically the group called Students for Government by Referenda, kept arguing for the constitutional right of free choice. It is both strange and telling that both sides fundamentally agreed on both these issues, but neither cared much to point that out or explain if the focus was to be Coors or the BOG.

I think that confusion mirrors a similar mire engendered by the wording of yesterday's referendum. That question asks if the board "overstepped its bound." From a legalistic perspective, a brief review of the board's constitution indicates most plainly that the answer is no. So the question becomes one of whether the BOG acted with or without a popular mandate. In seeking a response to that query, it appears appropriate and reasonable to put to the students as a whole the same conundrum that was brought before the board, specifically, should we sell Coors on this campus? However, when asked to modify the referendum question for purposes of clarification and focus, the representatives from Students for Government by Referenda were inflexible, claiming it not to be to their political advantage. That some should want to further mystify the issue with such tricky and divert-ing language seems both ironic and irresponsible as it originates from those claiming to be exclusively in the interest of students.

The current wording will make the results similarly unclear, for there is no way to divorce the jurisdictional problems from the more important moral one. Does a "yes" vote mean that the board is tyrannical, or does it suggest that in fact Coors should be sold in the Campus Center, or does it imply both, or should we try to infer nothing at all?

Indeed, that last interpretation may be the most reasonable, for a truly democratized decision depends on substantial knowledge. Educational information was what the forum attempted to provide. The low attendance, the absence of a student sitting on the anti-Coors panel, the poorly done moderating, and the evasion of substantive issues are what made the forum such a disappointment.

Disappointment is probably the right word. As two who worked on organizing the forum and who tried to make a responsible decision in the first place, we find ourselves disillusioned by the apathy the student body demonstrated. So many at the University fail to participate in elections it wouldn't much surprise us if we BOG members found ourselves without a mandate, but is it really our fault that the vast majority of students don't even vote? The board is not a group of nasty, self-serving oligarchs. Rather, it is comprised of students who attempt to be sensitive to both the entire student body and the democratic policies of this University.

Far too many would now complain, but refuse to take the time to learn exactly what is happening or be constructive before the fact. The destructive, acrimonious politics that are now enshrouding the Coors controversy only serve to further divide the campus. We should have the courage to either delegate authority to elected bodies or all take the time to be involved in every student issue. The only other alternative is delivering student rights into the even more unresponsive hands of the administration.

Fran Hegeler and Mark Friedman are BOG members.

A thought for Coors drinkers

You're riding your palamino along the foothills range of the Rocky Mountains. The rugged majestic Rockies to the right, the wide open prairie to the left. The bright sunshine, the clean, fresh air, the feeling of freedom and independence. It's just like the ads in magazines and on t.v. You reach into the cooler in your saddle bag and pop a cold one. What an image!

Now, another image:

Illegal union busting practices, a history of close affiliation with the Ku Klux Klan, the John Birch Society, suppression of minorities. Your basic industrial conservative extremist.

Coors sells an image to sell its product. But the real ideology behind the slick advertising is different.

A suggestion

Quite frankly, when I first had read in Nummo News and the Collegian that blacks on our campus were upset about the Collegian's use of the lower case when referring to blacks, I had thought it to be a petty gripe. Time and pondering have changed that view.

In America the term "black American" has become more than just a colloquialism. In the last decade and a half it seems to have replaced "Negro" in our vocabulary; yet, in today's Collegian it was still in the lower case. I don't think that this should have been so.

If I had seen German-American or Irish-American (my stock) in lower case then I think that I would have felt some pangs of resentment. There is no reason to further insult blacks on this campus by printing references to them in the lower case. I strongly suggest that the Collegian staff press their typewriter tab keys that one more time when referring to blacks and give the proprietors of that proper noun the dignity that they deserve.

Dana K. Smith

'Ethnic hate' must go

It is dispiriting to see the pages of the Collegian used for a negation of learning and a denial of history. I refer to the paid notice inserted by the "Turkish students at UMass" labeling the Armenian Genocide as "contrived, gratuitous and fallacious." Unsigned denunciations goading ethnic hate should be unwelcome on our campus.

Last semester I taught a seminar on Armenian culture which included a lengthy section on the genocide. We surveyed the literature and the ways in which that occurrence relates to similar historical events such as the Holocaust. Sadly, there are contemporary parallels in Asia and Africa. In order to confirm a fact of history, it should not be necessary for students to document horrors experienced by their grandparents. This is not a debate; the event speaks for itself. What we need to do is try to understand how these tragic happenings came to be, to learn from them, and to prevent their reoccurrence. In the Genocide in question, the issue will not be put to rest until present-day Turkish citizenry acknowledge a part of their history for which they are not personally responsible.

One good, one bad

While reading the Black Affairs section of the Collegian last Tuesday, I was treated to one of the most striking examples of what I consider to be quality editorializing, right along side a piece of far lesser quality.

The first piece was one by Norman Hill, which discussed Reagan's idea of enticing business into depressed regions through tax cuts. Hill points out that, for most businesses, taxes are the least of worries. Given this, Hill goes on to question the advisability of using tax breaks as incentive.

This piece is what editorializing is all about, the idea is to throw new perspectives on a problem, in an attempt to suggest a good solution. Contrast this with Sad Assad's piece.

In the very first paragraph, Assad uses all of the following phrases: attempts to fabricate, so-called threat, propaganda, disinformation, lies, jingoism, outright hypocrisy, and the Ronnie Horror Show. Assad then goes to say something about Nicaragua. The fact is, after all the name calling that went on earlier, one has lost interest in what Assad had to say. And to tell you the truth it was nothing new.

This type of editorializing is what liberal writers are going to have to avoid in the future. In order for an editorial to have any effect, it must give a new perspective on an idea, rather than simply reverting to name calling.

Just shut up, ok?

I had an exam on Tuesday, so Monday night I went to the 11th floor of the Tower Library to study. I thought that the tower would be quiet and that it would provide an atmosphere where I could concentrate. Right? Wrong.

As a matter of fact, the noise was something abnormal for a library. Everyone was talking, laughing, but not studying. I tried to concentrate among such turmoil, but that proved impossible.

Then, I had an idea. Since people go to the library to socialize, instead of studying, the administration should turn it into a place for social gatherings. The different floors could be refurnished, with nice, comfortable chairs, smoking should be allowed, and even drinking.

Yes the more I think about it, the more I am inclined to believe that turning the tower into a social club would be a great idea. Indeed, this would be the best alternative for a place where studying apparently is not done.

Ride Across Lake exhilerating

The Ride Across Lake Constance
By Peter Handke

By BRADFORD VERTER
Collegian Staff

After the Music Theater Guild's sour and violent reaction to my colleague Ramin Zahed's negative review of West Side Story, I would be terrified, simply terrified if I had to write anything bad about the UMass Theater Department's production of The Ride Across Lake Constance by Peter Handke, currently at the Rand: They might take out a full page ad condemning me.

Luckily, I don't have anything bad to say about the play. The production is a masterful one, rife with restrained energy and pregnant with insidious tension.

Handke's work has often been called "anti-theatrical," and not without justification. We know little about the people on the stage before us, and do not learn much as the play progresses. There is no real action or movement, and the characters do not seem to grow.

The title refers, so the program notes tell us, to a ballad about a horseman who, after riding across a frozen lake, finds out after how thin the ice was, and subsequently dies of fright. Handke brings us on a ride across the thin fabric of logic and rationality that constitutes our society. The logic of the characters' dialogue is undeniable, yet they seem mad, twisted and tyrannical. Handke leads us to question ourselves in this surrealistic union of Beckett, Ionesco and Brecht.

The dialogue presents some interesting questions, but does not necessarily answer them: Need gesture or expressions always connotate meanings, or are they valid in themselves as gestures or expressions? Will logic lead to tyranny? (If so, what will illogic lead to?) What is the nature of Dreams? One of the characters asks: "Am I in Earth or Heaven or Hell? Am I sleeping or waking?"

Handke further confounds us by bringing us to question what exactly a character is: the program lists the cast as playing themselves (This is a trifle misleading — In the original version the characters are classic German actors, such as Erich von Stroheim. Our equivalent would be having the cast playing Humphrey Bogart or John Barrymore, not themselves). As Mona Heinze adeptly points out in the program notes, "In The Ride Across Lake Constance we do not encounter actors as characters in a fictional environment but, simply, (as) actors on a stage."

Regardless of whether the cast is playing themselves or fictional characters or some bizzare hybridization of the two, they are excellent. David Alun Spencer gives an intense, brilliantly controlled performance, and is clearly the jewel in their crown. The rest of the cast (Scott M. Verissimo, Amy Goudreau, Mark Burridge, Danielle DiVecchio) is similarly talented, and deserve particular mention. Meredith Fink and Amy Bryant Cahoon are bright and sprighty as the quickly disillusioned members of conformist society, and Marie L. Hart is fine as the mysterious Woman in the White Scarf.

The set is magnificent: there is an elaborately marbled floor. There are high, fluted columns flanking a huge, carpeted staircase. The costumes are beautiful and elegant. Julian M. Olf's direction is exactly and superb. The play is astounding. Go see it.

Mark Burridge demonstrates his power over Danielle DiVecchio in The Ride Across Lake Constance tonight and tomorrow at the Rand.

Vintage Truffaut

By JON STRYMISH
Collegian Staff

Francois Truffaut's movies were maybe more about life than any artworks ever made. The Green Room, based on the short story "The Altar of Death" by Henry James, was Truffaut's attempt at making a movie about death. Truffaut plays a man, Davenne, obsessed by the memory of his dead friends, including his wife, who died four months after they were married. He says he has come to the point in life where the dead outnumber the living.

The movie opens with a haunting World War I montage. I expected No Exit, but in the first scene Truffaunt was telling off a priest, and I knew that this was going to be one of the most moving and beautiful films I had ever seen. Because Truffaut died of brain cancer last year, The Green Room will stand as a final monument to him.

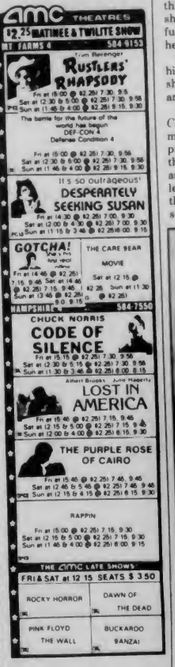
Davenne is a journalist on The Globe, a ghost magazine from a long time ago. He writes obituaries which his boss says are brilliant. He wrote 41 obituaries the year before, and never repeated himself once. Nathalie Baye plays a younger woman who had met Davenne very briefly in a bomb shelter during the war.

Davenne had been kind to her when she was an adolescent, and she remembered him for fifteen years. She says, "You talked to me like an adult." Now Baye would do anything to repay Davenne for his simple kindness, but he can't get it through his thick head, because he is obsesed by death. As she tries to make him love her back, they interact beautifully together. They drive together, him being spaced out and her being so gentle.

Davenne tries escaping life but can't; it is always chasing him. Baye chases him around the garden. The flickering shadows of the candles in his altar to the dead always chase around his face.

The central moment in Truffaut's career came in Small Change, when he told an assembled class of children that we must always love and protect each other. Davenne fails to protect Baye and because of this there is an incredible pain in the movie. Davenne has failed to live up to Truffaunt's creed and is punished with blindness. His cinematographer the legendary Nester Amendros said, "despite the somber theme, this movie was a joy to make." It is indeed a joy to see.

Peter Levesque will perform a selection of jazz numbers of 6 p.m. on Sunday at the Hampden Theater.



CINEMASCOOP
by Count Ramin Zahed

The Count's visa expires

He bids Amherst adieu

When I am dead, I hope it may be said: "His sins ere scarlet, but his reviews were read."
-Belloc

One of the most thrilling experiences of my college life has been writing this column on Fridays. How vividly do I remember the day that Chris Marini, our beautiful Arts editor came up to me and said, "You, you foreigner, we need a film columnist. You seem pretty derranged. Your mother cooked your pet chicken and fed it to you. That qualifies you perfectly for the job." I was also going bald prematurely, so it really made me look tailored for the position. I haven't regretted one second of it.

Discussing upcoming films and the current cinema was truly the next best thing to having tea with Nastassja Kinski or an afternoon visit to Tilson Farm. It sends shivers down my royal spine to think that this indeed is that last column of the year. Deportation is next on my agenda. Anyway, before I leave this holy establishment to become Ms. Kinski's private secretary in Hungary, I have a few more scoops to end my controversial career.

Since I won't be around for Oscar week next year, I thought it appropriate to mention a few films which have a great chance at sweeping the awards for 1986. Out of Africa seems to be the ultimate winner. Based on the memoires of Baroness Isak Dineson (Ah! the talents of royalty!!) who left the comforts of bourgeois existence for a humanitarian quest in Africa, the film boasts Meryl Streep and Robert Redford as leads. Then there's Eleni with three Academy favorites, Kate Nelligan (Eye of the Needle), John Malkovich (Places in the Heart) and the remarkable Linda Hunt. Based on the true story of Nicholas Gage set during the Greek civil war of 1948, this gem is colleague Mariane Meuse's pick of the year. Richard Attenborough's screen adaptation of the popular musical A Chorus Line and the Meryl Streep-Sting vehicle Plenty are two other obvious choices. Finally, there's Prizzi's Honor, the Jack Nicholson, Kathleen Turner, John Huston collaboration number. Remember these movies for next year's Academy awards.

To end my line-up of summer attractions, I should mention TheBride, the Frankenstein a la Sting movie. The best scene of the film is said to be the part where Sting sings "Don't Stand So Close to Me" to his mechanical monster. (Kidding, kidding!) Also look for Tina Turner as Auntie Entity (looking very much like my own aunt) in Mel Gibson's third installment of Mad Max. Note the lovely pictures.

I spoke of graduation earlier on and should mention St. Elmo's Fire, the summertime Big Chill about a gang of Georgetown graduates facing, Yikes, THE REAL WORLD. Aauuuugghhhhhh! Cinemascoop veteran Rob Lowe is reunited with buddies, Ally Sheedy, Judd Nelson and Emilio Estevez. By the way, I have to give Rob a lot of credit. I consistently talked about his lack of talent and the poor soul never wrote a letter to Rita Murphy, my dear colleague at the Editorial/Opinion section of the paper. I should also thank Drew Barrymore who never paid for the half-page advertisement (a fake good review) and the young lady is only nine. A certain guild should learn lessons in maturity and respect from her.

Ally Sheedy, Judd Nelson, Emilio Estevez, Demi Moore, Rob Lowe, Mare Winningham and Andrew McCarthy drown their Georgetown blues in St. Elmo's Fire.

Weekend Winner: If you can find time to escape the impending doom of finals, I would certainly recommend a visit to the Pleasant Street Theatre for a last reunion with the late Francois Truffaut. The Green Room, the Henry James story of a man obsessed with death, is one of the French master's final achievements. Here's your chance to realize how great a loss Truffaut's death was to the world of cinema and film-lovers around the world. Albert Brooks' yuppie comedy Lost in America finally makes its valley premiere at the Mt. Farm Cinema. Rob Reiner's parody of a rock documentary This is Spinal Tap lights up Amherst Cinema tonight and Saturday night.

Local Losers: Please see Killer Question.

Killer Question: What has its head in the clouds, has a lot of vanity and little talent, shamelessly pays $180 for a good review in the newspaper, and badmouths an honest critic? Yes, it's the infamous Music Guild. In the words of Joan Rivers whose vulgarity matches the group's collective ego, "Grow Up."

Seriously, I would like to thank Nancy Bukar, Ed Jeye, Don Lipper, Kevin Dwyer, Tom Harrington, Marcie Moscowitz, Mariane Mouse, and all the other repliers for their continual support of the weekly contests. I have a lot of glossies and posters waiting at the desk for you.

I don't want this to be an Oscar speech but I would like to thank the whole staff of the newspaper for their support, Ellen Reynolds for her consistent interruptions; Bill Cole, Ed Jeye, Jane Ciarcello and Dave Swanson for putting up with me at Brooks, Tony Betros, Jon Strymish, Brad Verter, Pete Wissoker, Sue Izzo, Tom Harrington, Dan Culnan, Herb Ramy, Elaine Senay and the divine Marini who kept the arts desk glowing with brilliance all semester. A special thanks goes to BethAnn Moskov for a great time at the movies.

EPILOGUE: My mother once said, "Ramin, you'll never amount to anything." Now, I can look her in the face and say, "Mom, you were totally right." Thank you for reading Cinemascoop.

"There is a thin line between genius and insanity. I have erased this line."
-Oscar Levant

Jennifer Beals is wrapped around Sting's fingers in the upcoming The Bride.

What's love got to do with it? A bleached Tina Turner awaits Mel Gibson in Mad Max III.

THE BIG SHIRT
Remember Claudette Colbert in "It Happened One Night"? In one famous scene, she wore Clark Gable's pajama top, its huge proportions emphasizing her tiny ones. This year we can all imitate Miss Colbert, because a major trend of 1985 is The Big Shirt.
Originated by Italian designers, the big shirt was instantly picked up by fashion leaders all over the world. Here in the states, oversized-shirts appear in the collections of every designer from Clavin Klein to Norma Kamali.
Fabrics range from linen to chiffon to stiff, brightly printed cotton. Smock-like shirts can be worn to the office, and gossamer ones after dark. The style covers up every figure flaw because it covers every figure.
Big shirts have other virtues, too. They highlight a graceful head and pretty hands. And they span two recent fashion directions — the "forward" trend toward androgynous dressings and the "backward" trend to femininity.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Lester recounts Black history and youth

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Julius Lester, professor of Afro-American Studies at the University of Massachusetts calls his new book, Do Lord Remember Me, one about "remembering."

In addition to being about the history of blacks in the South, "from slavery to the Civil Rights Movement, and in particular the role of the black minister, at a time when to survive was a triumph," Lester admits his first adult novel is semi-autobiographical. Rev. Joshua Smith, the 83 year old protagonist, is a character based on his father, a minister and Rev. Smith's younger son is "loosely" based on himself.

"(The book) its about how he is trying to understand how his life has been. He's trying to see whether or not he has left anything of his life behind."

Lester said he was like the son who joined the army telling his father, "I'll be everything you're not." He added although Rev. Smith thought his son probably loved him, he was afraid to admit he also loved him.

Because the book is so personal, he said it "is really a part of me. The other books, once they come out, they were just books. They weren't a part of me anymore."

Although the novel isn't much different from his other works, Lester thinks Do Lord is "special." What makes it special is the language, he said. The black voice of slavery is in the book. The southern black speech that I grew up with is in it, and there is a kind of biblical voice in it too. All of these voices melt together. The concentration of blacks in the South makes the South the natural source for black cultural expression."

Do Lord is written in four sections labeled after parts of the day. Rev. Smith dies at the end of the third section, Night. The book is not in chronological order. "This is because I did not want the book to end with his death, because this is really a book about his life," he said.

Unlike Lester's previous book, Do Lord is not political. "Some of my previous books were political, but I would say that when I was political, I really wasn't political. I never felt that politics was going to change the world. I felt that politics was one means of making things better, but only one means."

Lester is the author of Watch Out Whitey, Black Power is Gonna Get Your Mama, Black Folktales, All is Well. He has been awarded the New York Times Book of the Week Award, and received the 1984 Distinguished Teacher's Award, at UMass.

Play emphasizes diversity and unity

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

How would you describe how a group of people can be like a rainbow?

Antonio (Luis A. Abad) had to write a story for class and he succeeded in "A Musical Dream."

Before finishing his homework, he went to bed and dreamt he was in Puerto Rico. There, he encounter people arguing on who had contribued more to the making of the country's traditional music.

"A Musical Dream" a play performed by Sorobei emphasized the contributions by Taino Indians, Africans and Spanish people to the island's traditional music.

If the melting pot theory is indeed true, then Puerto Rico is the perfect example of it, as the children showed in the play, produced recently at the University of Massachusetts.

Performed in both Spanish and English, it showed the complexity of the Puerto Rican people not only in music, but also in every other social aspect in which each cultural group have played a major role.

While the Tainos had been on the island before the Spaniards or the Africans and had introduced the maracas, the flute and the drum, the Spaniards brought the guitar and the Africans the rhythm and the conga drums.

"You can stop arguing, you have contributed equally to the making of Puerto Rican music," Antonio said after listening to each argument and hearing their.

The play was not only educational, but also enjoyable where the children took pride in presenting the audience a part of their culture and themselves.

The children's pride gave it an added touch for they were not merely reciting what they had learned, but also living a history many tend to forget to teach their children.

Sorobei, whose children range in age from 7 to 13 should be applauded for their hard work and success in presenting the many faces of Puerto Rican society.

UMass students Edwin cancel directed the play with extraordinary success, as the children showed in their excellent performance.

Linda Velazquez and Eligio Acosta should also be lauded for their strenuous work in making each dance number superb.

The children should also be given a special recognition for taking the time to not only learn, but also share with others who they are. Sorobei is comprised of: Reamsi and Sara Orellana, children of Ester Orellana, Maritza Nieto, daughter of Sonia Nieto, Luis A. Abad, son of Eila Robles, Vanesa Melendez, daughter of Janet Perez; Mariana and Elena Cruz, daughters of Beatriz Gonzales and Imani Rosa.

Sorobei was created in 1982 to give Latino children in the Amherst area a place to get together to learn about their history, their music and their language.

Attention all artists...

If you know how to draw and think you have a sense of humor, the Collegian is accepting submissions for daily comic strips for next fall. Entries should be in black ink on plain white paper or posterboard; 10 strips minimum should be submitted to Anne McCrory in the newsroom, 113 Campus Center, by May 15. All types of strips encouraged. Lend your humor and artistic talent to the pages of New England's largest college daily today!

★★★★★★★★★★★★★★★★

Today: A very nice day, sunny with highs in the 80s. Great day to watch lacrosse or sunbathe.
Tonight: It will be clear with lows in the 60s, very comfortable.
Tomorrow: Warm and partly sunny with highs near 85 degrees. Great day to go to Orchard Hill or watch softball and not do homework.

Editor's note: Bloom County will most likely not appear this week because the Collegian has not received the strips. Its absence is not due to censorship. The Collegian is investigating the Status of the contract and we regret any inconvenience to our readers.

Frattaroli solidifies young UM infield corps

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

One of the major downfalls for the young University of Massachusetts softball team this year has been errors. They have led to a great deal of the Minutewomen's 22 losses, a school record.

The infield has been especially vulnerable, committing 58 errors this season. The entire team only committed 52 in 1984.

One error would lead to a series of errors and a loss.

In the last two weeks, that hasn't been the case for UMass. And one of the big reasons is two-time all-conference selection, sophomore Carol Frattaroli.

"I think Carol is basically holding the infield together," coach Elaine Sortino said. "She has put herself right out there as a team leader."

Frattaroli has become a leader in a very young Minutewomen infield. Sophomore Debbie Cole is at third, and Martha Jamieson, first base, and shortstops Paige Kopcza and Alisa Fila are freshmen.

"Carol is helping to hold the composure of the infield and we didn't have that in the beginning of the season," Sortino said. "The composure has a lot to do with Carol's presence and the team's confidence in her."

Frattaroli, a two-time All-State (Division I) selection from Stamford (Conn.) Catholic, said, "I try to help out because I know what it's like to be a freshman.

"We all contribute a lot. We have a lot of young people and we're finally putting it together, now."

Frattaroli constantly talks to, cheers and encourages her teammates on the field, in the dugout, in warmups, and in practice. She is the one that badgers the team on the bench to cheer for the hitter.

"I like to keep yelling," she said. It keeps her mind in and on the game, she noted.

Frattaroli is now batting .277 after a season-high of .307 about a week ago. She leads the team in sacrifice bunts, 20, and shares the RBI lead, 13, with Cathy Reed. Last year, Frattaroli struggled at the plate with a .207 mark.

"I told myself that I was a good base-hitter and not a long ball hitter," she said. Confidence in her game helps the sophomore through those occasional dry spells.

But this woman's speciality is defense. And there is no hesistation about hitting the dirt for the ball. "In the second semester, I live for softball," she said.

She started playing ball at age nine in little Miss Softball America in Stamford and with the help of her Dad and two brothers, one of who got a full baseball scholarship to Maryland, Frattaroli played and played a lot.

"I always played and played a lot," she said. "I could play every summer." Now every summer, it's playing with the Stanford Flames, a Class A softball team one step below the major women's fast-pitch leagues.

Frattaroli never played second base before her freshman year at UMass. She was, and still is with the Flames, a shortstop.

"I like both positions" Frattaroli said. "With Lynn (Stockley, UMass left-handed pitcher), I get a lot of action and it's a lot of fun."

It's a lot of fun and work for Frattaroli, who has played in 46 of UMass' 47 starts this year and she believes this year's team, 11-of-15 of whom are freshman and sophomores including herself, is a good one.

"It is coming together for us," she said. "I think we're going places. We're good. It's a young team."

"Carol has really turned herself around in being a team leader and it's just not isolated to the playing field," Sortino said.

And with a solid leader in the infield, one that has been missing since Allyson Rioux graduated last year, Frattaroli has helped turn the UMass softball season right around.

Wagon falls 14-7 in softball tilt

By JEKI DESIKUS
Collegian Staff

Sly and Joey put together a five run fifth inning to put away the 1985 men's intramural softball championship yesterday at Lower Boyden Field.

In a team effort highlighted by consistent hitting, the champions defeated The Wagon 14-7.

The women's and co-recreational championships were also decided last night at Lower Boyden. Results were not available at press time, but will appear in next week's Collegian.

UMass, now 24-22-1, was swept by the Panthers, 2-0 and 4-0 on April 21 and the Panthers, 31-12, have gone 11-2 since then.

Adelphi's Jule Bolduc struck out 15 in 4-0 Panther win but Sortino said, "We'll know what to expect. We won't be taken by surprise."

No one on the UMass team is graduating. Junior Lynn Stockely (15-8, and record setting 0.43 ERA) and freshman Lisa Rever (7-8, 0.76 ERA) are the probable starters. The old ERA record of 0.90 belongs to Cathy Reed, set in 1983.

Freshman Paige Kopcza (.400) is the team's leading batter and Carol Frattaroli

(see related story, page 18) and Reed lead the team in RBI with 13.

"We have had a steady diet of good pitching, lately," Sortino said. "We're really looking forward to the game."

The baseball team will be looking for two more wins as they take on the Huskies of Northeastern this afternoon at Lorden Field.

Coach Dick Bergquist will be looking to give some of his younger pitchers more experience. Mick Wydra (1-2) and Pat McNanmara (0-1) will be the starters.

Second baseman Jack Bloise (.306) is out for the year with a pulled leg muscle.

SPORTS

The game: UM vs. Syracuse

Number one Orangemen in for Gorilla war

been able to concentrate solely on the game. Conditions are prime for an upset.

"I keep on telling our guys, 'we just have to go out there and play like hell and hope for the best.' Last season we looked a little tentative because the game could've got us into the national playoffs, this year we know our season is over after this game, so why not throw everything we have at them?" Garber said.

For Syracuse, UMass is simply another roadblock on its way to the national title game. The Orange won the national title in 1983 and were runners-up to Johns Hopkins last season.

"We expect that UMass will come at us hard, just as most teams do. Whenever we play, it's a big game for our opponents. They're well-coached and I'm sure it'll be a tough game," SU coach Roy Simmons Jr. said.

Syracuse and Umass feature 14 players from West Genesee high school, a Syracuse prep power. The players on both teams are familiar with each other (the teams have also played the last nine seasons) and do not want to spend the summer listening to victory boasts.

The Gorillas are led by sophomore attackman Tom Carmean and his 23 goals and 33 assists. Carmean will line up on attack with seniors Mike Fiorini (19 goals and 14 assists) and Tom Lukacovic (22 goals and 12 assists) Carmean will set up behind the goal with Fiorini and Lukacovic in the corners looking to spread the defense.

At midfield, Seamus McGovern will take UMass's faceoffs and a good game is needed by the junior to keep the ball away from the Orange. Greg Fisk, Stephen Moreland and Matt O'Reilly must control the ball and avoid losing it to the Syracuse middies who are excellent at creating a fast break situation.

Defensively, UM's Tom Aldrich, Mark Stratton and Gerry Bryne will have to contain SU's scorers while the defensive midfielder unit of Ted Spencer, Neal Cunningham and Pat and Scott Craig will be responsible for keeping the Orange's shooters from scoring on the perimeter.

Garber said that midfielders Karl Hatton, Glenn Stephens, Ken Freeman and Doug Musco also have to give solid minutes to beat Syracuse.

"These guys need to get in there and go one-on-one to the cage," the coach said. "We can create situations for them to score."

Sophomore Ed Boardman (who scored two goals in a 19-13 rout of Post on Tuesday) and freshman Kelley Carr will work in on the attack.

Goalie Gerry Moreau will have his hands full, but the fifth-year senior is capable of keeping UM in the game.

Syracuse is throwing an arsenal of offense at UMass. All-American Tim Nelson (14 goals and 53 assists) will feed Brad Kotz (30 goals), his brother Tom (22 goals) or Todd Curry (19 goals).

"I had a dream last night and we won 10-9," Garber said. "Let's hope that dreams can come true."

UMass defenseman Mark Stratton (left) chases Delaware's Pete Jenkins (r) earlier this season. The Gorillas face number one Syracuse today at 3 p.m.

What to look for today

Keys for UMass: The Gorillas have to keep the ball away from the high scoring Orange attack. Brad Kotz (# 30) Tim Nelson (# 1) and Tom Korrie (# 42). UM will put Tom Aldrich (# 14) on Nelson and Mark Stratton (# 22) on Kotz. On offense, the Gorillas must be patient and get good shots. UM's midfielders must beat their man from the outside, draw the defenseman and feed the attackman.

Keys for Syracuse: The Orange can score with anyone. They need to recognize UM's defensive slides and feed the open man. The defense has to contain Tom Carmean (# 15) from behind the cage.

Gorillas are primed for an upset of the Orange

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

"For us to beat Syracuse," University of Massachusetts lacrosse coach Dick Garber explained, "We've got to get great efforts from our best players."

Who are these players behind the helmets? Here is a closer look at the 1985 Gorillas:

Offense:

Mike Fiorini (Senior, #25) A three year starter who just passed the 100 point plateau for his career, Fiorini is third on the team with 19 goals and 14 assists for 33 points.

Tom Lukacovic (Senior, #22) Second leading goal scorer for UM with 22, led the team last season with 23. A good rider who is shooting 22-for-54 this year.

Tom Carmean (Sophomore, #15) A transfer from Farmingdale junior college, Carmean leads UMass with 23 goals and 33 assists. He is seventh in the nation in assists. Good feeder from behind the cage.

Midfield:

Seamus McGovern (Junior, #32) UM's faceoff man has a goal and two assists this season. He has won 66 percent of the draws. McGovern has improved defensively and has a hard shot from outside.

Stephen Moreland (Junior, #13) Moreland worked his way into the starting line-up with three goals this season. He is a strong defensive player with a good shot.

Greg Fisk (Junior, #9) His 17 goals are fourth for the Gorillas. An all-New England selection as a sophomore, Fisk is a good stickhandler and leads UM with 65 ground balls.

Matt O'Reilly (Sophomore, #10) O'Reilly will replace McGovern after the faceoff. Rebounded from a season-opening injury to score 14 goals and dish out 11 assists.

Defense:

Tom Aldrich (Junior, #14) "Bird" can score as evidenced by his four career goals at UM. Usually plays opponent's high scorer. Excellent man-to-man defender.

Mark Stratton (Junior, #22) Handles the ball well on the clear for the Gorillas. Stratton will face Syracuse's All-American midfielder Brad Kotz today because of his tight man-to-man play.

Gerry Byrne (Junior, #36) Has played well in the past few games, effectively shutting down his man. Byrne has improved his ball handlong as the season has progressed.

Goal:

Gerry Moreau (Senior, #29) Returns for a fifth season, eligible because of a 1982 redshirt. He has a .516 save percentage for 10 goals-per-game. Separated his shoulder against Cornell. Throws an excellent outlet pass to his defensemen.

Baseball, softball in action

When Adelphi University's Regina Dooley was a freshman, she hit a two-out double that knocked the University of Massachusetts softball team out a possible NCAA playoff berth.

Now that Dooley is a senior, UMass can return that favor in 1 p.m. doubleheader tomorrow at the NOPE field. If UMass takes just one of tomorrow's games, it can deal the 18th ranked Panthers a deadly blow to their NCAA playoff hopes.

The UMass baseball team will put its 21-19 record on the line when they host Northeastern in a 2 p.m. doubleheader today at Lorden Field.

"If ever we were ready to play, it's Saturday," softball coach Elaine Sortino said. "It's a good way to end our season. We're mentally and physically ready."

Reports warn students of exam stress

By BETHANNE MOSKOV
Collegian Staff

Along with warm temperatures and sunny days, spring also brings final papers and exams, causing a lot of unwanted stress for most college students.

According to a Blue Cross and Blue Shield report from Health Education at the University of Massachusetts, stress is "a body's physical and mental response to things that frighten, excite, confuse, endanger or irritate an individual."

Stress, in varying degrees, is a normal part of daily life. But each person has stress tolerance limits, which, if constantly exceeded, may cause various physical and emotional problems.

Some students like to go on to the balconies and scream their lungs out for 10 or 15 minutes to get rid of frustration.
—Orchard Hill Resident Assistant Dave Swanson

A report by doctors at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton cited some common stress symptoms such as headaches, fatigue, insomnia, nail-biting, lip-tightening, perspiration and heart palpitations. The report stated that there is also considerable evidence that prolonged stress can lead to high blood pressure, heart ailments and ulcers.

Health Services offers a pamphlet containing some hits to help alleviate stress during finals.

First is time management, or learning to use one's time properly. Also important is eating a balanced diet, daily exercise and enough sleep. Most important, according to UHS, is caution with drug use. Caffeine and nicotine may offer instant relief, but will greatly increase stress in the long run.

On a college campus, such as UMass, one of the largest contributing causes of stress is final exam week. When finals approach many students realize that they have a semester's worth of work to complete in only a few days. Students start to exist on coffee, candy bars and cigarettes as a form of extra energy. Sleep goes to the bottom of the priority list and all night study sessions become very popular. According to University Health Services these are major stress factors, and put a student into "exam alert."

Sean Littlewood, a junior history major, said, "When it comes right down to the wire the two things that keep me going is coffee, and fear of failing.

"Stress tends to make me very tense, and short-tempered. Little things that should not bother me, start to," Littlewood said. "The best way I know to alleviate end-of-the-semester stress is to take some time out and go to the movies. A good meal is also very helpful."

Tony Padovano, a first-year student, noted the marked differences and hard adjustments from high school finals to college finals.

"Professors at college are much tougher and stricter about deadlines. Exams tend to emphasize a lot of work that was supposed to be done outside the classroom.

HEY SPORTS FANS — The Tubes lead singer Fee Waybill, clad in a UMass T-shirt, performs his strange antics before a crowd of about 7,000 UMass students at yesterday's UPC concert.

Sun prevails; bands rock at pond concert

By JON STRYMISH
Collegian Staff

Despite a forecast of rain and a 90-minute delay, a crowd of about 7,000 UMass students yesterday partied and danced its way through four bands and six hours of music at the Campus Pond.

The concert, which featured the Tubes the S.O.S. band, Johnny Copeland and Elliot Easton, began about 1:30 with Easton, and climaxed about 7:45 with three songs by the Tubes, including their youth anthem, "White Punks on Dope."

No information was available last night concerning arrests or injuries.

The crowd enlarged slowly in the fenced-off area around the campus pond, as students gulped beer, played frisbee and picknicked. People started dancing with the second band, Johnny Copeland, a blues singer from Houston, Texas. Copeland, who played for an hour, got the crowd to its feet. Susan Thibedeau of WMUA called Copeland, "the greatest" while saying opener Easton was, "lame." Thibedeau called the Tubes, "a poor choice" saying, "It was an embarrassement to spend the student activities money on it."

The S.O.S. Band, a funk unit from Atlanta, Georgia, played their hit, "Just Be Good To Me" in a fast-paced set that echoed throughout the campus, bringing most people to their feet.

The Tubes, who played under a shadow of clouds, told the audience, "this is heaven."

Lead Singer Fee Waybill, who is the centerpiece of the band, played out a skit for each song. Waybill's antics included a Louis XIV version of "White Punks on Dope" and a mermaid and octopus dance during "Sushi Girl." During the song "Hey

Graduation features exiled South African poet

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

Exiled South African poet and opponent of apartheid, Dennis Brutus, will give the main address at commencement on Saturday May 25. Brutus will receive an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters degree.

Other honorary degree recipients include: Vermont's first woman governor, Madeleine May Kunin, and economist Marshall I. Goldman. Both will receive Doctor of Laws degrees. Kunin, a 1956 graduate of the University of Massachusetts and a former editorial page editor of the Collegian holds the highest public office yet attained by a UMass graduate. Goldman, an associate director of the Russian Research Center at Harvard University is a specialist in the Soviet economy.

Northeastern University President Kenneth Gilmore Ryder and political scientist George Goodwin Jr., will receive Doctor of Humane Letters degrees, and a Doctor of Science degree will be presented to Sidney Topol, chairman of Scientific-Atlanta, a communications satellite firm.

The student speaker, selected from entries of seniors by the Office of Student Affairs, is Ellen M. Ryder, 21, a Journalism/English major. Ryder, a resident assistant in Field House, is from Peabody.

Caps, gowns, tassels and invitations are now available at no charge at the Textbook Annex with an I.D. and presentation of the degree earned.

Questions still remain on alcohol, party policy

Policy doesn't address effects of drinking age

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

The proposed residential area alcohol beverage and party policies have yet to specifically address the effects they will have on campus and how they will be enforced, University administrators and students said.

The policies are now being revised in accordance with the new state legal drinking age, which will be raised to 21 in June. While the University Alcoholic Beverage Policy is expected to be added soon to the Board of Trustee's agenda for approval, the residential area alcohol policy committee has only drafted its first proposal.

The residential alcohol policy addresses the rule and regulations concerning alcohol consumption in the residential areas. The University alcohol policy, on the other hand, establishes rules for the entire University community.

"The problem the committee had was knowing that a lot of people are not of drinking age and then trying to develop a policy that abides by the laws of the state but is not restrictive to those people of age," Susan Allen, a residential education coordinator said.

University administrators estimate that more than 80 percent of the students will not be of legal drinking age as of June 1. This has prompted students and administrators to ask how the proposed residential alcohol policy would be enforced on campus.

Allen said the committee has been concerned with the alcohol policy enforcement and the legal responsibility of residential assistants and residence directors. However, their legal responsibilities have not been clearly defined in the policy yet, she said.

According to the draft, "Policy enforcement is the shared responsibility of all members of the Residence Hall community. The Residential environment should promote a

'We want to kill the Pope' chant youths in Utrecht

UTRECHT, Netherlands (AP) — Hundreds of anti-establishment youths, chanting "We want to kill the pope," battled police yesterday near a conference hall where Pope John Paul II heard liberal Dutch Catholics challenge church doctrine.

About 1,000 youths marched to within several hundred yards of the Jaarbeurs industrial conference center where John Paul, on the second day of his visit to the Netherlands, was meeting Dutch Catholic clergy and lay people.

When riot police blocked the way, some youths began throwing rocks.

Helmeted officers responded with tear gas and baton charges in a half-hour melee, driving the young people back toward the center of Utrecht, a university city in central Holland and the seat of the Dutch Roman Catholic church.

In two separate incidents, officers surrounded by demo strators fired pistol shots, police chief Jan Wiarda said. None of the shots was believed to have hit anyone.

Wiarda said 14 people had been arrested in the rioting. Three policemen and one demostrator were injured. All were treated and released.

The police chief said a bystander, not involved in the rioting, died of a heart attack. He was not identified.

Dotson freed from prison

CHICAGO (AP) - Gov. James R. Thompson yesterday freed Gary Dotson, commuting his sentence after Dotson served six years in prison for a rape his former accuser now says never happened.

Thompson, who refused to grant Dotson a pardon proclaiming his innocence, said he was acting "to do justice and mercy" and that "no good purpose would be served" by returning Dotson to prison, where he was serving a 25- to 50-year sentence.

"I'm happy because I know I'm not going back to prison," Dotson said at his family's home, where he watched the televised proceedings. "We're all going to sit around and get loaded."

Dotson, who has been free on bond and would have been eligible for bond in three years, said he would continue trying to clear his name, either through a new trial or by continuing his appeal before an appellate court.

An arresting event held for charity

Cancer society's goal $10,000

By CAROLYN ROSENBAUM
Collegian Correspondent

A sheriff, a disc jockey and 14 other people were thrown into jail Friday in Northampton as part of a two-day fundraising "jailathon" held by the Hampshire Country Unit of the American Cancer Society.

For a donation of $25, people had their friends arrested by a uniformed police officer. Rosemary Tarantino, chairwoman of the event, said, "The officer will arrive with phony charges, arrest the person, and bring him to the jail cell in Pulaski Park. A judge will sentence him to raise a certain amount of bail and they'll be given a portable telephone with which to do it. We'll let them out in an hour or so if they can't raise the money," Tarantino said.

"Some people have agreed to be picked up. The sheriff himself agreed," she said.

Al Peterson, morning disc jockey at WHMP radio, was the first person arrested Friday morning.

"They picked me up while I was on the air at 9:45 a.m. on charges of polluting the airwaves. The station raised $50 to get me out and $75 to have them keep me locked up all day," Peterson said.

Tarantino said the ACS was hoping to raise $10,000 for cancer research from the jailathon. A similar event held last weekend in Holyoke raised $30,000.

The bright red jail cell was set up in Pulaski Park on Main Street Friday and Saturday. It contained a table and chairs, telephones and telephone books. Prisoners were outfitted with black-and-white striped prison uniforms.

A judge, dressed in black robe and powdered wig, said, "We have a common law system of justice here. Each case is handled individually. The mean amount for bail was about $500. The owner of Bart's tried to bribe me with a hot fudge sundae."

Arrestees received a polaroid mug shot, their arrest warrants and a certificate from the ACS in honor of their participation.

Sports Fans", Waybill bounced a basketball onstage, throwing it, along with nerf footballs and baseballs, into the audience.

One concertgoer, Cecile Gochoco, a first year student from Manila, Philipines, who had never seen a large outdoor concert before, said, "it was funny that people were throwing frisbees, baseballs and footballs, and that they were throwing them at the singer."

Aaron Crutchfield, a sophomore, said Johnny Copeland "got the whole valley rocking and didn't have to send an S.O.S. until the Tubes came on." He added, "It was a semester's worth of rock crammed into one day."

Aram Tabackman, a first-year student, said Johnny Copeland "blew everyone else away," but added that "it was good to finally see the Tubes."

Radio show spotlights UM

By LORENA NOZZOLILLO
Collegian Correspondent

The University's radio program Commonwealth Journal produced at the Office of Public Information is proof that there is more to public relations than just issuing press releases.

Commonwealth Journal is a half hour radio program featuring interviews with University professors, visiting speakers and other campus personalities.

Producer Jeanne Hopkins Stover describes the show as being a feature news magazine that deals with a wide range of topics, including science, consumer affairs, current events, or any topic of general interest to the University community.

Some of the more recent guests who have appeared on the program are history professor and professional biographer Stephen Oates, and Food, Science and Nutrition professor Fergus Clydesdale.

Journalism professor Howard Ziff offers regular commentary on current events.

The show is sometimes taped in the WFCR (Five College Radio) studios, but is produced solely by UMass as a public service. As Stover explains, its purpose is to "share with the public the highlights of the university."

Journal is aired over 40 stations that are mostly in New England. The show is carried by local stations WFCR and WTTT in Amherst, WHYN in Springfield, and WHMP in Northampton. Despite extensive airplay, Stover said Journal has trouble reaching a broad audience due to the irregular times some stations air the show.

These commercial stations can only air Journal during time allotted for public service, which usually means early mornings (WSRS in Worcester airs it at 5:30 a.m. on Sundays) or late nights (WTCC in Springfield airs it at 12:30 p.m. on Thursdays).

Despite this drawback, Stover said that the program is reaching a wide audience, and she receives letters of listener appreciation from all over New England.

Journal is usually made up of three 10-minute feature stories. Stover and two production assistants are responsible for covering a story a week, and also their own interviewing and script writing.

The show leans toward feature news more than breaking news because, as Stover said, there is usually two weeks time between interview and air date.

However, the Journal does provide a service to area stations by providing recordings of important speeches or events on campus.

Hunger Task Force raises $5,000

By DANIELA WATERMAN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Hunger Task Force raised more than $5,000 during the week of April 22 to fight world hunger, a recently released report states.

On April 25, 2,200 students gave up their evening meal at the dining commons and Food Services donated the cost of the meals to OXFAM America. Students not on the meal plan made donations at Earthfoods, People's Market and at tables outside the Hatch.

More than $3,000 was raised by the fast, which has been held each April and November for about eight years, according to John Horsley, a Hunger Task Force spokesperson.

"This was one of the most successful spring fasts. Usually only about 800 people participate. This year the numbers were much higher," he said.

Despite rainy weather, more than 100 people participated in the Amherst Walk for Hunger on April 28. Students from UMass, including members of Iota Phi Theta and Phi Beta Sigma fraternities and other members of the Amherst community, raised $2,100 in pledged donations for their 6.2 mile walk.

The turnout for the walk was lower than expected due to the bad weather and the East Side Concert, which was also held that afternoon, Horsley said.

"The money raised was only one-third of the potential amount. Unfortunately we couldn't control the weather," he said.

The Commuter Area Government, Governor's Program Council, Graduate Senate and the Hunger Task Force sponsored the "We Are The World" benefit dance on May 1st, raising more than $200 for OXFAM America's Crisis in Africa Fund.

Turnout for the dance also could have been higher, said Horsley, but "it was a Wednesday night and it is getting close to finals."

Jewelry worth $7,000 stolen at tanning center

A woman left $7,000 worth of jewelry at a tanning center in Amherst Thursday morning and when she went back to get it, the jewelry was gone. The larceny of a silver ring, a gold ring and a Swiss watch was reported, Amherst Police said.

Windsor Conn. police recovered a "torched" stolen 1981 Audi automobile, belonging to an Amherst resident, Thursday afternoon in Windsor. Police said the $10,000 car was left behind a business on North Pleasant Street in Amherst and when the owner went to get it early Friday morning, it was gone. The car was a total loss, police said.

sense of 'Community Responsibility.'"

The procedures for people who will be held accountable for enforcing the alcohol policy will probably not be made clear until resident assistants training in August.

"The policy does not address procedures," Charles Durant, assistant director of residential education said. "Procedures are handled in training R.A.s and R.D.s."

The problem the Residential Area Alcohol Policy committee had was knowing that a lot of people are not of drinking age and then trying to develop a policy that abides by the laws of the state but is not restrictive to those people of age.
—Residential Education Coordinator Susan Allen

The two primary issues of concern to residential assistants and several alcohol committee members involve party policies and where people are legally allowed to drink.

Currently, there are two separate sets of guidelines for social events in residence halls where alcohol is served. The party policy is split between the east and west sides of campus because of the different age groups on campus. Although these policies are separate from the residential alcohol policy, they are also being evaluated in light of the new legal drinking age.

"We're trying to make the policies consistent for the entire campus," Robert Jennings, a residential alcohol policy committee member from residential education said.

According to the proposed policy, parties with more than 15 people in a room must be registered with the residence director. Also, two-thirds of the people present must be of legal drinking age.

If a party is not registered, the only place a person of legal drinking age can legally drink is in a student's room or suite. Lounges, kitchens, stairwells and corridors are legally defined as "public space" in which students are not allowed to drink unless a party application is filed, Durant said.

The restrictions placed on where a student can drink have already been rejected by some students. The Southwest Area Government rejected the entire policy proposal for "being overly restrictive" last week.

When a woman cries rape

Deborah Kutenplon

Recently, Cathleen Webb recanted her rape allegation against Gary Dotson, who had been in jail for three years since his conviction. Although this incident is tragic, wherever its truth lies, the attention paid to it has been extraordinary. Why is a recantation much bigger news than a conviction?

Because women almost never invent rape stories. Because in fact it's enormously more likely that a true rapist will go free than that an innocent man will be convicted. Because, despite these facts, men have a deep fear that women will abuse rape laws to frame men.

Men perceive that women have sexual control over men's lives. After all, a woman just has to cry rape and a man can be put away for years — so the argument goes.

In reality, men have inordinantly greater sexual control over women's lives, as any woman knows when she walks alone at night. This control extends into marriage where, in most states, a man has legal open access to "his" wife's body. It's virtually impossible to get a rape conviction against someone a victim has dated, or even just knows socially, let alone against someone she has previously voluntarily slept with.

Not all women are conscious of the fear of rape we carry around with us every day. I realized it only when I was lucky enough to experience its total absence in an all women's community; suddenly I had so much energy — energy that had formerly been drained by low-level, unconscious but constant fear.

Similarly, not all men are conscious of their sexual power over women, and the fact that they benefit from it even if they would never dream of exploiting it. For instance, many women will not take jobs that require a night shift, and that gives men an economic edge.

Still other men do claim the privilege of sexual power. Every time a man calls a woman "bitch," he is reminding her that she can be raped. Every time a man looks at pornography, he is reminded that he can rape. Every time I pass a group of men, I feel a tightening inside, tensing for a comment, a whistle, or even stares — reminders of men's sexual power over women. A rape scene will automatically ruin a movie for me.

Most men would never commit rape, but that's beside the point in one sense. As long as rape exists as a social construction, as a means for male domination of females, the threat of rape exists even where individuals would never take "advantage" of it. It colors every cross-sex interaction, even when we want desperately to be free of it.

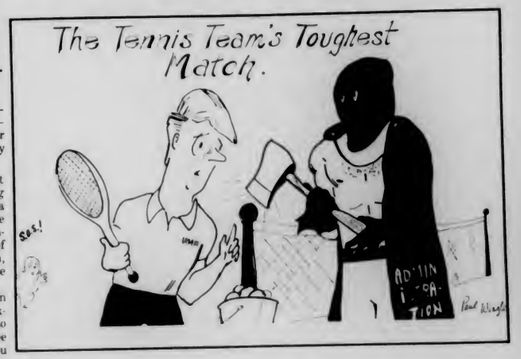
Perhaps you think I sound paranoid. In fact, one of every three women will be sexually assaulted in her lifetime, according to the FBI. Think of ten women friends; three of these will become rape victims. You might be surprised how many already are.

Black men have historical reasons to fear fabricated rape charges, which were often used as an excuse to lynch. But even then the false accusation of rape was used as a political weapon mainly by white men against black men. In actuality, over 90 percent of all rapes involve a man and woman of the same race.

In general, how often do women intentionally falsely accuse men of rape? Often enough to base all rape laws on that risk? Until recently, a rape victim had to produce a witness to the crime — absurd as that may sound — to win a conviction. Even today the victim is often tried as much as the defendant; she must defend her own innocence, her morality, and her sex life. When the victim is considered often as guilty as the rapist, there are many pressures for her to later deny her rape.

Of course if Gary Dotson is innocent he should be freed. But we should keep the case in perspective; our culture, our laws, our news reporting (count how many times the word "alleged" appears in a rape story compared to a robbery story) remain heavily biased to distrust rape victims. Let's listen to the women for a change.

Deborah Kutenplon is a Collegian columnist.



Yes, save our sports, but let's cover them

The reporting in the Collegian sports page and the opinion pieces of sports editor Peter Abraham in particular has been disturbing over the course of the semester. The sports editor of this newspaper has taken his position at the paper and used it not to impartially report the news but rather to create a forum for his opinions.

A recent example of this was the Save Our Sports rally held at the Student Union. The rally was covered by two of the local television stations along with many area newspapers, and it afforded the members of these teams and their supporters an opportunity to air out the issue. Unfortunately the impact of the student input was diminished by the Collegian sports pages' failure to cover or even mention the event.

It seems to me that a university that prides itself on diversity should not even consider cutting life-sports such as tennis, golf or skiing from an athletic program and the irresponsibility shown by the Collegian failure to report this issue is unforgivable. Whether or not Abraham's opinions are in agreement with mine both sides of the issue should be reported equally. Due to the lack of publicity given by this paper many students are still unaware these programs are in jeopardy. It is the responsibility of the sports editor to report both sides of a news event.

Under the framework of a college newspaper it seems logical to me that the editor of the sports page might print not only his opinions but those favored by 80 percent of the student body as was evident by the recent SGA referenda.

In effect what the sports page has become is a mouthpiece for the administration of this university, this was the last reason the student newspaper was created. In the future it would be appreciated by all students if the newspaper were used if not to advocate their positions to at least make them known.

Letters to the Editor

Did anyone hear the one about the . . .?

Did anyone hear about what went on last Sunday?

No.

Well, the Southwest Area Government put on its annual concert. It is one of the largest spring events of the University of Massachusetts, and provides enterainment for thousands of students.

Oh really, what groups were playing?

The concert opened with Nexus and Girls Night Out, two very good bands. The headline band was Otis Day and the Nights. You might remember them as the band from the movie Animal House.

Wow, that sounds terrific. But wait, if this concert was so big and so much fun for thousands of UMass students, why didn't it get a write up in the Collegian?

Good question! Why instead, was the main story concerned with the Gay parade in Northampton, an event attended by far less then 2,000 UMass students? It is very upsetting when the campus newspaper can only write a mere six lines underneath a photograph in the lower right-hand corner of the front page and call responsible reporting. Moreover, those short six lines did not even mention the concert itself, rather they told of a fight with four arrests that happened before the concert started. This makes it sound like the fight was the most important event of the day, when in reality it was a small fracas that went unnoticed by the majority of students.It is a sad situation when the Collegian must resort to muckraking rather then telling the true story about a high spirited, fun-filled afternoon. It is no wonder that Southwest is still thought of by its old reputation as being a wild living area, the newspaper won't let this reputation die.

Hopefully, in the future, the Collegian will give adequate coverage to the majority's news as well as the minorities' news.

OPI not to blame for bad press

In Bob Kievra's May 8 Letter to the Editor he criticized the Office of Public Information for discrediting the University, and the students who planned and participated in the Southwest concert, by discussing the event with the press. In response to this letter, I would like to set the record straight.

As it happened, Jeanne Stover had come into work on her day off when she began receiving telephone inquiries from reporters concerning the Southwest concert. As any public information professional would do, she gave the facts as she could ascertain them. Moreover, she went so far as to contact a local media outlet she felt was sensationalizing the story and persuaded them to broadcast a more accurate report.

It appears that Kievra's complaint would better be taken up with the press itself. If it is their opinion that the presence of state troopers and three arrests is "news," that is what they will report. Our Office of Public Information promotes the University at every opportunity. When news is breaking, the office does not issue a formal press release but, rather, provides facts and answers to reporters' questions. The University cannot deny the right of a newsperson to report what he or she chooses. That is the essence of a free press. Like everyone, sometimes we are the beneficiaries; sometimes we are not.

Deirdre A. Ling Vice Chancellor for University Relations and Development

Racism: More than South Africa

On May 1, 32 students were arrested on the UMass campus. The arrests were made as a result of the students electing to continue their sit-in after 4:30. This resulted in a violation of the University Picketing Code.

Apartheid once again was the issue that moved the students to exercise their option for civil disobedience. The real issue is racism. Racism is very complex and equally as ugly. However, to effectively address racism, it is best to have a complete understanding of it.

As an educator, I feel it is important to make use of every opportunity to educate. Though unfortunate and distressing this incident provides that very opportunity.

On May 1, Matthew Shakespeare, a student protestor, said "each day that investment continues is a black spot on the University." On May 2, the Collegian elected to run this particular quote on the first page. The tragedy in using language in such a manner (ie. blacksheep, blackspot etc.) is that adults and perhaps more importantly children begin to believe, accept and live the subtle but dangerous message "black is bad."

Until Shakespeare, the Collegian, and all of us can come to understand the pain and detriment of such racist language, will we begin to understand that racism is more than South Africa.

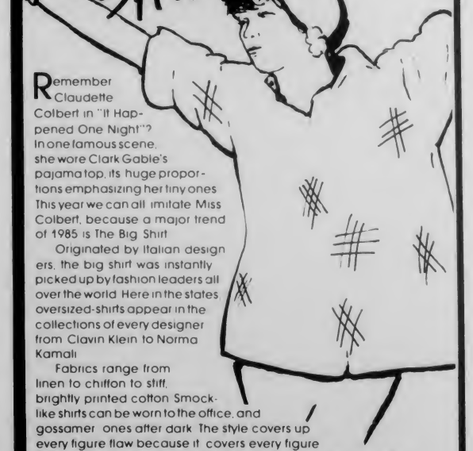
THE BIG SHIRT



Remember Claudette Colbert in "It Happened One Night"? In one famous scene, she wore Clark Gable's pajama top, its huge proportions emphasizing her tiny ones. This year we can all imitate Miss Colbert, because a major trend of 1985 is The Big Shirt.

Originated by Italian designers, the big shirt was instantly picked up by fashion leaders all over the world. Here in the states, oversized-shirts appear in the collections of every designer from Clavin Klein to Norma Kamali.

Fabrics range from linen to chiffon to stiff, brightly printed cotton. Smock-like shirts can be worn to the office, and gossamer ones after dark. The style covers up every figure flaw because it covers every figure.

Big shirts have other virtues, too. They highlight a graceful head and pretty hands. And they span two recent fashion directions — the "forward" trend toward androgynous dressings and the "backward" trend to femininity.

"It is important to learn good study habits from the beginning of the semester, so when finals do come there isn't that much catching up to do," Padovano said.

Many students feel that springtime and finals just do not mix. During May there are many concerts and activities that are distracting to a student's study habits.

"It is really hard to go to the library and study when all your friends are lying out in the sun drinking beers," said John Petrocelli, a first-year student.

Orchard Hill Resident Assistant Dave Swanson said that howl wars, shouting matches between dormitory residents in Orchard Hill seem to become more frequent during finals. "Some students like to go on the balconies and scream their lungs out for 10 or 15 minutes to get rid of their frustration. Yet for other students all the noise being made only adds to their stress," Swanson said.

for a 10-8 UMass lead as the crowd exploded.

Korrie then scored before Curry, with 8:16 to go, took the ball in front of the UMass bench and ran the length of the field unmolested to rifle a shot into the top corner that tied the game.

Fiorini then gave UMass the lead, assisted by Moreland, with 6:05 to go. The Gorillas then stalled the ball until there was 4:30 left when they lost possession at midfield.

SU worked for a shot, scoring with 2:36 to go as Curry took a Nelson feed.

UM had a golden opportunity, losing the ball in front of Nims before Gorilla defenseman Gerry Byrne was called for a slash with 2:10 to go.

Kotz, who along with Nelson had been effectively shut-down by defenseman Mark Stratton and Tom Aldrich respectively, then picked up his only point which proved to be the game winner.

For UMass, faceoff man Seamus McGovern had a great day with an 18-of-26 effort. SU outshot UMass 37-32. Moreau had 13 saves.

"This game hurts about as much as anything I've ever had happen to me in sports," Fiorini said. "We did everything right. We proved what kind of team we are today."

UMass drove PC's third pitcher, Tom Bartlett, from the mound in the fourth as they scored seven runs.

Kingman, Salustri, Clifford, Ezold and Rob Holiday each had hits in the inning with Comeau, O'Connor, Holiday, Ezold and Salustri driving in runs.

On Friday, UMass swept Northeastern with a pair of offensive explosions.

In the first game, Mick Wydra went to distance for UMass with an eight hitter to raise his record to 2-2.

Sean Flint's two homers and four RBI led UMass' 19-hit attack. Salustri had two hits with Flint, a sophomore catcher, getting four. O'Connor, Comeau, Salustri, and Steve Messina each drove in two runs.

In the second game, Wright's three hits paced UMass as Pat McNamara, Jon Martin and Jeff Jensen combined for a six-hitter. The Minutemen got three hits from Wright with Kingman, Comeau and Wright driving in two runs each. UMass scored seven unearned runs in the game. Messina went two-for-three with four RBI in the game.

SPORTS

This hurts: Orange escapes 12-11

Syracuse's late rally downs gutsy Gorillas, Carmean scores five

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

For 58 minutes and 19 seconds, the impossible was happening.

Syracuse University, the number-one ranked lacrosse team in the nation, came to the University of Massachusetts talking about running up the score on the Gorillas to enhance its chances for getting the top seed in the upcoming NCAA playoffs.

Instead, the Orangemen found themselves being outplayed by UMass as a crowd estimated at close to 4,000 tried its best to will the team to victory.

All-American midfielder Brad Kotz then shattered the dream, taking Tim Nelson's pass with 1:41 left in the game and blasting a shot pass UM goalie Gerry Moreau.

The Gorillas won the ensuing faceoff, lost the ball with 1:05 remaining but got it back and called time out with 47 seconds to go.

UMass, with the Syracuse defense pressing, fumbled several passes before goalie Tom Nims stopped a Ken Freeman shot from 20 feet out with only 16 seconds left. The Orange picked up the loose ball and killed both the clock and UM's hopes for a major upset.

"We played about as well as we can play," UM coach Dick Garber said. "It was a hell of an effort by each player. We did what we wanted to and executed the way I knew we could. It's a damn shame."

UMass finishes the season at 6-8. The Orange go to 12-1 and play Wednesday in the first round of the playoffs.

Sophomore attackman Tom Carmean led the Gorillas with five goals and one assist. Mike Fiorini had three goals and an assist. Freeman, Tom Lukacovic and Greg Fisk each had single tallies. Fisk also had two assists with Matt O'Reilly and Stephen Moreland also picking up assists.

Syracuse All-American Tim Nelson had three goals, Todd Curry had two as did Rhett Cavanaugh and Tom Korrie.

SU jumped out 1-0 with 10:02 left in the first period as defenseman Kevin Sheehan ran up past the midfield line on a clear and kept on going to fire it in.

UMass tied it on a goal by Carmean (assisted by Fisk) and went ahead as Carmean (who finished the season with a career high 28 goals and 34 assists) scored, this time assisted by O'Reilly with 6:19 left in the period.

SU racked up two unsportsmanslike conduct penalties setting up Carmean's first goal as the visitors lost their composure and fell out of their game plan.

Fisk gave UM a 3-1 lead, taking it in alone and beating goalie Tom Nims with 3:58 to go. Cavanaugh scored with 3:22 left to make it 3-2 at the quarter.

Syracuse took control in the second period, outscoring UMass 4-2 as Nelson (two) Mike O'Donnell and Tom Korrie scored. Fiorini scored for UMass after three straight Syracuse goals, scooping up a loose ball, whirling and beating Nims with 7:53 to go in the half. Freeman scored with 3:42 left in the period to keep UMass in the game, 6-5.

The officials, intimidated by the classless Syracuse coaching staff, lost control of the game in the third period as UMass scored two goals that were called back.

Tempers flare as UMass attackman Ken Freeman (20) clashes with Syracuse defenseman Chris Bruno (44) on Saturday. UMass lost 12-11.

Fiorini took a Carmean feed with two-and-a-half minutes gone to tie the game at six. Syracuse was called for another unsportsmanlike conduct after the goal. Fiorini then scored but the goal was called back as UMass, unsure of the situation, illegally substituted. Ted Spencer then scored, but that goal was also called back as the officials whistled the play dead to go and confer with the irate SU coaches. Syracuse, in the process, picked up its fourth unsportsmanlike conduct penalty as the Orangemen mouthed off to the officials again.

UMass, after much delay in the game, finally scored one that counted as Carmean took a Fisk pass and blasted in a low drive with 3:05 left in the period. SU scored with eight seconds left as Curry sailed in a long drive.

In the final period, as the crowd chanted encouragement, UMass went ahead 8-7 as Lukacovic took Fiorini's pass and drove in, beating Nims with only 43 seconds gone.

Another Cavanaugh goal tied it with 12:45 left before Fred Opie's gloves changed the complexion of the game.

The Syracase defenseman's gloves had illegally cut-out fingers and the officials, true to form, didn't notice the infraction until the game was on the line.

UMass took advantage. Carmean scored with 11:18 to go as Opie remained in the box with the penalty now releasable.

Lukacovic then bounced a shot in front of Nims that flew high into the air to the goalie's right. Carmean jumped up, caught the ball and fired it in on his way down

Allard throws one-hitter as baseball sweeps four

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

It's been a long time coming for Steve Allard.

Allard, a sophomore, was the University of Massachusetts' first scholarship baseball player in some years when he came to the university last year. He posted a 0-2 record last year and was 3-3 going into yesterday's game with Providence College, disappointing results for the high school star.

The lefthander showed the ability that won him that scholarship, but had flashed only briefly in his UMass career, shutting out the Friars with a one hitter as the Minutemen won 4-0.

The victory gave UMass a 4-0 record over the weekend as the Minutemen swept Northeastern in a Friday doubleheader 12-5 and 20-3 and won the first game yesterday over PC 17-4.

The four wins puts UMass at 25-19 for the season and sets a school record for victories in a season.

Allard, with several major league scouts watching, owned the Friars. He retired the first 13 batters before walking Dan Rice. He didn't allow a hit until Paul Kostocopulos' bleeder fell just in front of right fielder Dan Clifford. Allard struck out nine and walked three.

UM scored two in the first as Bruce Kingman came in on an error and Darrin O'Connor drove in Angelo Saulstri with a single to center. Clifford and Todd Commeau also drove in runs.

In the first game, Comeau drove in five runs with a homer and a triple as UMass rolled, 17-4 behind the six-hit pitching of Bob Kostro (4-1).

UMass scored five in the first as Comeau tripled in Kingman (hit by a pitch) and O'Connor (walk). Salustri's fly ball scored Comeau and after a Doug Wright single, Todd Ezold singled to left for the fifth run.

The Minutemen scored five more in the second. O'Connor walked and rode in on a Comeau drive over the fence in center. Salustri then singled, went to second as Tom Fabian walked, stole third and scored on an error. Fabian came in as Ezold singled to center. Ezold scored on an error.

Softball splits with Adelphi

Minutewomen end at 25-23-1

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Nothing, nothing at all, has been easy for the University of Massachusetts softball team in 1985 and Saturday's doubleheader with Adelphi Univeristy was no exception.

After both games, UMass had just 11 healthy players left and centerfielder Sally Maher, who had never played catcher except for a brief summer league fling, was behind the plate.

The 16th ranked Panthers won the opener, 4-1, but UMass' Lisa Rever scattered 10 hits and Cathy Reed's 12th inning RBI single gave UMass a 3-2 win and a split of their season-ending doubleheader.

"I love it," coach Elaine Sortino said after UMass, who finished at 25-23-1, won its first game in four attempts with Adelphi. "This team has really formed itself into a strong unit. They showed heart and depth as a unit."

Adelphi, fighting for an NCAA playoff berth, won the opener highlighted by a Mary Wallace home run in the fifth for a 4-0 lead. A Leigh Petroski RBI single cut it to 4-1 in the bottom of the fifth but it wasn't enough.

UMass' Lynn Stockley struck out two in the opener but gave up eight hits. UMass had eight hits but stranded nine, including the bases loaded in the first.

The second game began as a duel between Adelphi's Julie Bolduc and Rever. UMass broke through in the sixth on a Maher RBI triple and Maher came home on an error for a 2-0 lead.

Adelphi tied it up in the seventh and the game went into extra innings. Rever got stronger as the game went on, giving up just two hits in the extra five innings.

Bolduc (17 strikeouts) kept UMass off the bases until the 12th when Carol Frattaroli got on with an error and moved to second as Tina Morello grounded out. Martha Jamieson singled up the middle and promptly stole second. A walk to Rever loaded the bases.

And Reed came up and sent the game winning hit into center field. "It was a great way to end the year," Maher said. "We really played well."

And after a year where UMass struggled to reach .500, this team, that does not graduate one player, ended up 1985 on a high note, ready to go into 1986.

SGA motion sets ablaze controversy

By SUSAN EATON
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts student on record for making a motion to negate the recent election of John Ruddock as speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate said yesterday he was falsely represented and never made such a motion.

Commuter senator Barnaby Page said, "First of all, I didn't do it, second of all, I don't support it and third of all, the people who did do this should have the guts to put their own names on it."

Page, who is identified in Wednesday's senate meeting agenda as the motion's author, said he will call for the motion's immediate withdrawal and, upon learning who used his name without permission, will bring up another motion calling for that person's expulsion from the senate.

A student senator and budget committee member who asked not to be identified, said that Jay Flynn, a Greek Area senator, who ran against Ruddock for the speaker position, made the motion.

Student senator Craig McDermott said "someone" called him saying they had the motion written by Page and that he (McDermott) should type it and give it to Ruddock to put on the agenda.

McDermott said, "That person (who called) is in Worcester right now and I can't get in touch with him to discuss this."

In attempts to reach Flynn, at his home the Collegian was informed he was in Worcester. He could not be reached for comment yesterday.

Page noted Flynn "would have all the reasons for getting J.R. (Ruddock) kicked out." He cited political differences between the two and Flynn's loss to Ruddock in the elections.

"When a motion like that comes up and when there seems to be no realistic rationale behind it, it can only shed a negative light on the senate to the administration and the student body as a whole," said senate co-president Stacy Roth.

Diane Rossi, SGA treasurer, said if the motion had made it to the floor and passed, she would have resigned immediately.

"The motion just shows total disrespect for the senate and the things it's been trying to establish all these years. If that motion passes, I'm not sure I want to work for that body," Rossi said.

Ruddock said that if here were forced out of office, it would "greatly hamper, if not totally eliminate" the plans SGA leaders have for the summer and force them to work out new plans for the fall. It would also have a "detrimental" effect on the student body as a whole.

"This only adds to the air of disruptiveness in the senate. Senators should really move past personal differences and deal with the issues that are facing the SGA this coming year," Ruddock said.

Report says gay campus life uncomfortable

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the first story in a two-part series on a report examining the climate for gay, lesbian and bisexual students at UMass. This story focuses on the data in the report and tomorrow's will concentrate on reaction to the report.

According to a report released yesterday, the current campus climate for lesbian, gay and bisexual students at the University of Massachusetts is a chilly one.

The data incorporated into the report reveals "a serious problem," said Human Relations Planner and Advocate Felice Yeskel who coordinated the campus-wide assessment of the needs and services for gay, lesbian and bisexual students.

The report, which was submitted to Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson late yesterday afternoon, was prepared in response to numerous "visible and potentially violent" homophobic acts that occured on campus last semester, Yeskel said.

These acts, which included "gaybusters" posters and plans for a "heterosexual fight back" march, led the administration to appoint Yeskel for her work.

Yeskel said that although she "used a variety of sources to get an accurate view" of the current climate, all the sources corroborate and "point to the same sort of thing."

Among the major findings released yesterday:

Residence Halls

Of the 174 students gay, lesbian and bisexual students who responded to a questionnaire, 72 lived on campus. Of these, 78 percent said they had been subjected to anti-gay/lesbian slurs, 65 percent reported they had been harassed by other residents and 67 percent said they felt pressured into silence about their sexual orientation.

In a survey of 135 resident assistants, 82 percent reported they were aware of heterosexist/homophobic incidences in their building and 75 percent said they did not believe the climate on their floor was supportive to gays, lesbians and bisexuals.

Attitudes Towards Gay and Lesbian Community

In a Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office telephone survey of 271 students, over half of the respondants said they believed anti-gay and lesbian attitudes existed to some extent and 35 percent thought they existed to a great extent. A majority thought lesbian/gay students experienced defacement through posters, direct verbal harassment and the vandalization of personal property.

Support Services for Victims Of Harrassment Or Discrimination

The majority of the 174 students who responded to the questionnaire said they would not use UMass police, Amherst police, Dean of Students Office or faculty to report incidences of harassment or discriminatio . The students stated they would use friends, the awareness trainer, Everywoman's Center and the lesbian, gay, bisexual counseling collective.

Apartheid controversy cooks up criticism

By DAVID BRITAIN
Collegian Correspondent

Recent controversy surrounding divestment from businesses operating in South Africa raises critical questions about the effectiveness of economic boycotts in opposition to the apartheid government.

News Analysis

According to several economics professors at the University of Massachusetts, divestment would affect the economic and political structure of South Africa.

Samuel Bowles, a UMass economics professor and former teacher at the University of Ibadan in Nigeria, said the major effect of divestment is felt in the military. Divestment, he said, will show the separatist government that the U.S. will not back it militarily or financially.

Companies and lending institutions will directly affect military spending and research, Bowles said. Foxboro Corporation, a company in which the University has invested in, exported large computers needed for the development of nuclear capabilities, Bowles said. Loans can be used to free other money, according to the president of Manufacturers Hanover. By cutting off loans, the U.S. can remove its support of a racist government, Bowles said.

"The main effect is not on the economy but rather a signal that America will not support the apartheid government," Bowles said.

Bowles is the author of several books, including one on the economic development of Africa.

A UMass economics professor, who asked to remain anonymous, said divestment could possibly have negative effects and the apartheid government could harshen its racial politics in response to U.S. financial pressure. Petty apartheid practices that have been relaxed such as separate buses, park benches, taxis, bank lines, could be stiffened, he said, adding that the government could become more strict in defense to American economic and political pressure.

Former economic adviser for the anti-trust division of the Justice Department and a visiting professor at UMass, William G. Sheppard, said the media coverage of divestment can add enough pressure on companies operating in South Africa that black employment and wages could increase. Although initial statistics show a drop in black employment, a longer period will show increases in black prosperity, he said, adding that, "....it's similar to a cut in the skin needed to perform an operation."

Partial or near complete divestment could be effective, Sheppard said. This financial pressure would force the companies and the government to repeal the prejudiced policies but, at the same time, Americans could retain some control in the companies, monitoring board meetings, he said.

The underlying theme from an economic viewpoint is that the financial pressure of divestment can work to reverse apartheid policy.

Gen. Elec. enters guilty plea

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - General Electric Co., the nation's sixth-largest defense contractor, pleaded guilty yesterday to defrauding the Air Force of $800,000 on a nuclear-warhead contract and was fined $1,040,000, the maximum penalty.

GE's plea means it could be barred for up to three years from bidding on new contracts, said U.S. Attorney Edward S.G. Dennis Jr.

The Air Force did not immediately indicate what action, if any, would be taken against GE, which performed the work at two area plants.

U.S. District Judge Louis C. Bechtle said the maximum penalty was "fully and clearly appropriate here" because the nation is dependent on GE "just like a newborn baby is dependent on its mother."

GE pleaded guilty to 108 counts of making false statements and claims for payment to the Air Force to recover cost overruns on a $47 million contract to refurbish the Minuteman Mark-12A intercontinental ballistic missile. The plea came on what was to be the opening day of jury selection for trial on the charges.

The work, according to an indictment returned against GE on March 26, involved research, development, engineering and other services for the Minuteman re-entry systems done at GE plants in Philadelphia and suburban King of Prussia between June 22, 1980, and April 19, 1983.

The indictment accused GE managers of altering employee time cards, having employees submit blank cards and filling them out themselves and transferring non-reimbursable costs to other contracts.

After the indictment, Air Force Secretary Verne Orr suspended GE from bidding on any new defense contracts, but he later limited the suspension to the company's Re-entry Systems Division, which was involved in the alleged mischarges.

The actions made GE the largest defense contractor ever suspended from doing business with the government and the largest charged in a criminal indictment with defrauding the military.

"The evidence would show higher management was blue-printing the intentional mischarging being done by lower level managers," Assistant U.S. Attorney Ewald Zutlau told the court yesterday.

GE attorney Henry S. Ruth told Bechtle that GE, which had orginally pleaded innocent, changed its position after former GE unit manager Roy Baessler, 40, of Topsfield, admitted intentional mischarging.

United pilots may strike

BOSTON (AP) - United Airlines pilots and management began contract negotiations yesterday with neither side optimistic of reaching agreement before a strike deadline.

The pilots union has set the strike deadline for early Friday, when the 30-day "cooling off" period required by federal law ends.

Managemant representatives of the nation's largest carrier say they will hire pilots to replace the strikers and continue operating.

"Nobody is optimistic," Capt. Jon LeRoy, a pilot with United for 20 years and a union representative, said in a telephone call from the Chicago headquarters of the Airline Pilots Association.

"They will be free to withhold their services," Chuck Novak, company spokesman, said of the strike deadline. "We will be free to set new work rules...and continue operating, which we will do."

Both sides said the major stumbling block in reaching a new three-year contract is money. The latest company offer, unacceptable to the union, would raise salaries 6 percent across the board—

Smoke bombs and fireworks hurled during soccer match

BRADFORD, England (AP) - Police said yesterday that smoke bombs and fireworks were thrown during a soccer match where a fire swiftly engulfed an old wooden grandstand and killed 53 people.

But police said it was not known whether the projectiles caused the fire Saturday that consumed the grandstand at Bradford's Valley Parade Ground where 3,000 people were watching a soccer game.

A 75-year-old burn victim died in a hospital yesterday, and three people were still listed as missing. Of the 211 people injured in the fire and the rush by spectators to escape the flame, 57 remained in the hospital and authorities said many of them had burns that will require plastic surgery.

West Yorkshire County Council, meanwhile, said it warned the Bradford City soccer club in writing 10 months ago that the 79-year-old timber grandstand was a fire hazard, but said no action was taken to correct the alleged dangerous conditions. The club's chairman denied receiving any warning.

In Parliament, Home Secretary Leon Brittan, the Cabinet minister in charge of safety and police matters, announced a judicial inquiry into the fire, with orders to investigate fire safety and crowd-control measures at all 92 soccer stadiums in the country.

He said the inquiry, to be headed by High Court Judge Oliver Popplewell, would try to determine what caused the fire and why it spread so quickly. Witnesses said the wind-driven fire engulfed the grandstand within four minutes.

John Domaille, West Yorkshire assistant police chief, said investigators had determined that smoke bombs were thrown during Saturday's match between Bradford City and Lincoln City.

"I knew that smoke bombs are used at football soccer matches and that this occurred in the Bradford ground stadium on Saturday and on previous Saturdays," Domaille told a news conference at Bradford police headquarters.

Optimism reigns with peace talks

VIENNA, Austria (AP) - George P. Shultz said yesterday that he found encouraging singns during a four-day tour of the Middle East and feels the Arabs and Israel might agree on Palestinian members of a peace negotiating team.

The secretary of state told reporters as he flies here to see Andrei A. gromyko, the Soviet Foreign Minister, that he has detected "a genuine sense of movement" in all three countries he visited - Israel, Egypt and Jordan.

In a communique adopted Sunday after Shultz left Jerusalem, the Israeli Cabinet did not exclude the Palestine National Council, but only members who subscribe to the PLO covenant calling for destruction of the Jewish state, the secretary said.

The council is the Palestine Liberation Organization's legislature, but some of its members do not belong to the PLO. Shultz added, however, that he had not discussed a possible list of Palestinians with King Hussein of Jordan.

The king is working with PLO chairman Yasir Arafat, with whom he has agreed on a joint peace plan, to choose a group of Palestinians to form a joint peace negotiating team with Jordan. The Palestine National Council is a likely source of candidates.

One arrested at Campus Pond concert

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

Three men were placed in protective custody and one other was arrested during Sunday's concerts by the Campus Pond, University of Massachusetts police said.

The three men, who were non-students, were placed in protective custody after police found them extremely intoxicated and disruptive. One 23-year-old man was arrested after police found him violating a trespass notice previously issued to him.

Two men informed police at the concert that they will press assault and battery charges against a man who was provoking people to fight him, police said. The intoxicated man reportedly kicked one of the men in the groin, but denied the allegations when police questioned him.

In other police reports:

● A man who reportedly had a gun was arrested on a Springfield police warrant by campus police Sunday night in the Campus Center concourse. The 22-year-old non-student was frisked and a water pistol was found strapped underneath his warm-up suit, police said.

● Two female students were injured in a car accident on Massachusetts Avenue Sunday night. Two cars collided into each other by Whitmore, police said.

One passenger was taken to Cooley Dickinson Hospital by ambulance and one of the drivers was taken to University Health Services. Both women were treated and released. Police said no citations were issued as a result of the accident.

● A car carrying nine passengers struck a metal fence on Massachusetts Avenue Saturday night. One female passenger was injured in the collision and was treated and released from University Health Services.

Police said the car went off the road and hit the fence, causing more than $200 damage to the car. The driver was charged with driving a car filled over capacity.

● A loss of more than $2,000 was reported to police Sunday night from a 1982 Datsun parked in lot 22. Police said the roof of the car was smashed and a wallet containing $100 and other items were taken. The incident occured sometime between Saturday and Sunday, police said.

Woman's funeral today

Memorial services will be held tomorrow for University of Massachusetts graduate Margaret E. Gillis, 23, who was killed in a head-on collision on Belchertown Road Friday night.

The service will be at 7:30 p.m. in the Newman Center. The funeral is scheduled for 10 a.m. today at the South Congregational Church in Peabody.

According to Amherst Police, Gillis was traveling west when her car veered into the eastbound lane and collided with an oncoming car.

Gillis was pronounced dead at the scene Friday at 11:53 p.m., police said.

The driver and passenger of the other car suffered minor leg cuts and were treated at the scene.

The oncoming car sustained heavy front end damage and was listed as a total loss. Gillis' car was also totalled, with heavy damage on the right side, rear and roof.

Amherst Police said the accident is still under investigation.

gay students were asked to comment on, only two, the Everywoman's Center and the lesbian/gay awareness trainer were seen as adequate in meeting their needs. The agencies said to be most inadequeate were campus police, new student's program, placement services, health education and the dean of students office.

Survey of Service Agencies

The UMass Sexual Orientation Services Committee contacted 28 campus agencies concerning their ability to meet the needs of gay and lesbian students. The committee concluded that, although the number of services has increased over the last two years and all agencies are willing to explore increased services, there is still confusion regarding issues facing these students, the efforts made by agencies tend to depend on interested staff, and that the major services tend to be concentrated in student organizations.

Academics

The majority of students responding to the quesitonnaire said gay and lesbian issues were not covered in their courses and that library resources relating to these issues were inadequate. The majority also felt that they were not supported by faculty in pursuing projects on homosexuality and the academic advising service was unresponsive to their needs.

Journalism seeks own department

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Plans are currently underway to formally create a journalism department for the University of Massachusetts, 50 years after it was originally proposed.

The current journalistic studies program consists of a separate faculty, office, budget and over 300 majors, but is not considered a department. It is still connected with the English department, a tie which Howard M. Ziff, the director of journalistic studies says should now be severed.

The current program "is one of the biggest and in many respects one of the best journalism programs in the country and for the good of the University and the good of the students it ought to be a department," Ziff said.

A department differs from a program in that a program is part of a larger department and is ultimately accountable to that department. It cannot make autonomous decisions.

The attempt to departmentalize the journalistic studies program is not a new one. During the 1970s, the former dean of the faculty of humanities and fine arts tried unsuccessfully to separate journalism from English.

Jeremiah M. Allen now claims he violated University policy when he tried to make journlistic studies into a department without prior approval from either the administration or UMass Board of Trustees. His actions he said, "were illegal and (he) was caught by the president's office in Boston."

Ziff said because of the program's growth the time has come for the administration to re-evaluate the current program and upgrade it to a department.

But Arthur S. Musgrave, a former director of the program and current English professor claims Journalism has been run as a department for a number of years despite never having been given the authorization to do so.

"It is the largest journalism department in any New England college, although officially it is called a program. Established policies of all universities require that, before any new type of academic program is constructed or

Complaint policy ready for review

Faculty Senate to vote in fall

By JOEL COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Academic Grievance Procedure, which provides a mechanism for students to resolve academic problems, will be examined and revised in preparation for Faculty Senate approval this fall.

If the procedure is approved, it will be the first of its kind, although the passage of a grievance procedure for undergraduates has been pursued since 1977, when ombudsman Robert Wellman drafted the first model for such a procedure. Since then, members of the Student Center for Education, Research and Advocacy (SCERA) and the Student Government Association Academic Affairs Committee have also drafted proposals.

The procedure's goal is to handle student-faculty disputes, prejudice, and the arbitrary changing of course requirements and grades, Gail Wintjen, chair of the SGA Academic Affairs Committee, said.

Wintjen, the key sponsor of the proposed procedure, said this procedure, "is designed to resolve only those types of academic grievances which can be reflected in the administration of a final grade."

This procedure is not intended to handle disputes that may arise concerning grading of individual exams or assignments during the semester, but the final grade, Wintjen said. When disputes arise, the student should contact the instructor immediately, rather than waiting until the end of the semester.

Wintjen said a grievance must be based on evidence that the instructor has been unfair, arbitrary of manifestly unjust in awarding a grade.

If the procedure is approved by the Academic Matters Council tomorrow, then it will go to a full Faculty Senate vote this fall, Wintjen said. However, she added that the procedure, as it stands now, faces much opposition.

"The faculty sees any sort of academic grievance procedure as infringing on their academic freedom," Wintjen said. The academic freedom, "is the right of the professor to conduct his or her classes the way they want."

Also, Wintjen said, "there has been very little consistency over the years between the faculty and students" on the procedure itself. "Perhaps this is a ploy of certain faculty of some filibustering."

Wintjen said, "nothing like this has been on the campus before and there is a lot of apprehension," from many people involved such as faculty and administrators.

Doris Chaves, a faculty member from the School of Public Health, is one of six members of the Academic Matters Council. She said the present procedure needs to put less time constraints on faculty.

"I am certain that the senate is not going to pass it," Chaves said.

Joseph Skerret, an associate professor in the English department, and council member said, "We expect to get the procedure to the faculty senate in the fall," but he refused to comment on what he thought to be the strong and weak points of the current proposal.

Robert Sinclair, Education professor and council member said at tomorrow's meeting, he will "present a proposal that would perfect the grievance procedure and field test it for two years."

"Instead of trying to perfect it (the procedure) from a distance, we will try it out in the field," Sinclair said. "In order to get details and fine tune the procedure, we will try it and see how it works out."

Drake renovation to begin in June

By LAURA KOESTER
Collegian Staff

Plans to convert the Village Inn (Drake) from a bar and hotel to a 32-unit apartment building are moving forward, Don Machon, D.H. Jones Realtor apartment manager, said.

The takeover of the inn by D.H. Jones is scheduled to take effect June 1.

"We will definitely be open until May 31, and may be a little beyond that," said Elaine Parker, wife of Village owner Bradford Parker.

When asked if the bar would remain open while renovation is under way, Machon said, "No, it won't be in operation at that point. We want to be in there the day we own it."

Jones' plan, designed by architect William Austin from the firm of Kitchell and Inglese, needs the approval of the Amherst Zoning Board, Austin said. The board's next meeting is scheduled for May 16.

"The site plan shows how we will treat the grounds. Our plan right now is to restore the exterior of the building to replicate the way it looked as the Hotel Perry in the 1920s and '30s," Austin said.

The apartments will consist of moderately priced efficiency rooms and one-bedroom units. "What we have in mind are apartments for single people, newlyweds, professionals, and hopefully some elderly people," Austin said.

Austin said no special arrangements for parking have been designed, except for the addition of two handicapped spots. The strain on available parking space has been an issue in the

Low enrollment expectations worries UMass researcher

By JOEL P. COFFIDIS
Collegian Staff

The number of 18-year-olds entering college between 1988 and 1992 is expected to decline and this has a University of Massachusetts research specialist concerned.

Robert DeLauretis, director of the Office of Institutional Research and Planning said, "If we take a real hit in terms of enrollment, then budget cuts will go down and we will have to retrench significantly. Our (UMass) budget is based on what our enrollment is like."

Although the number of applicants for the fall semester at UMass hit a record high of more than 18,000, DeLauretis' office predicts that future enrollment may be affected because of decrease in eligible college-bound students.

"We study the present to make assumptions of the future," DeLauretis said. His office, which recently released the spring 1985 Enrollment and Analysis report indicates that enrollment levels at UMass have remained steady over the past year.

He said the office's general aim is to conduct an on-going study of the campus to obtain enrollment information, faculty research, student profiles, admission rates, and student retention rates.

Exact enrollment figures are important, DeLauretis said because they enable the various academic deans to know how many teaching assistants and faculty positions need to be filled, he said.

Although the total number of full-time equivalent instructed students, full-time student majors, and head count enrollment changed less than one percent when compared with spring 1984 figures, concern about student retention rates is a constant.

"We want to make sure students do well so we can keep them here," DeLauretis said. However, he added this doesn't mean downgrading the quality of the University.

DeLauretis said enrollment research can help the University improve on all levels. "The institutional research part of the job feeds the planning function," thus improvements can be made.

"We have been increasing our quality of students," he said. "That is difficult to do because as the pool gets smaller, there is a tendency of going the other way. This tends to make it a more quality place."

past with the zoning board.

Two wheelchair ramps will be added to the building, as will a small plaza on the corner of North Prospect Street and Amity Street to "give the building a little more focus," he said.

Parker said she and her husband were forced to sell the Drake because the Zoning Board would not approve the use of a small bar. Brad's Grapevine, already built on the North Prospect side of the structure which was designed to accomodate an older crowd.

"We wouldn't be able to remain in business when the 21-year-old drinking age went into effect without that addition," she said.

authorized programs destructed, prior approval should be obtained from appropriate faculty committees, administration and the trustees.

This did not happen in this case, Musgrave said.

But Ziff said the current program, although in theory acts like a department, is not one. "We don't say we're a department," and because it is currently the seventh largest journalism program in the nation, departmental status is long overdue.

What's new & hot on vinyl

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

BEAT FARMERS: Tales of the New West (Rhino): This Western collaboration is sort of an across-town version of Los Lobos. It is strong Western rock, if a title has to be made up for it, but they do Velvet Underground covers. So, for what it's worth, The Beat Farmers are everything the Blasters try to be but can't because they're English and will never understand. The Beat Farmers will be playing two shows at the Iron Horse tonight.

EURYTHMICS: Be Yourself Tonight (RCA): The Eurythmics have established themselves in the past year or so as the real hitmasters of what was once called New Wave. Be Yourself Tonight is no exception. About three quarters of the album works well. It sounds like the Eurythmics meet Nona Hendryx and the results are really exciting. It is the intelligent pop music that is so lacking from the majority of records which have come out in the last few, well, say as many years as you can count.

SAM COOKE: Live at the Harlem Club (RCA): This album was recorded live in 1963 and is only being issued now. It shows Cooke in a more relaxed setting and proves why he is the inspiration of so many of todays singers. Perhaps even more exciting than Sam Cooke though, is his band which is one of the best R&B bands I've ever heard. I just bought a copy of James Brown Live at the Apollo and Cooke's band leaves Brown's a million miles back.

ETRON FOU LELOUBLAN: Les Poumons Gonfles (Turbo): Etron Fou Leloublan is a French group which became well known for their tours with Henry Cow and later for their work on Fred Frith's solo albums. This record has one interesting side, in which the trio interrelates for some interestingly progressive (cliche) music. The drum, saxaphone, bass combination works well. On the other side the fare is less exciting. Still worth checking out. Available by mail from Wayside Music Box 6517, Wheaton, Md. 20906.

HARP: (Redwood Records): Harp is Holly Near, Arlo Guthrie, Ronnie Gilbert and Pete Seeger, so you can pretty much guess what the record sounds like. And it does. But it's kind of nice. There's a nice version of 'Wimoweh' and the effort is there, which makes the record work when it could have been pretty trite, pretty fast, but it isn't.

ELVIS PRESLEY: Reconsider Baby (RCA): Our copy came in blue vynil and indeed this is Elvis at his bluesiest. The album is a collection of rare and obscure R&B and soul tunes which allowed Elvis to be the true crooner that he was. Among the high points are an alternative take of 'Merry Christmas Baby' and 'When it Rains it Really Pours'.

PRINCE: Around the World in a Day (Warner Bros.): What would you do if all of a sudden you had three times as many people listening to you as before and you were on the cover of People magazine? Well this album is what Prince did. The album is somewhat psychedelic but not nearly as much as people said it would be. There are some songs which sound like the Beatles and the Small Faces but most of the album sounds like Prince and Prince alone. The first side has a long piano solo which gets pretty tedious/pretentious but all the other experiments work well. The second side is made up of four well-matched songs which sound like they were recorded under water. The murky/milky sound is pleasing.

SUZANNE VEGA Suzzane Vega (A&M): The word here is go. This is Suzanne Vega's first album and it sounds pretty interesting. Produced by Lenny Kaye, the songs on the album are a mixture of solo songs and uptempo songs accompanied by a band. Vega's phrasing sounds a lot like Grace Slick but the songs are a little more coherent, sort of tales of love told in a unique and pleasant way. The songs are slightly surreal yet each has a coherent vision.

The Beat Farmers will bring their brand of Western rock to the Iron Horse Cafe for two shows tonight. For ticket info call the Iron Horse at 584-0610.

Billy Bragg: in town before his time

Billy Bragg
at the Rusty Nail
Friday, May 10

By JON STRYMISH
Collegian Staff

Billy Bragg sings like Paul Weller of the Jam and plays guitar like Joe Strummer of the Clash. He has the stage presence of a preppie class clown, and in England they expect him to bridge the difference between the Labour party and Margret Thatcher. The dates on his English tour were announced from the floor of Parliament.

I went to see his concert expecting to pan him for lack of orginality and lyrics that seem slightly vacuous for someone who, as he says, "is applying for the job of spokesman for my generation." Instead, I found Bragg quite articulate. He explained his songs so clearly that I even believed he meant what he was saying.

Bragg spends a lot of his time making fun of other performers. Telling about a meeting with Bruce Springsteen he said, "The Boss said, Hey Billy you know, you should write more songs about cars and women." I thought that the fact that he spent so much time putting down other people was a good reason not to like him but he was funny and I think he only did it to groups he respected.

I had the intention of telling you about how my father used to say, "This music sounds like the agonizing death wails of mutant pygmies." It took him a few weeks to get used to it. Maybe Bragg slows it down a little live so you can hear what he's saying and his lone guitar gets quite pleasant to hear. It's the Fender sound, my favorite, as pure as it's ever going to get, even though he played a Gibson guitar.

The show wasn't long but it was intense. About 200 people sat quietly, on the Rusty Nail floor, with one person swaying to the beat, almost dancing. Bragg dedicated one song to all the people waiting patiently, and then said, "I guess you're all waiting patiently."

For his encore Bragg played his version of "Rte. 66," "Rte A 13," changing the American landscape to an English one and doing Chuck Berry duckwalks. This song stood out from the rest and I wondered if he knew that Rte. 66 went through Northampton just a few miles away.

About his politics: Bragg said he doesn't like Reagan, Thatcher, empty patriotism, and especially not Rupert Murdoch, who is my hero. He made his points quickly and got onto his songs, and despite the crowd's apathy, put on a very good show. I think it is a shame that he will not be the hottest fad up here for a few more months, after so many people missed his concert.

OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

We will be watching

It's almost that time of semester, after classes and publication of the Collegian have ended, when important proposals affecting University of Massachusetts students are often made. Administrators here have a curious habit of keeping their intentions and dialogue to themselves until we are away or are too busy with exams to get involved.

Students now have reason to fear that due to the rise in the drinking age and the nationwide trend toward restricting alcohol use, the University will move further this spring toward making UMass a dry campus.

Such a move would be ill-advised, unnecessary and unenforceable. It would turn resident assistants into residence hall police, necessitate the presence of many more real police officers and make dormitory residents simply take to their cars in search of off-campus gatherings. Worse, it would indicate that the administration, squirming as isolated alcohol-related incidents generate negative publicity, has concluded we are immature and out of control.

Since the late 1970s, the folks in Whitmore have exorcised enough ZooMass demons by banning kegs and (in theory) bottles from the residence halls and by restricting the size of unplanned parties. The threat of furniture flying out of tower windows can no longer be invoked. Nor could three arrests in a well-behaved concert crowd of 5,000, however blown out of proportion by the regional news media, justify prohibiting alcohol at outdoor events, as implied by one campus police officer after this year's Southwest concert.

Most students here use alcohol at least occasionally. Many of them underage; drying up the campus would not change this unless the residential system were turned into a garrison state. Drunken rowdiness and vandalism make headlines, but the overwhelming majority of us are moderate and responsible when we drink.

Administrators surely know that proposing such a policy would meet fierce opposition if they openly confronted the student body with the idea. We hope they will not try to do it behind our backs.

Faculty senate 'apathetic'

Gayle Wintjen

During the past academic year I have witnessed the Faculty Senate deliberate a multitude of issues. The senate has accomplished many of its goals, including the passage of the General Education Requirement, for which it should be commended. But, there were numerous other issues which were never recognized by the senate as being worthy of its time or energy. Perhaps the following suggestions should be considered when the new session commences next semester.

The first matter that the faculty should concentrate on is the lack of diversity. The number of female and Third World senators can be counted on two hands. Of course, this may be a function of the lack of diversity which exists throughout the campus but the responsibility must rest with the departments who elect their senators.

The senate has also been timid about discussing matters of a controversial nature. Granted, the General Education proposal was extremely controversial throughout its years of debate, but academic controversy is expected to occur among scholars who think critically. It is the lack of discussion around social and cultural issues which is manifestly absent from the faculty agenda. Concerns such as the Yvette Henry report, sensitivity toward the lesbian, bisexual and gay community and the biased male/female, white/Third World ratios of the faculty are not outside the scope of faculty discussion. The discussion of the Faculty Senate Status of Minorities report exemplified the narrow scope of faculty interest.

The report was brought before the senate a total of four times. The first two times the report was presented by the chairperson, the senate did not respond to the substance of the report. Their primary concern was the procedure by which students received a copy of the report in the Collegian and why the faculty senate was without copies. The following two times that the report was discussed, a minimal amount of discussion was generated around the substance of the report and recommendations were made to prevent this sort of occurance from happening again, though the recommendations of the report were never officially endorsed.

Another controversial issue, divestment from South Africa, was also brought before the senate. Both Chancellor Joseph Duffey and student opinions were presented before the senate with ample time provided for questions about the validity of the research or the businesses in question. Once again, the faculty proved to be apathetic and unwilling to take a stand on an issue.

It also seems like student issues are not considered to be worthy of our distinguished faculty's interest. Many times during the year announcements were made about the alcohol policy, Code of Student Conduct and the Board of Governors. The disrespect displayed when these issues were addressed by the SGA president was appalling. Additionally, though the SGA president is recognized for debate, the faculty senate constitution does not provide for the him/her to have a vote.

The faculty senate can only be of true service in the decision making process when it makes the appropriate changes and learns how to use its human resources effectively.

In fact, it is probably the only organization on campus with regular access to the chancellor and other top administrative officers. Dialogue around the aforementioned concerns must include all members of the campus community through diverse and adequate representation and should not be divorced from the agenda of the faculty senate.

A voice from the dungeon

For about 4,000 University of Massachusetts students, one of many chapters of a lifelong saga will come to a close as graduation day approaches.

Because the University is comprised of such diversity, so will be the experiences of the students who may have just completed writing the most significant times of their lives. Although a small percentage of the student body take a stand by getting involved or even care about student issues, local or national events, we all read, see or at least hear about them, which gives us all a common bond.

These students who are not willing to blink an eye to the issues that arise also share a commonality in that they are determined to be heard despite obstacles, setbacks, bureaucracy, and encountering people who don't want to listen.

As a part of that student body, I feel as if I've shared a bit of the many experiences encountered by every graduating senior who will participate in a parade of black caps and gowns at Alumni Stadium next Saturday.

Being news editor of New England's largest college daily and deciding what constitutes newsworthiness has brought many pleasant and frustrating experiences that ultimately effect every student at UMass. I've been accused of not knowing what a news story is if it hit me like a Mack truck to being insensitive and not being sensitive enough to issues on campus or concerning UMass students ranging from not covering civil disobedience in Washington, ignoring lectures that are so esoteric that only a Ph. D. in the field could comprehend, to snubbing the many RSO's everytime one makes a move. At one time or another, practically every type of group on campus has said that the news desk is perpetually inaccurate, not accurate enough, biased, too left wing or too right wing.

On the other side of the grass, I hear that my reporters hate me, and only want to write stories if they go on page one, that I'm an elitist, and often succumb to the perils of sexism which is reflected in my news judgement.

While committed to a windowless dungeon full of broken typewriters for about 50 hours a week, carrying 18 credits, where it seems that the traffic of complaints never cease, I hear snickers of what a rag the newspaper is. Contrary to popular belief, sadism does not run through my veins but determination and willingness to achieve a mean keeps the blood flowing. This is the same type of lifeline that flows through every activist who's willing to be arrested for fighting against apartheid, for every individual who stands against racism, antisemitism, for every business student whose bible may be Forbes or Business Week or anyone whose bender is to get hammered as many nights as their body can stand.

Athough the faces, appearances and goals my be different, the 4,000 of us that leave the University to begin writing more experiences in life all share one common trait—the drive to succeed despite the violations of the norm and obstacles that will later be reflected on as tools to gaining our experiences.

Letters to the Editor

Careless rambling an error

On May 1 I made at least one terrible error, I carelessly rambled. I let some of the flaws of my institutionally racist upbringing get the bettter of my current political conscious. I perpetuated a disservice to my affinity group, the other affinity groups getting arrested, and especially to the oppressed people of South Africa whom I thought I was helping by my actions on that day. I do sincerely regret any negative implications caused by my lack of correctness during the action.

Trey Willams please accept my apology, but also try to think of the spirit in which it was offered, I may digress from what is correct, being human I cannot but try to avoid it. My actions of May 1 were made in an attempt to further the cause of equality amongst races, not to hinder it. You have succeeded Willams, you have deflated my spirit, made me feel like an uncaring guilty white male oppressor.

A generation lost in space with no time

David McNair

This child of Vietnam, Watergate, and the '60s in general, has no romantic ideas about America. I've seen people shot in the head on television and a president quit because he lied. Although I was young during those events, they have served as a kind of toilet training, in which the possibility of such incidences seems quite natural.

Armed with my skepticism, surprised by nothing, I attempt to make sense out of the chaos I live in. I am a selfish, cynical iconoclast so I decide not to keep pace with the conservative march (besides, I can't kick my legs that high). And I don't have the energy to be an activist; by the time I get up, have coffee, and contemplate my own nothingness, I barely have the strength to brush my teeth, never mind blockading hallways, incapacitating busses, and going to jail; even though it would make me feel superior to those idle Americans who do "nothing." But, being an idle American, I think it would be too confusing to feel superior to myself. Well, you get the idea.

Still, I have a need to feel grounded to something O.K., I tell myself, "believe in America, it's a great place." Then I find out that Ed McMahon was voted one of the 10 most watched men in the world and that our president believes no one remembers World War II. I am not shocked because my ideals have been shattered, my dreams proven naive, but because I am not surprised at all by this nonsense. It seems my toilet training has taught me to accept just about anything. Consequently, this acceptance cultivates a profound disbelief. Even worse, it is a disbelief that is not a reaction to an alternative belief but rather a confirmation of what I was skeptical about to begin with.

Could the world be too complicated for beliefs? The arms race, mass media, corporate competition; these are the phenomenon that have cast an enormous shadow of complexity over my life. I read a newspaper, a popular magazine, watch television for half an hour, and the information I have to deal with is staggering. The entire world rushes at me in a chaotic assault: Reagan—again—adds new meaning to the word contra-diction (new word?); Nazis in Arkansas; mass graves in Cambodia; yuppies are "in"; Madonna begins her "Virgin Tour"; and Croisanwich beats Egg McMuffin 2 to 1. This pace gives me the feeling that life is a long road and I have stepped on to it from a moving car.

I suppose all new generations have felt this sense of urgency, this feeling that the world is a brutal sort of animal that will swallow people who don't find something to hold on to or hide behind. But what about those of us who have learned to accept chaos and as a result have grown into hardened skeptics? What could possibly shock us into taking a stand? And if something did shock us, would we have the backbone to confront it?

I used to think the freedom my generation enjoyed was unique; a chance to develop our own ideas and plenty of time and space to find ourselves. Yet for me, that freedom has become like an enormous inheritance from some distant relative; I feel guilty because I haven't earned it but I would feel like an idiot if I gave it away. I wonder if freedom is a concept too abstract to manage. Has it made me lazy and denied me a feeling of passion toward life? Am I babbling away in this column because I am bored? Who knows, maybe our generation will be the first to create anarchy from a reaction to boredom. Picture it: a crowd of angry protesters shouting, "No, no, we won't yawn any longer!" Now, that might surprise me.

Trying to fill a lonely emptiness

Bob Kievra

The late night phone calls still shatter his universe. Not long ago, the familiar ring from the kitchen phone changed his world in ways he's just beginning to comprehend.

"Is your mother home, son?" the distant voice queried.

"She's not here right now," the 17-year-old stammered. His mouth quivered uncontrollably as he began to realize who he was talking to. Now was not the time to be home alone.

"It's about your dad," the physician said. "He had a relapse about 45 minutes ago. We couldn't save him."

The instructor drones on as the young man stares blankly out the window and replays that short telephone conversation. It has become a familiar image to him. Hardly a day passes when he doesn't think of that fateful April night. The trees were just budding, the lawn needed clipping and the robins were nesting in the old elm tree. Suddenly, time had been forced to stand still. The days came and went but he no longer felt a part of them. Only recently has the pain and denial subsided. Accepting his father's death was now the difficult task.

He had stopped asking "Why me?" He had known his 55-year-old father wasn't in good health but Dad kept telling his son that he was determined to see him graduate.

Today he finds himself separate from his peers in ways he cannot fully understand. He is asked to partake in a practical joke. He shakes his head wearily, saying he's outgrown such playful acts.

Later, alone in his room, he questions the incident. Had he really outgrown such mischievous behavior? Had he suddenly been asked to grow up overnight? Death does that to you. It strips away all the extraneous behavior and cuts clear to the marrow. He begins to wonder if his childhood had been complete. Had it been snatched away from him prematurely? Had his boyish enthusiasm been buried with his father?

He winces as he hears his friends talk about father and son day at Fenway Park. The old ballpark now holds only memories of days gone by when the two of them spent Saturday afternoons together sitting down the left field lines and telling stories about the Splendid Splinter, the Boomer and Yaz.

College students carry extraordinary burdens from tuition to grades to one's social life. Most students' mental endurance is strained to the limit. That's why it felt so good to get a phone call from home and hear Dad's reassuring voice. It enables us to retain our sanity and forge ahead.

He never had that option. When he feels down he's forced to pick himself up and continue.

The days of little league practice with Dad coaching third are gone. There won't be any more times when Dad will take the day off and take his son fishing. He never did get around to showing you that favorite fishing hole that his dad had shown him.

No, today the son's days are marked with a quiet endurance. He finds himself studying longer, working harder, all in an effort to fill that uncomfortable emptiness in his life. Friends keep having to remind him to smile. His is a void he had no control over but one that he is forced to meet the consequences of.

Some of his friends respect the forced maturity he has undergone. His professors tell him that his attitude is more serious, one marked by greater determination.

As graduation approaches, he would gladly trade that attitude and be able to look around the crowded stadium and catch a glimpse of his father.

STPEC needs more

The functioning of a bureaucracy is such that to engage a response from the administrative organ of the University, the student must activate its role and employ those organs which are at its disposal. The students of the STPEC Program wish, therefore, to utilize this public forum as a means of calling attention to their need for a full-time staff assistant to maintain the continuity and stability of a program presently expanding at a rate few departments can claim.

The creation of a full-time staff assistant position is an acknowledgement and a commitment to the approximately 100 majors engaged in the rigorous study of Social Thought and Political Economy. We, as students, feel it is also a responsibility basic to our progress that this need is acted upon.

The STPEC program is an interdisciplinary major which draws its curriculum from both the University and the Five College area. This administration rightly calls attention to the tremendous educational opportunities available within the University community and cites the STPEC program as an example of such opportunity.

The administration of the University can proudly endorse STPEC because of its unique nature as an undergraduate program; however, it will have to guarantee the program's continuity. Such a guarantee can only be realized by providing a full-time staff position. The response given to the students of STPEC by the administration will be a direct reflection of the University's commitment to the opportunities it expouses for higher education.

But why...?

Why was the speaker of the senate arrested during the senate meeting last week (a very public, and potentially embarrassing situation) when he could have been apprehended at the senate SCERA office all that afternoon? It smells funny. Perhaps he was arrested at this most inopportune time because the administration seeks to intimidate the civicly minded student activists on this campus. If perchance this is the case, let us just tell them now: "It won't work, guys. We're fired up and we won't take it no more!"

Problem was budget cuts, not professor

I was disturbed by the Collegian article of Tuesday, May 6, regarding the non-renewal of Robert Cooley as a mathematics instructor. The article, by its tone, suggested that Bob Cooley was not re-hired for personal reasons and portrayed Professor Larry Mann, chairman of the mathematics department, as yet another insensitive bureaucrat. Neither idea could be further from the truth.

The problem resides with $50,000 cut from the departmental budget. Given that the math department's general operating expenses are already trimmed to the bone, this necessitates that any cuts be made from personnel.

As for why Bob Cooley got cut, it has nothing to do with personality or with his superior teaching. Any outfit has to have a priority system for laying off personnel, should that be necessary. There are many reasons for Bob Cooley's low priority, not the least of which is—by contract—that non-tenured instructors must be layed off before tenured ones.

Thus, Professor Mann was only doing what he was absolutely forced to do. Those who have objections should take up the matter—of the $50,000 cut—with higher authorities and/or the State Legislature, not Professor Mann.

As for Larry Mann's being described as "insensitive," this is absurd to all who know him. I have had the privilege both of being Larry Mann's student and of watching him chair the math department. He is not only extremely sensitive, he is efficient and effective to boot. It is no fault of his that he cannot please all the people, all the time. Who can?

I feel that your reporter owes this fine gentleman an apology.

A teacher of learning

The Undergraduate Student Senate passed a motion by acclamation at the meeting Wednesday to demand the reinstatement of Robert Cooley as a lecturer at the University of Massachusetts.

Cooley spoke briefly on his own behalf, exposing facts about himself and the math department. These include: that he is the only full-time faculty member that teaches more than one large lecture (four to be exact), that he earns only two-thirds of what a normal faculty member makes, that he is the only teacher from the math department who has won the Distinguished Teacher Award and has been nominated for that award each semester since being hired by the University.

The reasons for his being "let go" were that a budget cut of $50,000 had to be made and part of it was the elimlination of calculus and pre-calculus courses he is presently teaching. Therefore, they had to let him go.

Since this time the courses have been reinstated and Cooley has not.

As a concerned student I and the senate by acclamation demand that Larry Mann Chairman of the department of mathematics and statistics, reinstate Cooley as a visiting lecturer to UMass and should be placed in the correct track for tenure. The students who support Cooley should have a voice in the administration's decision to cut one of the University's finest instructors, one who has made learning conducive to all.

Media Held at Fault on U.S. Withdrawal From Unesco

Misrepresentstion by the media of the New World Information Order [NWIO] contributed in a major way to the Administration's sbility to follow through on its threat to withdraw from the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization [UNESCO], Joseph Mehan, UNESCO's Information Officer for the United States and Canada, told a small audience at New Africa House Thursday evening.

Mehan appeared under the sponsorship of the Five College Black Studies Executive Committee with the cooperation of the Afro-American Studies Department and the Journalism Studies Program, replacing the earlier announced Doudou Diene, Director of UNESCO's Liaison Office who was called to the Paris headquarters of UNESCO nexpectedly.

Mehan,longtime journalist, NBC News producer and writer of news documentaries, charged the U.S. media with misinforming the American public about the aims of the New World Information Order. The media, he said, repeatedly and consistently alleged the NWIO aimed at state control of the press, censorship, licensing of journslists and imposing codes of ethics on journalist. The facts are, Mehan pointed out, that the NWIO does not embrace any of these objectiv es. He said that no official UNESCO document exists or has existed advocating these objectives.

The NWIO's aims as clearly expressed in UNESCO documents resolutions, press releases snd statements, are to provide communication capability and to train personnel in developing countries where these do not now exist, as a means toward correcting the imbalance in the flow of news and information, which currently strongly favors industrialized countries.

"Developing countries want the peoples of industrialized countries to have access to a wider variety and scope of news and information about their countries than is now provided," Mehan said. They also feel that their point of view on a wide range of matters from questions of war and disarmanent to a pop music and sports, are seldom made known to the public of industrialized countries and should be. "It is to address these and similar questions that the demand for a NWIO arose," Mehan said.

Recalling the reasons given for the U.S. withdrawal from UNESCO ss over politicisation of UNESCO, mismanagement and inefficiency in its activities snd budgetary excesses, Mehan answered each with convincing clarity. He pointed out thst as an organization of states come together to schieve common goals, UNESCO and the entire UN system is political by nature. Further, he reminded his listeners that when originally set up in 1945, and up until the mid-1950s when the Soviet Union and Eastern European countries joined, UNESCO had been s purely Western dominated sgency so politicised that Western allies of the U.S. complained because the U.S. was using UNESCO ss s propaganda mechsnism in its political debates with the USSR snd the Eastern bloc countries.

"What has changed since those early years," said Mehan, "is not the inherent political nature of UNESCCO, but the fact that now some 70 per cent of UNESCO's l60 members are developing countries and the U.S. is no longer in a position to impose its political positions."

On the charge of mismanagement snd inefficiency, with the implied criticism of UNESCO's director General, Amadou-Mahtar M'Bow, the only African to head a major United Nations Agency, Mehan pointed out that the U.S. General Accounting Office report on UNESCO ordered by Congress, while pointing to areas for improvement, gave UNESCO high grades in relation to other UN agencies and to international bodies generally, and found no evidence of curruption as hsd been alleged by the U.S. medis.

On excessive budgetary expansion Mehan said that the current UNESCO budget of $187 million annually, representing only 7 per cent of the entire United Nstions budget, could hardly be considered excessive for an international organization engaged in educational, scientific and cultural activities, pointing out that a single BI bomber costs $250 million; Columbia University's annual budget is $500 million and the New York City Police Departments annual budget is $1 billion.

Flack Feeds the Flock

It was two hours of live nonstop entertaining music as top female vocalist Roberta Flack appeared in concert at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst Fine Arts Center Concert Hall on Saturday evening.

Hundreds packed the hall to experience the thrill of the veteran. So versatile are her talents, so widerang ing her interests, that it is really no exaggeration to say that Roberta Flack could successfully pursue any hosts of career options for her life.

Flack, a native of Great Valley, West Virginia is clearly a renaissance woman of our age. The past decade has witnessed the establishment of Roberta Flack not only as a superstar, but as an international culture heroine of the first degree. The release of her first album on Atlatic in 1969 introduced an approach that would come to be known as the Roberta Flack signature. Time and time again, her unmistakable voice has been matched to just the right song, performed in that very special way...and the affect is magical.

Ironically, Flack wss a bit sexist when she dedicated her song "I'm the One" to the ladies in the house, however she kept asking the audience for more as thrice she said 'bye' and returned for encores. On numerous occasions she engaged the audience the audience in her acts which installed a feeling of unity.

Her band deserves some of the credit as the members were with her every step of the way.

Her musical abilities go much deeper than merely singing as she is a skilled producer, arranger, songwriter, keyboardist, as well as being involved in all facets of the music business. Yet she also manages to be influentially involved in a number of other projects--education, community/public service charities and much more.

The stream of gold records, the Grammy awards, the critical and public acclaim has all confirmed Ms. Flacks' stature and influence.

Flack recently returned from a tour in England. She replaced Ray Charles, who was scheduled to appear in concert but cancelled. She moved on to New Hampshire where she played last evening before returning to New York

Tutu Psyched at Protests

by Chris Allen

South African Bishop Desmond Tutu, who began a four day tour in California on Friday, said recently that he was 'thrilled' with widespread demonstrations in the United States against his country's system of rscial seperstion.

Tutu, the 1984 Nobel Peace Winner, also said that he was pleased with recent changes in South African laws that ease some restrictions against Blacks, but added that the only change that really mattered would be dismsntling of apartheid.

Tutu said he expects to raise $80,000 on his tour of California Universities and Businesses to help him in his work in South Africa.

"I am thrilled at what is happening in this country," he said, reffering to the calling of many demonstraions calling for withdrawal of American investments in South Africa. "It is giving the word to the Reagan administration that the policies of South Africa are unacceptable," the clergy man said.

Editorials

The policy of the Reagan Administration toward Nicaragua is one of limited options. It is an either-or approach. Toward Sandinistas, it is, as the Nicaraguan foreign minister put it,"Drop dead or we will kill you." And at home it is either military support for the Contras or direct military intervention. This is a very deceiving and dangerous policy, opposing one means having to accept the other option which is essentially the same thing. It is in pursuit of this policy that the administration has consistently ignored and undermined the Contadora Peace process, the Sandinistas' peace initiatives, and has put such totally unacceptable demands with the Nicaraguan government that in reality mean nothing but political suicide and loss of total legitimacy for revolutionary leaders.

The administration's policy and rhetoric while making its prophecies about Nicaragua self-fulfilling, allows it to win over some democrats and place the responsibility for Sandinistas' policies on those who oppose its policies in the congress. The administration's policy and discourse enable it to present a completely distorted and reverse picture of ther situation in Central America. A clear example of this came last week when the administration claimed that the rejection of its military aid proposal to the Contra's in House sent the wrong message to Nicaragua and sent Daniel Ortega to Moscow "for further instructions and more money to pursue disruptions among his neighbors in Central America..." thereby justifying its economic sanction against Nicaragua. This totally ignores the immense pressures put on the Nicaraguan economy by the U.S. covert war against Nicaragua, namely 350 million dollars in trade deficit which forced Ortega to turn to the Eastern bloc for economic aid.

To sum up, the administration's policy allows it to 1) accuse the Sadinistas' of becoming a Soviet base in Central America; 2) to alarm and intimidate its opponents in the Congress; and 3) to claim that the United States cannot afford to buy Nicaraguan coffee and bananas thereby financing Nicaraguan subversian in the area. And so the trend continues and the tension escalates.

Peace activists and those who oppose the administration's policy in Central America must treat it with caution. For preventing military intervention might prove a lot harder than preventing military aid to the Contras; The administration's policy is a potential trap. Its aim, its effects and most important of all, its narrow boundaries must be revealed and broken. In this connection every other alternative must be aggressively explored and articulated. The Contadora peace process and Sandinistas peace initiatives must be given extra publicity. Othewise the opposition will be undermined and overwhelmed by the administration's propagand overtime.

Given the progressively hostile trend of the administration's policies toward Nicaragua, direct military intervention is a distinct possibility. Considering the nature of the administration and the military preparations in this connection does not leave any doubts about its intentions. It is an administration which has regarded the Vietnam war as not only moral but win-able. It is an administraion which is determined to "do it right this time." It is an administration which has vastly increased and improved such units as the Army's new light infantry divisions, 82nd Airbourne, Central Command, Rangers, and Special Forces Operation. These units are trained for and specialized in intervention, counter-insurgency or to use the military jargon,"low intensity warfare."

The Reagan Administration is committed to gunboat diplomacy and is eager to use force as the first resort. Its rhetoric and policies toward revolutionary movements in the Third World speak for themselves. Any sign of tolerance or passivity among the American people would be interpreted by the administration as a green light for intervention. There is, however, a great risk involved. In the Age of thermonuclear weapons and superpower rivalry the consequences of any intervention are highly unpredictable and risky. That is why American people cannot afford to leave their fate--and the fate of the whole world for that matter--in the hands of an administration which is committed to bellicos behavior and belligerent policies.

In the last two weeks Nicaragua has made national headlines. President Reagan wants to send $14 million in aid to anti-goverment Military forces, in Nicaragua. These forces commonly called the "contras" have been called "The moral equals" of the founding fathers of the United States by President Reagan, who says the contras are fighting for freedom, fighting oppression against overwhelming odds. These statements have caused a lot of controversy nationally especially the statement about the contras being "moral equals". As much as I dissagree with Mr. Reagan on many issues, I must admit his statement of "moral equals" is the most accurate statement the President has made in his five years in administration. The contras are murderers, terrorists and rapists. The founding fathers of this country were murderers guilty of genocide, slave holders, and rapists. How can I make this statements? Look at the historical record. First Genocide: People have remembered the slaughter of six million Jews by the Nazi Germany, of 1.5 million Armenians by the Ottoman Turks. What about the obliteration of a whole sub-continent of peoples? I am talking about the American Natives. This entire country was once populated by various Native tribes, where are they now ? Most have been murdered by "heroes" such as Lord Jefferev (Amherst), who in trading with the tribes gave them smallpox infested blankets quaranteeing epidemics and death. Other American heroes such as George Washington in the French and Native American War, Daniel Boone veteran of many Native wars, and Abraham Lincoln of the Seminole wars in Florida led troops in battle in successful attempts to kill this race of people and steal their land. The Native American is now an almost extinct people.

The second accusation, Slave Holders. George Washington, " the father of our country" slave holder general.
Owner of a large plantation full of slaves. Thomas Jefferson the man who wrote the Declaration of Independence, declaring "all men are created equal" and stating the right to "life,liberty and the pursuit of happiness" also a slave holder.

. Slave owner Patrick Henry who said "give me liberty or give me death" did not think his slaves deserved the same considerations. And finally rapists, George Washington "the father of our country" was also the father of many of the children of his female slaves.

Thomas Jefferson also fathered numerous offsprings of various female slaves.

If President Reagan really wants to help rebels fighting for freedom, fighting oppression against overwhelming odds, I know just where the $14 million can go. Send it to rebel troops fighting the goverment of the Union of South Africa. There is no doubt these people are fighting totalitarianism. This is a country were a majority of the people have no human rights what so ever. There is no doubt of these rebels motives, or of the evil of the South Afrikan goverment and its policies. Congress wants to send humanitarian aid somewhere, send it to Ethiopia, millions are starving and much U.S. aid has been snarled in red tape. Send the Aid! Some people will argue that there are people in this country who are starving. Feed them too! We have the resources. If we can spend millions to see how many times some U.S. senator will vomit in outer space, we can spend some money to put food in peoples' stomach. If our President is sincere we should examine these options. The money will be well spent.

We of Nummo hope all our readers have a productive and/or relaxing summer break, whether at work or at play.

For the graduates especially: do not despair over lacking concrete life plans. To have obtained a college degree is, in itself, an outstanding achievement. Remember, this struggle is one that was undertaken for more reasons than just "making it." Also, remember that you have much to contribute to the community beyond your individual economic standing. Our advice, just worry about one thing at a time.

For all our summer departees, whether returning in the fall or not, please recognize that there is little escape from the problems facing all but the most "traditional" middle class students in the attempt to complete an undergraduate education. Both the minimum SAT requirements to affect all Massachusetts public colleges and universities in 1987 and imposed on us by the Regents, and the outcries against the inadaquacies of out high schools, put forth by the Board of Regents, and the outcries commissioned of late, embody attacks on us as consumers of higher education.

The argument that high schools across the nation are not stringent enough, or do not promote high standards as measured in quantitative terms through standardized tests, etc., put the blame on students who will be expected to submit to 'tougher' schooling, even as our schools' budget cutting for the sake of escalating military spending and widespread inequities in our high schools will go unaddressed and the students will then be expected to pay, unless we do something about it.

This situation will affect not only our younger brothers and sisters attempting to further their educations, but all of us who are to face this mentality in the workplace and elsewhere. Blaming the victims of the prevailing retrogressive policies is an old tactic to diffuse the opposition.

We hope as you make ready to take off from Amherst, that you take time to touch base with your community, with other students and give thought to these issues.

Get involved in something in your free time!! Have a good summer and we'll see you next fall.

Sound off with your letters to the editor!!

BCP GRADUATION

Graduates of 1985

by Speaker

On behalf of the University of Massachusetts Administration, as the surpervisor of the Bilingual Collegiate Program, I salute and congratulate all of you for the beautiful act of tonight.

Congratulations are indeed in place to those who recieved awards and prizes, especially the members of the 1985 Graduating class.

I also want to extend our congratulations to all of those who contributed in any way to make this, your dream, come true.

We know that the last four years have not been easy for you. They were not meant to be easy, anyway. We are very familiar with the many obstacles you had to overcome. We are also very aware of the many sleepless nights, the struggle, the sacrifices!

We know that you had to fight against many economic, personal and bureaucratic problems, problems that perhaps at times seemed impossible to solve. But you solved them! You confronted many monsters and enemies and you defeated every one of them. Tonight we celebrate your victories and make each individual victory, our victory!

I wish you luck. You will need it. What remains ahead of us is not easy. But you have the talent and know-how to make it easier for yourselves and others. You have what it takes. You have demonstrated that and we are your witnesses.

Remember that anyone of our victories is a victory of the collective, a victory of our race, which ever that race may be. Anyone one of your actions will be a reflection on each other. Let's make sure that the reflection is a positive one. Because the struggle continues.

Announcements

On Saturday May 18th, 1985, the CCEBMS Program will be sponsoring its annual Family Day Program. The purpose of this program is to invite our students, their parents and friends, and members of the faculty and staff at the University to come and share with us in the celebration of the accomplishments of CCEBMS students.

The Program will take plaze in the Campus Center Auditorium from 11:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. We are asking you to take some time from your busy schedule to come and participate in this program. A full luncheon will be provided as part of the day's activities. This year due to increasing costs, we are asking parents and friends for a donation of $5.00 per family to help defray the costs of the program. Please make your check payable to CCEBMS. For planning purposes we would like to have your reservation response by May 9th. You may respond by telephone or in writing by sending your letter to:

FAMILY DAY

Commencement 1985

10:00 a.m., Saturday, May 25

All Candidates
There is no Commencement rehearsal for degree candidates. Candidates should assemble by school/college at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium no later than 9 a.m. graduation morning, May 25, 1985. Signs will be posted indicating schools, and Commencement Marshals will issue specific instructions and distribute programs. Upon signal, candidates will follow the Commencement Marshals to the assigned areas and be seated.

Candidates will receive diploma covers from the deans of their school or college. Diplomas will be mailed when all processing has been completed. Please be sure the Registrar has your correct permanent address.

Who is Eligible to Participate?
Undergraduate degree candidates who anticipate completing degree requirements by the end of the calendar year 1985. Questions concerning academic status should be directed to the Records Office, 213 Whitmore, 545-0555.

Master degree candidates who have previously submitted the Degree Application Form by April 30, 1985 to the Office of Degree Requirements stating the intention to complete all requirements. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, 545-0024.

Doctoral degree candidates who have completed all degree requirements by April 30, 1985. Questions concerning eligibility should be directed to the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, 545-0024.

Faculty
Faculty and staff should assemble at the SOUTH end of the stadium on the gravel between the Facilities Building and the stadium wall. Faculty will be part of the processional and will be seated immediately in front of the candidates from each school and college.

Parents and Invited Guests/Plan to Arrive Early — Space is Limited
Since the Commencement Exercises are open to the public and guest seating is without reservation, parents and friends should plan to arrive early to ensure good seating.

Handicapped Seating
Viewing area for the handicapped will be located on both sides of the stadium on the eastern and western walkways. Since seating is limited, it is requested that only one person accompany the handicapped guest.

Invitations
There is no limit to the number of guests who may attend the ceremony and tickets are not required. Each student will receive a packet of six formal invitations.

Caps, Gowns, and Hoods
Undergraduate and Master Degree Candidates
Caps, gowns, tassels, and invitations will be available at no charge on presentation of an I.D. and announcement of the degree earned and the department awarding it, at the Textbook Annex, May 6-May 24, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

On Commencement Day, May 25, caps, gowns, and tassels may be obtained after 8 a.m. at the SOUTHWEST corner of Alumni Stadium.

Doctoral Degree Candidates
Doctoral caps, gowns, tassels, hoods and invitations will be available only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, Room A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, April 29-May 24, Monday through Friday, 8:30 a.m. through 5 p.m., upon clearance by the Office of Degree Requirements. On Commencement Day, caps, gowns, tassels, and hoods may be obtained after 9 a.m. at the NORTHWEST end of the stadium (on the gravel area).

Doctoral candidates who plan to participate in the Commencement ceremony must have a hood. Each candidate's name will be announced over the stadium sound system and two officers of the University will drape the hood on the candidate's shoulders. Doctoral hoods can be purchased only at the Office of Graduate Degree Requirements, A249, Lederle Graduate Research Center, at a cost of $30. (Five College Doctoral Hoods will be available at $42.95.) Doctoral hoods may be rented through the University Store at a cost of $10.

Rentals
Academic apparel for this year's University Commencement may be rented through the University Store. All faculty members are urged to place their orders as soon as possible. THE LAST DAY TO ORDER IS FRIDAY, MAY 17. Payment must be made at the time of order and there will be no refunds. If apparel is not used. Academic apparel may also be purchased. For further information about rentals or purchases, please contact Connie Szelwicki at the University Store, 545-2619.

Accommodations
Many area motels are already booked for the evenings of May 24 and 25. A limited number of rooms in University dormitories will be available for relatives and their guests for the nights of May 24 and 25. Please contact the Conference Services Office in the Campus Center (413) 545-1500, as soon as possible to request a form to reserve for dormitory housing. These forms must be returned with full payment to Conference Services no later than May 3, to guarantee your dormitory room reservation.

Food Services
Coffee, soft drinks, and donuts will be available at rotundas on both sides of the stadium toward the North.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Student to take advantage of Oxford seminar program

By KIMBERLY A. BURGE
Collegian Staff

It's not every student who gets to spend their summer in London, England, but Christopher Williams will have the opportunity to take classes this summer at Trinity College at Oxford.

"I feel happy and excited. It's a once in a lifetime opportunity," said Williams, a junior social thought and political economy major.

The Oxford Summer Seminar at Trinity College is a non-profit educational program. The program provides American students with the opportunity to study under the tutelage of the Oxford system of tutorials and small seminars. Students are advised to take two out of three courses because the workload is so heavy.

"I hope to be intellectually stimulated and academically challenged at Oxford," Wiliams said.

He signed up when he read about the program in the University Bulletin. "I had the feeling that I would get in," he said.

Approximately 34 students from the University of Massachusetts will be participating in the summer seminar program from July 2 to August 10.

"I'm looking forward to meeting other students, taking classes, doing my own research, and traveling," he said.

As far as helping his career, he said, "Whatever skills I acquire at Oxford, I hope I can apply to any field that I decide to go into in the future."

Because Williams has been very active during his three years at UMass, he said he's disappointed by the lack of interest that students have shown in activities.

However, he said there are "pockets" of activism on campus like events sponsored by organizations such as Afrik-Am, the Malcolm X center and black fraternities.

He suspects "students are plunged into an activity and don't know how to come to grips with the situation and become alienated from other students on campus. Some students feel that it's a capital offense to be black on campus."

Williams said all minority students should take advantage of all programs offered and strive for the best. "Black people have been content with mediocrity for too long. I think people should reach for the best. Even though you may not get it, strive for it anyway."

Williams said, black people also have to come to grips with their history. "People who don't know their history are condemned to repeat it. We do that on a regular basis which is why we are in the predicament that we are in today, with black unemployment and black dependence on America," he said.

Blacks have key to end apartheid

• Which way for South Africa?

By BAYARD RUSTIN
A. Phillip Randolph Institute

For the last 25 years, predictions of an imminent race war in South Africa have abounded. Most of these warnings have come after sporatic outbursts of violence such as the shootings at Sharpeville in 1960 and the 1976 Soweto student demonstrations.

These dramatic tragedies drew world attention leading many people, unfamiliar with the complexities of South Africa, to believe that violent revolution was imminent. With whites less than one quarter of the total population, their days in power seemed numbered.

Recent events have again drawn our attention to South Africa and there are renewed warnings of a bloody race war if the government does not act quickly to end apartheid and establish majority rule. While the world has waited for what seemed to be inevitable, the South African regime has continued on much the same course that was set in 1948.

Apartheid has been entrenched by the recently adopted Constitution and the homelands policy continues, making the majority of South Africans foreigners in the land of their birth. All this is bolstered by a military force more powerful than the combined forces of sub-Saharan Africa.

To be sure, apartheid will end someday and there will be black rule in South Africa. However, to continue to assert that violent revolution is imminent is to ignore both the extraordinary military capabilities of the South African regime and its ability to employ extreme forms of violent oppression to maintain the status quo.

I believe that change in South Africa will come about through an evolutionary process which will include continued spontaneous violent outbursts on the one hand, and the resistance of individuals and groups dedicated to nonviolent, peaceful change within that country, on the other.

It is the ongoing violence of the government of South Africa and the occasional acts of sabotage by its opponents which attract the fleeting attention of the news media.

Consequently, most Americans are not aware that there are hundreds of groups within South Africa working for peaceful change. They include churches, trade unions, civil and human rights groups, women's groups, and social welfare and humanitarian agencies. People of all races who are committed to seeking democratic change in South Africa are struggling, as individuals or groups, under the harshest circumstances.

The degree to which peaceful change is possible in South Africa depends largely on the ability of its nonviolent groups to continue the fight. These groups face incredible odds but are committed to the struggle to democratize South Africa.

The South African government responds to both violent and nonviolent resistance with more and more oppression. Its opponents who employ violence face a death sentence or exile at the infamous Robben Island prison. Those who resist nonviolently face detention without trial, jail, and the peculiarly South African invention known as banning which, briefly, relegates one to the satus of a "non-person". Some who resist are forced to seek refuge in neighboring states or in Europe.

To date most Americans who abhor apartheid have expressed their opposition in three ways: 1) they have urged the American government to abandon "constructive engagement" and to adopt a policy which clearly opposes apartheid; 2) they have called for disinvestment on the part of American corporations doing business in South Africa; and 3) they have supported the sports and cultural boycotts of South Africa conducted by much of the world community. While these efforts have not brought about the end of apartheid, they have let the people of South Africa know that they do have foreign allies in the struggle for freedom.

I believe that it is time we found ways to broaden our support for the freedom movement in South Africa. During my two recent visits there the point which was most frequently stressed was this: that meaningful change in South Africa can only come about from within. The struggle for change within South Africa is primarily the responsibility of the people of South Africa. This was reaffirmed to Senator Ted Kennedy during his visit there by Winnie Mandela, the wife of Nelson Mandela, the imprisoned leader of the African National Congress.

• Protest helps end apartheid?

By MANNING MARABLE
Special to the Collegian

Hundreds of thousands of students have seized administration buildings, boycotted classes and held rallies demanding that their universities halt investments in corporations doing business in South Africa.

At the University of Wisconsin at Madison, several hundred protestors occupied a conference center at the State Capitol; at the University of California at Los Angeles, at least two hundred protestors took over a campus building, following a demonstration of two thousand students. Rallies and protests occurred at over 75 campuses nationwide.

At Colgate University, about 400 students met on the campus yard to protest investments in South Africa. Subsequently students marched to the main administration building and spontaneously conducted a sit-in which lasted several days. Anti-apartheid faculty held lectures and discussions on the moral, political and economic reasons justifying total divestment.

Some black students were in the leadership of these protests, but the majority simply disappeared. Had they been studying for exams, which were still three weeks away, there might have been a valid excuse for inactivity. But some were clearly afraid to "get involved"; others didn't understand "what apartheid was"; and still others, a tiny minority openly supported U.S. investments inside apartheid.

This incident, albeit insignificant in the general trend of anti-apartheid struggles, raised for me several concerns. We may point to reams of statistics which illustrate that colleges which have divested have not suffered; we may cite evidence that virtually every legitimate trade union, religious and political leader of black South Africa favors sanctions against the regime; we may even repeat, for the thousandth time, the cases where U.S. firms have provided technical and material support to the mechanisms of violence which maim and murder African people.

But we cannot mobilize effectively to aid in the liberation of South Africa so long as black Americans themselves are confused, divided and disoriented about our stake in the worldwide struggle against racism.

Too many Afro-American youth have not been educated or motivated to comprehend the direct connection between racial oppression in South Africa with the Reaganite racism inside the U.S. Defenders of the status quo may say that agitation has no place inside educational institutions. But education without social conscience and a political orientation is no education at all.

Students involved in the "sit-in" movement across the South a quarter of a century ago learned more about racism and politics than in any course on contemporary government. An education for blacks which provides technical abilities without a sense of racial heritage and political commitment creates a generation of Clarence Pendletons.

But perhaps the larger question is whether we can expect the battle against racial inequality to include all black people. Some blacks, for various reasons, clearly identify with systems of exploitation. A few have even convinced themselves that fundamental, democratic change isn't possible in the short run, hence accommodation is now the name of the game.

Given the growth of the "black Anglo-Saxons" in corporate circles and elective offices since the late 1960s, we can anticipate even more defections from the ranks of the civil rights movement; blacks who pay lip-service to racial justice but whose actions demonstrate a commitment to apartheid and Reaganism.

Our struggle along the color line must include all people - including many whites - who have acted in concert with us to destroy apartheid, poverty, and social injustice. Reform and democracy will require a broad coalition of progressive forces.

But we cannot expect all Afro-Americans to rally for divestment, affirmative action, or for full employment, in an environment which rewards capitulation and subservience. As thousands of white students illustrated last month, the fight to abolish racism is not fundamentally a black-white conflict. Nor are our opponents solely white.

ACCLAIMED—Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega shakes hand with the crowd of a few hundred supporters who gathered around the Paris "House of Latin America" Monday with flags and banners reading "no to the U.S. trade embargo on Nicaragua, we need an urgent material help," shortly after giving a press conference. President Ortega was in Paris for a one-day vistit as part of a tour of Europe.

The University of Massachusetts scored six runs in the top of the tenth inning to end its season with a 15-9 victory over Holy Cross in Worcester yesterday.

Sophomore catcher Sean Flint doubled in freshman third baseman Darrin O'Connor with the winning run in the tenth as UMass finished the season at 26-19, the most wins in the team's history.

Jeff Jensen picked up the win in relief for UMass as the hard-throwing junior came in and shut the Crusaders down in the bottom of the tenth.

Senior firsthaseman Todd Comeau closed out his record setting career at UMass with a three-for-seven day. Comeau also drove in four runs to finish with a school record 59 for the season.

Comeau also holds the career hits record with 181 in his four seasons. Senior outfielder Bruce Kingman scored two runs to bring his school record total to 50 for the season. Comeau and Kingman averaged over one RBI and run per game, respectively, for the Minutemen this season.

For UMass, freshman Steve Allen started the game and went five innings before giving way to junior righthander Jon Martin. Junior Matt Suhocz came in for Martin in the seventh before Jensen finished up and got the victory, his fourth of the season against no losses.

Martin, Jensen, Steve Allard and Bob Kostro each had a team-high four wins during the season for Dick Bergquist's club. Martin led the staff in games with 17. Jensen worked 16 games and also had four saves.

Each UMass starter had at least one hit with the exception of senior shortstop Angelo Salustri, who went 0-for-four. The potent UMass offense pounded out 17 hits in the game. The Crudaders fall to 15-12 on the season. The Minutemen made it two straight against Holy Cross as they won 6-3 last season.

Yesterday's game was a make-up of a contest scheduled for April 8. The original game was rained out and could not be rescheduled because of the Minutemen's heavy schedule.

Hard-hitting offense set records

Seniors Angelo Salustri, Todd Comeau and Bruce Kingman will leave the University of Massachusetts baseball team very fondly remembered.

The trio will finish their careers with a combined six school records after leading UMass to a 25-19 record.

Salustri and Comeau were awarded the Thompson Most Valuable Player Award for their efforts in a dinner Sunday night. Senior Dan Clifford, who went from a third string catcher to a .391 hitting outfielder/first baseman/catcher/third baseman, was given the Dennis Della Piana Award for determination, courage and sportsmanship.

Comeau, a first baseman/designated hitter who also starred for the football team as a linebacker, hit .381 for the season with a team record 59 hits and 53 runs batted in. He is also the career hits leader with 178, shattering the old mark of 157.

Salustri, an all-New England shortstop, tied with Comeau with nine homers for the season while hitting .351.

He is second in hits for the season with 55, second in runs scored with 44 and third in seasonal RBI with 40. He is also third in career hits with 137.

Kingman, an outfielder who is up for all-New England this season, hit .312 and set season records for runs (48), walks (51) and doubles (13). His four homers tied for second on the team behind Comeau and Salustri.

The team set school records for wins (26) and batting average (.326). They won six straight to finish the season and were 8-4 in the Atlantic 10.

Comeau led the team in triples with five. Salustri had the most at-bats with 157 while Steve Messina, Kingman and Salustri were the only players to play all 45 games.

Pitching statistics saw Steve Allard, Bob Kostro and Don Martin lead the team in wins with four. Matt Sheran's 2.59 earned run average was lowest while Kostro led with 34 strike outs. Allard had 33 with Jim "Hard Luck" Knopf punching out 31. Knopf pitched the most innings, 48.2.

Men take 11th in NE meet

The University of Massachusetts men's track team concluded its season in impressive form, taking 11th place overall at the New England Regional Track Championships at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The Minutemen finished with a total of 18 points to put them at the top of the second-ten list forty-one schools competed in the competition, won by Northeastern University.

The four-by-400 relay team had the highest finish, ending up in third place with a time of 3:15.5. Sophomores Rick Labarge and Rawle Crichlow, freshman Craig Moburg, and senior Neil Dickson combined to post a new school record.

Labarge and Crichlow combined with freshman Larry Cuddy and sophomore Bobby Jett to finish in sixth in the four-by-100 relay with their fastest time, a 42.60.

Jack Marinilli came in fourth in the 1500 meters. The senior posted a time of 3:49.8. Junior John Panaccione ended up in fourth in the 5000 meters, posting a time of 14:38.2. Mark Themea came in fifth in the 800 meters with a time of 1:51.7 and John Lorenzini finished in sixth in the 10,000 meters with a time of 31:38.

"The whole season unfolded pretty much the way we thought," coach Ken O'Brien said. "We're a young team-freshmen and sophomore oriented-but we have a lot of potential."

O'Brien feels that next year, the same young people who finished in fifth and sixth place may move up the ladder.

"We're a good team. All we need is one year of seasoning and experience and the kids can start to advance," the coach said.

UM softball sets ERA record

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

It was a record setting year for the University of Massachusetts softball team. However, some of the records that were broken were ones that the team didn't really want to break.

UMass, which set a school record with 23 losses, breaking the old record of 12 (1984), was a team with some strong pitching all season long.

Junior co-captain Lynn Stockley set four records and tied another. Stockley tied her record for most wins, 15, that she set in 1983 and 1984. Stockley also broke teammate's Cathy Reed's 0.90 ERA from 1983 with a ERA of 0.53. Stockley also set a shutout record, 10, record for most innings pitched, 170.33, and most games appeared in, 25.

The pitching staff of Stockley (15-8), freshman Lisa Rever (8-8-1, 0.80) and Reed (2-6, 2.49) also set a team ERA record of 0.92 breaking the 1983 record of 1.07 that Reed and Stockley set as freshmen.

Offensively, UMass had the most hits ever, 345, breaking the 1984 record of 304 but it posted its worst batting team average ever with a .265. Carol Frattaroli set two records with 20 hunt sacrifices and 22 total sacrifices on the year.

On the down side, freshman, who was tied for the team lead in triples (three) with Sally Maher and Reth Talbott, set a school record for strikeouts (15) snapping Talbott's 1983 and 1984 marks of 12.

Freshman Paige Kopcza led the team in batting this year with a .387 while Talbott (.306), Maher (.303) and Leigh Petroski (.300) each hit over .300.

Reed led the team with 14 RBI on the year while Frattaroli had 13. Frattaroli led the team in doubles (five) while Maher had the most hits (46) and freshman Ilene Freeman had the most home runs, two.

Kopcza drew the most walks, eight, and Maher stole the most bases, 11. Freshman outfielder Chris Ciepiela was the only player on the team with no errors while freshman Alisa Fila led the team with 12 at short.

UMass posted a 25-23-1 slate, a .510 winning percentage, the worst ever, breaking the 1981 record of .670, a 16-8 record. But with 25 wins, UMass was four games short of a record-setting 29 wins (1984). UMass did have eight one-run losses in 1985 along with seven extra-inning affairs, including two 10 innng games and one 12 inning game. UMass was 2-5 in extra innings.

Crimson Crew and Exercise Science win titles

In the intramural softball championships on Thursday, two more champions were crowned.

The Crimson Crew beat No Hang-Ups 3-2 for the women's title with Exercise Science downing American Express 4-1 for the co-rec crown.

In the women's game, Lisa Twanley drove in two runs for the Crew. Ellen Oakes tied the game for the No Hang-Ups before the Crew won the game in the fourth.

In the co-rec final, Exercise Science scored two in the second on three straight hits and added two more in the fifth. American Express scored a single run in the ninth, but left two runners stranded to take the loss. The games were at lower Boyden before cheering crowds.

State police stake out bars

Caused by drunk driving cases

By CHRIS POON
Collegian Staff

Three local bars may be subject to stakeouts by undercover police as Massachusetts State Police continue to crack down on bars connected with drunk driving cases, a state Department of Public Safety spokesman said yesterday.

The Pub and Delano's in Amherst and Sheehan's Cafe in Northampton were notified last month by the state Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission (ABCC) that they may be subjected to an undercover investigation known as "Operation Last Call." Those establishments are connected to drunk driving cases that have been brought to district court.

The three bars are among 125 in the state that have been warned by the ABCC because they all have been named in at least four drunk driving cases this year, spokesman Jeff Grossman said.

The Pub has been connected with 13 cases this year and is eighth on the list of Massachusetts bars that have the highest number of drunk driving related cases.

"I don't think we've been careless in the way we serve alcohol," said Jerry Jolly, owner of the Pub. He said his bouncers, waitresses and bartenders have been taught to control the bar's patrons which can number up to 1,500 on a busy night.

"I don't have anything to hide," Chick Delano, owner of Delano's, said. Delano's has been cited in eight cases of drunk driving. He said he does not mind if an investigation is conducted in his bar because he has come away "clean" from previous local police investigations.

"This is not a ten most wanted list," Grossman said. The bars in Amherst may not be any worse than other bars in the state, he said, but because they have been cited in at least four drunk driving cases, they were reported to the ABCC through information tabulated in Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti's office.

Evidence collected from the stakeouts will be reported to the ABCC and action taken at court hearings may result in the suspension of the establishment's liquor liscence, Grossman said.

"These establishments need to realize that they are increasingly liable for their actions," Grossman said. He said drinking establishments are increasingly subject to civil lawsuits related to drunk driving.

The undercover stakeouts by state police officers will continue throughout the summer and will be conducted in every county in the state. Police officers involved in recent Boston stakeouts have arrested some people and have placed others in protective custody.

New law spurs talk of a campus jail

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

If current proposals between University of Massachusetts public safety officials, the administration, professors and students are implemented to help comply with a new state law, there will be more bars on campus — but not the drinking kind.

The construction of holding cells on campus has been suggested in response to new law, which is designed to reduce the incidence of suicides by those arrested or put under protective custody by requiring that police check each prisoner every 15 minutes. The law was supposed to take effect last month, but implementation has been delayed until October because of high costs, Philip Cavanaugh, associate director of public safety, said.

"Police chiefs have a lot of questions as how to comply to the law," he said. "The new law imposes financial burdens, which are being re-studied for possible modifications."

A memorandum from the UMass Citizen's Advisory Board to the Department of Public Safety says that if campus cells are not built, UMass police who make campus arrests will be responsible for monitoring the detainees in town jails.

Student board memher Bradley Ferris, who introduced the proposal of building holding cells on campus, said it would eliminate having to hire and pay an extra UMass officer to go to Northampton or Amherst jails to monitor prisoners.

Because people arrested by UMass police are currently taken to Dickinson Hall where the department is located and then transported to Amherst or Northampton, Ferris said, cells on campus would limit the number of lawsuits against police and make it easier for UMass students or friends of those arrested to post bail.

"Everytime you move a prisoner, there's more of a chance for a lawsuit if the person kicks or causes a problem," Ferris said. "They (Amherst Police) don't want to worry about lawsuits from students on campus for which they are not responsible for."

Ferris said the board has also discussed centralizing the department of public safety in the basement of Dickinson, where the cells would be located. He said this would require major renovations taking two years to build at high costs.

Sarah Boy, special assistant to the vice chancellor for student affairs who convenes the board, said holding cells would give campus police more control over prisoners and prisoners better access to bail.

However, to allow bail to be paid at a UMass holding cell would require having a bondsman, which in turn would make the cell a full-scale jail.

Boy said that in recent years there have been 300 to 400 arrests annually, along with 50 to 100 taken in under protective custody. The holding cell, which would only house prisoners for short periods of time, would not always eliminate sending people to other jails. Boy said she was also concerned that the notion of having a jail on campus contradicts campus values.

"The major problem is that the idea is so contrary to the academic tradition," she said. "It changes the atmosphere of the campus which is an unpalatable thought."

Boy said some colleges and universities have jails on campus that "really work," but added that the board will study the possibility further this summer and will decide in the fall what recommendations to make.

The year in review: students up in arms

News Analysis

By LAURA YEE
Collegian News Editor

Some say the characteristics of the 1960s can be seen in the 1980s: an increasing number of college students, especially at the University of Massachusetts, who are no longer willing to side with the establishment. A year of numerous protests — against apartheid practices in South Africa, aid to the Contras in Nicaragua and University purposals — shouted yes, we do care. The protests highlighted the news this past year.

More Reagan: Despite the fact that about 20,000 people surrounded campus pond to see the first woman candidate for the vice presidency in the largest political gathering here ever, Ronald Reagan managed to win a landslide victory against the Democratic ticket of Walter Mondale and Geraldine Ferarro. Though it meant four more years of Reagan for Amherst voters who vote mostly democratic, John Kerry did make the Senate. Reagan proposed huge financial aid cuts to help remedy the budget deficit, but wanted more aid to the Contras and more of the taxpayers' money to build nuclear weapons.

Financial Aid Alert: Reagan who proposed to slash financial aid, said that families making $32,000 or more annually didn't need guaranteed student loans, that students shouldn't get more than $4,000 in aid, and that Pell grants should be restricted to students in families making less than $25,000. Reagan's plan also met with an axe thanks to students and families who protested along with UMass' Students Advocating Financial Aid during a weekend of lobbying efforts in Washington.

Battles Over Student Rights: When students returned for the spring semester, they found that the University administration had stealthily eliminated the Campus Center Board of Governors, who oversee a building paid for by students. The administration's proposed plan to combine the trust funds of the Campus Center, conference services and the dining commons was defeated — but only for the time being, some say.

The administration also felt the need this past year to correct its own mistake of delaying renovation of desperately deteriorating buildings by restructuring fees into the Universal Resource Fee. The students who protested this change faced a bitter defeat when it passed, meaning commuter and graduate students will end up paying for renovations of residence halls and dining commons they do not use.

The police bomb not only destroyed the MOVE house and killed at least five people inside, but also set an entire section of Philadelphia ablaze. At least 60 houses burned when fire from the explosion spread; firefighters held back from battling the flames for fear they would be shot at by MOVE members.

Fac. senate wraps up another year

By LESLEY CLARK
Collegian Staff

Another year fraught with academic, student and administrative concerns comes to a close tomorrow for the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate.

The senate represents all faculty members in recommending policies for the governance of the campus. Comprising 120 faculty members and divided into dozens of committees, the senate meets with administrative heads once every other week to discuss problems involving the faculty and academics.

This year's senate approved the creation of more than three departments, passed a new core requirement plan and scrutinized the University's share of the state budget.

Passage of the general education plan in December ended nearly three years of debate.

News Analysis

The plan, which seeks to add more cultural and social diversity to the University curriculum, was an extensive effort, requiring faculty approval of nearly 30 pages of detailed motions.

Discussion on the language within the document dominated nearly every senate meeting in the fall.

The plan, if approved by the Board of Trustees, will be implemented in the fall of 1986.

This spring, the issues which dominated four meetings and spurred the most heated discussion was the senate-generated report on Yvette I. Henry. The report, a creation of the Committee on the Status of Minorities, found evidence of civil rights violations in the arrest and interrogation of a resident assistant arrested and charged with arson in connection with the fires which plagued Crampton House in the fall of 1983.

The report, which charges several administrators with misconduct, recommended several proposals designed to aid the University in handling a crisis situation.

The report was brought to the senate floor four times, to "put more bite into the proposals," said David Booth, chairman of the senate Rules Committee. The approved motions include clarification of the role of the Dean of Students Office and increased crisis management training for campus security.

The University's state budget was dissected in several senate meetings. Reports from the Program and Budget Council outlined the erosion on the campus fiscal base. The senate attributed UMass' declining share of state money to the State Board of Regents of Higher Education's budget classifications, which reduced the Amherst campus' funding.

Student Activism: Students screaming to be heard at a four-day sit-in at the Whitmore Administration Building helped save the BOG and established a committee to investigate University holdings in companies that do business connected to South Africa. Demands for modifications of the Universal Resource Fee were defeated, but these students helped ignite a string of apartheid protests on campuses nationwide.

As the year progressed, it seemed that groups had to book the steps of the Student Union Building in advance for a rally when the numbers of protests began to swell.

Setting Standards: The BOG did not seek to ban pornographic material from the University Store, as in 1983-84, but instead helped to end the contract of the allegedly sexist and racist comedian Cliff Meyers and to tell the entire University population not to drink Coors beer. Other student groups questioned whether the BOG overstepped its bounds by banning the sale of Coors beer on campus which is manufactured by a family who support right wing groups and practice unfair employee policies. In a referendum, more than two-thirds of the students who voted said they didn't want the BOG telling them what kind of beer they should drink.

The notion that the administration is out to pull the rug from under students was further reinforced when the Collegian associate news editor uncovered a report saying that the administration had violated the civil rights of Yvette I. Henry, who was accused of setting one of a series of dormitory fires last year.

Report called inspiring and discouraging

By DEBORAH ROSS
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: This is the second part of a two-part series on the recent report examining the climate for gay, lesbian and bisexual students at UMass. Today's story focuses on reaction to the report.

The report released Monday on the current campus climate for gay, lesbian and bisexual students at the University of Massachusetts suggests the environment is "problematic," Dennis Madson, vice chancellor for student affairs, said yesterday.

Madson said his first brief reading of the report indicated problems in such areas as support services, discrimination, faculty, and acceptance by heterosexual students, but he stressed that he needs more time to analyze the data carefully.

According to Felice Yeskel, the human relations planner and advocate responsible for coordinating the campus-wide research, the other major problems faced by gay and lesbian student which emerged from the report include harassment, discrimination, lack of educational opportunities, inadequate library resources and the finding that "lesbian, gay and bisexual students do not perceive the existing University agencies as meeting their needs."

"These problems suggest that in the normal course of being gay, lesbian or bisexual on this campus you are at best invisible and at worst oppressed," Yeskel said.

Commenting on the findings of the report, Debra Kenn, co-director of the Lesbian Union, said, "It's nothing I didn't expect.

"On the one hand it's encouraging because the statistics bear out our own fears, but on the other hand it's encouraging because it shows there is administrative concern for what's going on," she said.

Jennifer Brauer, co-director with Kenn, agreed that although the report suggests an environment "hostile to say the least," it is encouraging because "the first step is letting people know there is a problem and what the problem is."

Paul Throne, member of the UMass Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance and the Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Men's Counselling Collective, remarked that what most surprised him about the data was "the extent to which gay, lesbian and bisexual students experience harassment" and "the extent to which they did not report it."

According to the report, 67 percent of the lesbian, gay and bisexual students who responded that they had been victims of harassment or discrimination said they never reported the incident to anyone.

Because of the frequency of harassment and the fear involved in reporting it, it is not surprising that many students are "forced to be in the closet," Throne said.

Peace activist plans nationwide walk

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

Question: What can you do with four million meals, 20,000 pairs of shoes and sneakers, 2,500 tents, and more than one million showers?

Answer: Conduct a cross-country walk for peace and nuclear disarmament with 5,000 marchers next Spring.

This is the plan of PRO-Peace, a group based in Los Angeles and headed by David B. Mixner, a political activist and former campaign worker for Gary Hart, Tom Bradley, Eugene McCarthy, and Robert Kennedy.

Mixner will be visiting the University of Massachusetts Friday for a talk and reception to rally support for the march.

During a telephone interview from Los Angeles yesterday, Mixner said he hopes to organize 5,000 marchers who will leave California next March and walk more than 3,000 miles across the country, assembling with larger crowds in Washington, D.C. about nine months later.

"I decided to do this when my 7-year-old niece told me she wasn't worried about what she would be doing for a living because there would be nuclear war," he said.

"I realized not only that this situation was building up around us but also that we were robbing her of that dream."

The extensive planning involved necessitates that only 5,000 marchers complete the entire route. For that number, 15 acres of campsites will be required every 15 miles along the way, he said.

PRO-Peace Director of Communications Judith Pinero said yesterday that response to the plan has been enthusiastic and that the group has raised at least $250,000 on donations.

"The primary goal of PRO-Peace is to build a worldwide citizens' movement so powerful that world leaders can't ignore their opposition to nuclear weapons," she said.

PRO-Peace must first capture the imaginations of the American people and conduct the march in order to organize successfully an international movement for nuclear disarmament, she said.

There will be a talk and reception with Mixner at 4:30 p.m. Friday in Campus Center room 163.

New payroll computer hits snag in first week

By LAURA KOESTER
Collegian Staff

About 200 University of Massachusetts payroll checks were not processed last week due to problems with the implementation of a new computer payroll system.

"The minute we found out that 200 people were not going to be paid, we called the departments and made cash advances available to anyone that needed them," explained Robert Garstka, director of Human Resources.

The cash advances were for 80 percent of the regular amount, according to Wendy St. James, secretary to Payroll Administrator Thadius Los, who was attending a meeting in Worcester.

Most of the Payroll checks were students' Garstka said the new system rejected the checks because two batches were put together by mistake, causing the computer to "kick out" the excess checks.

The new human resources information system is in operation on UMass' Worcester and Boston campuses as well as Amherst and was selected by a committee of representatives from all three campuses and President David Knapp's office, Gartska said.

"We process about 21,000 checks a week, so 200 checks is a relatively small amount. We had very few problems with the new system. There are always problems that have to be resolved," Gartska said.

When asked why the administration did not wait until the end of the semester to implement the new system, Gartska responded, "There is no ideal time to put it in. At the end of May, we have student summer appointments to process, and June is the end of the fiscal year.

★report

Human Relations and member of the UMass Committee on Issues of Sexual Orientation, said her overall sense was that "the report confirms what before was intuitive or anecdotal."

Dave Carney, LBGA and counselling collective member, said this transformation of anecdotal evidence into statistical evidence will provide students with "legitimate tools" for pressing the administration into action.

Carney stressed that although many of the personal experiences of gay and lesbian students goes "beyond statistical stuff," having the statistics will "validate the experiences" of the students in the eyes of the administration.

"You really have to speak the bureaucratic language and have something on paper," Throne said, adding that one of his greatest fears is that the administration will fail to act on the report.

He fears that the appointment of Yeskel may have been "a way of getting students to cool down and diffuse their anger."

Brauer said of Yeskel, "They've heard her, now do they really want to listen to her?"

Responding to these fears, Madson said, "This University has a history of being concerned in the area of social issues and oppression and this issue is not going to die."

He said the report will "be useful in figuring out how we can be helpful" and in formulating specific recommendations.

Madson said that what he felt the report lacked was data from other communities which would allow comparisons.

"Although a third of the students said they experienced verbal harassment, I don't know how this compares with other communities," he said.

If such comparisons were made, "I think what we'd find is that UMass is not atypical from other college campuses," Yeskel said. "Just because it's not worse here, that is no reason to ignore the problem."

Editor's note: Because the Collegian ceases publication today, students wishing to express reactions to the report are requested to contact the Student Affairs Office.

Manfredi retires after fruitful career

By FRANCI RICHARDSON
Collegian Correspondent

Professor John Manfredi, who was once referred to as a 19th-century scholar in the 20th-century by a colleague, is now ready to relax.

Manfredi, a University of Massachusetts sociology instructor is retiring after almost four decades of teaching.

"To burn around, to write, and to travel" are first on his list of future plans. After 37 years of meeting deadlines and sticking to a fairly planned-out routine, Manfredi said, "I want to do things at my own pace and take things as they come."

Professor Jay Demerath, Chairman of the sociology department, said, "I regret the loss of a colleague, particularly one like John," but then again, "he's reached the point where he deserves to retire." Manfredi said he will miss contact with students and the relations with his colleagues that "have been of great satisfaction" to him.

While attending the University of Pennsylvania, Manfredi was an associate editor of the Daily Pennsylvanian. He said his interest in sociology was sparked by a history professor at UPenn who introduced him to the work of Pitirim Serokin, a sociologist. He said the sociology classes he had been enrolled in at the time did not interest him very much though. In 1942, he received a Bachelor of Arts degree with honors in philosophy of science. In 1951, he received a Ph.D in sociology from Harvard University.

Besides teaching classes at UMass in sociological theory, the sociology of religion and the sociology of art, Manfredi has done research in sectarianism and has published The Social Limits of Art (1983), a book on sociology's links to art.

Handicapped runner starts athletic club

By ILANA LEVENSON
Collegian Staff

Determination and committment are necessary for any runner, but for disabled runners an extra effort is required. For Andrea Morris, establishing a track club for the disabled requires dedication.

Morris, a University of Massachusetts employee and UMass graduate, became aware of the New York chapter of the Achilles Track Club for the disabled while watching the New York Marathon last fall; she saw the club on T.V.

The state chapter of the club now being formed is sponsored by the New York Road Runners Club.

The club's aim is for personal improvement. "I don't care who wins the race, but who makes progess," Morris said. "More than anyone else, it is important for mentally and physically disadvantaged people to get involved in running."

Morris hopes that by running with other disabled people she will stay interested in fitness. "It's easier to stay active if you have company," she said.

"My own reasons for getting involved are basically selfish" said Morris who was stricken with polio as a child and needs to exercise to retain mobility.

Although Morris exercised before the establishment of the club, she said, "No previous experience is necessary, just a desire to improve fitness with regular training."

Andrea Morris

However, a physician's approval is highly recommended before starting regular workouts, she said.

Morris is currently trying to get professionals to help those interested in advising a suitable workout for each individual. She hopes that in the future the club could sponsor a "fun run."

Currently, however, regular workouts have begun at 12 noon Saturday at the rubber track by the baseball field.

More information for anyone who would like to help get the club on its feet can be obtained by calling 256-8411.

UMass symposum honors insect researchers

Scientists from around the world gathered for a two-day symposium this week at the University of Massachusetts in honor of Vincent G. Dethier, professor of zoology, pioneer in insect research, nature writer and fellow of the national Academy of Sciences.

The symposium featured scientists' papers on the topic of insects and their feeding habits. More than 40 years of research have earned Dethier an international reputation from his studies of animal behavior using insects as models.

The "Festschrift," meaning festival of papers in German, marked Dethier's 70th birthday. Dethier is an honorary fellow of the royal Entomoligical society of London. He is also a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and the American Philosophical Society.

Dethier has been awarded two Guggenheim Fellowships in addition to having published more than 140 articles, nine technical books and several short stories.

The symposium was broken down into three related subjects of research. The psychological aspects of feeding, the sensation of taste in invertebrates and insects, and insect-plant interrelations.

Several motions were passed to improve the University's position in funding, including a redefining of the Regents' budget categories and development of a budget scheme that better represents the University.

Although the senate did not discuss the proposed grievance policy which would create a formal board to review academic complaints, it did pass a proposal aimed at setting guidelines for course improvement. The guidelines suggest possible ways for professors to minimize student confusion, such as syllabi and outlined course objectives.

The grievance policy will be on the agenda for the fall.

Several new departments and programs were approved, including, a Department of Social Work, a doctorate in music and a doctorate in neuroscience and behavior.

Several departments received name changes under senate approval. The department of Communication Studies was changed to the Department of Communication, the School of Engineering was changed to the College of Engineering, and the Judaic and Near Eastern studies programs were merged.

Poor attendance was a chronic problem at senate meetings. When a quorum vote was requested at one meeting, Senate Secretary Robert Jones said, "I doubt we have enough senators to make quorum.

"We never have enough to make quorum," he added.

Although the senate did make quorum for that vote it has recognized that a problem exists. A motion made in March suggested that the senate publish lists of the senate attendance in the Collegian after every meeting. The motion failed.

Fuel for the fire

The events on campus of April 23, 1985, vividly illustrate the "powder keg" conditions that many of us in the College of Food and Natural Resources must deal with on a daily basis. The loss of Fisher Laboratory points out the impossibility of preventing the complete destruction of our vintage buildings once they are ignited. Within 15 minutes, the structure was completely engulfed even though the fire was discovered immediately and fire-fighting equipment dispatched as soon as humanly possible. We conclude that fires in these aged brick buildings, once ignited, cannot be controlled.

There are at least four buildings that serve major academic and research functions in our college that are in excess of 60 years old. These structures were built in the early 1900s and without complete renovation they have exceeded their usefulness and safety as research facilities. In buildings which were designed to accomplish research needing no more than a microscope, we are now struggling to carry out research programs which depend on highly sensitive and expensive equipment and the use of toxic and flammable chemicals. Instead of the fire being in a storage facility, (ironically for fire extinquishers) it could as easily have been in a research building of the same vintage. The costs of such a fire would be cataclysmic in terms of graduate and faculty careers, not to mention the loss of funded research grants to the University and hundreds of thousands of dollars in ruined equipment that would very likely never be replaced. Most distressing however, is the great potential for the loss of life in these multi-storied structures which lack smoke detectors, sprinkler systems and adequate fire escapes.

The wooden walls and ceilings in these buildings are not only of tinder quality as evidenced by the inferno that was Fisher Lab but much of the electrical wiring dates to the original construction and presents a serious fire hazard as well. Those of us who must work under such conditions have become extremely sensitive to the risks and have attempted to do what we can to avoid fires due to carelessness. For example, faculty in some departments have, at their own initiative, instituted a no smoking rule in all areas except private offices. Nonetheless, in the last three years, three light fixtures in one building have shorted out, causing serious concern for fires of spontaneous origin. In our view, it is near criminal for the Commonwealth to allow such conditions to exist and to expect employees to work daily under such hazardous conditions.

We realize that the University is aware of the need to replace several of its expired buildings up on "Skid Row" because there has been periodic talk, newspaper articles and even some plans for renovation for at least the past eight years. Nevertheless, it appears that the priority for getting the work done is not sufficient to bring these plans to fruition.

We urge the University administration and the General Court to consider the risks and ramifications of another fire in a major academic building and to move as expeditiously as possible to rectify these conditions. The alternative is likely to be another disasterous event which would diminish the positive public image that all on this campus have worked so hard to build in recent years.

Ring T. Carde is head of the department of Entomology which endorsed this letter.

Here's to you UPC

This is a short article about Thank yous, respect, and dedication. I'm a lucky person. I learned first hand about what it takes to put on a successful Spring Concert. It takes 6 days of non-stop work by a dedicated Staff. It takes 15 hours of work to put a stage, (and 9 to take it down). It takes late nights and early mornings. It takes patience, respect, and dedication.

The people who worked Spring Concert are dedicated UPC members, and I thank them all for their work. They have all earned my respect.

As a new Staff member coming from out of the blue I have nothing but accolades and admiration for the UPC Staff of 1985. I have enjoyed our short time together and anticipate more fun in the future. I have learned alot from all of you. I'll miss you Andy and Eric and as for President Lance, I'll see you in August.

Here's to you: Physical Plant, Fine Arts Center, SAO, SGA, BOG, Mountain production Scum, the Bands, UPC, and all the crowd, with a special thank you to our Production Mother, Loretta Messinger.

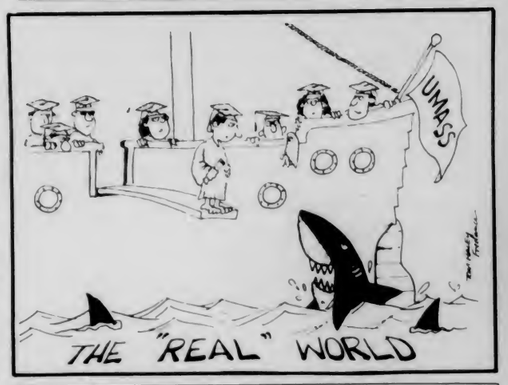
OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.



It's been real fun...???

Rita Murphy

Print it and print it tomorrow.
But I can't print it, it's too long. It's socially obnoxious. It'll offend blacks, women, Native Americans, homosexuals, Jews, Russians, Republicans, the handicapped, old folks, fetuses.
Print it or I'll kill you.
If I print it someone else will kill me.
Print it or I'll kill you twice.

If you love dealing with people, especially irrate people, then I've got a job for you: Opinion Page Editor of the Collegian, no experience necessary. If you like being yelled at, receiving death threats in the office or at home, or you just like smiling at people and can say "We'll try and get it in" without smirking, the job is yours.

It's been fun being Editor of the Opinion Page but at times, well when you're yelled at, threatened, chased around campus, interrupted when you're trying to have a conversation with someone at the Drake and asked whether or not you'll print someone's letter, well it kind of grinds at you.

But there are some memories I will take with me wherever I go; to the bathroom, or to the cemetery to visit my dead cat. Here are just a few of the most memorable days in the life of the Opinion Page Editor.

- The day last semester when I was told if I didn't print this woman's letter she would flunk a class and couldn't graduate on time, which would just kill her grandmother. I think her grandmother died.
- The day this semester when I printed a cartoon that implied fraternity men have sex with sheep. I always seem to get in trouble for the opinions of others. The cartoonist didn't get hell for it. I did. In fact I got threats from numerous frat men. One who will remain nameless (Jay Flynn) threatened to sue me and the Collegian for libel. And of course there were death threats for the next few nights. I really love being woken up in the middle of the night by frat men telling me they're going to screw me and a sheep up against a wall.

Death threats come with the job. But I thought they would be the standard "I'll kill you" but I quickly found out people can be very creative in the ways they threaten to kill.

For example, just last week, a man told me if I didn't print his letter the administration would "fry my ass." Well I do hope the administration fries my ass before I take my food science final. I'd hate to go through all that trouble for nothing.

I've been called racist, sexist, anti-Semetic, homophobic, sheepic and anti-conservative. People have threatened to kill me, maim me, pull off one of my legs and shove it down my throat. I've been called arrogant, egostistical, stubborn, immature , hypocritical and someone once even called me liberal.

People will say strange things when you don't print their letters. All I can really say to those people who submitted letters this year but never saw them in the paper is sorry and "no," there was no conspiracy against you or your beliefs to censor your opinions. But believe me, it hasn't been easy putting some of the opinions in, especially the ones that make me want to throw up. But I don't vomit easily, so I've been able to put quite a few different opinions on the page.

It's been real, it's been fun. Real fun? Well, all I can say is quack.

Those were the days

William J. Spain

As I get ever closer to forcible removal from this wonderful little community, I feel as if I should reflect on all that I have learned over the last year. Don't worry, this is no sobbing senior column. I have another few semesters to go and am more than willing to continue suckling on the teats of parent and taxpayer.

My education continues. Spurned by more women, belittled by more professors, and comforted by more friends, I continue to love every minute. There is no eager anticipation within me for that day when I will be dragged, kicking and screaming, into the real world. I shudder at the thought of being deprived of this forum to express my irresponsible and peculiar ideas. I understand that the Big Leagues are much more cruel and unforgiving.

September was eons ago. Walter Mondale still had a chance, Ed Meese wasn't Attorney General, and Garry Trudeau was just coming back to the comics page. An idyllic existence, it was. I could happily live solely in the realm of concepts with never a worry of brutal reality to upset me. Those were the days.

The value of what I learned from these and other, more personal, experiences is immeasurable to me. Perhaps that is why I now inflict them on everyone else. Ridicule, ponder, or ignore—I ask only that you read on.

•Politics—Credentials count for nothing. It is the glad-hander, the actor, and the shameless self-promoter who will ultimately prevail in this most despicable of trades. To those who might accuse me of personal bitterness in this department, I point to 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue and the senile egotist who resides there.

•Love—When affairs of the heart arise, friendships can dissolve. A constant reminder of how close we are to an age when instinct, not reason, ruled our lives.

•Drugs—It is amazing how many one can consume and still be able to enjoy outdoor music. I guess it's just one of those college things.

•Humor—Jokes are the best release, save one, available to us. However, use caution when telling them because they can make you enemies.

•Music—Santana, Joan Armatrading, Al Dimeola, Frank Zappa, The Tubes, Johnny Copeland, Big Twist, Son Seals, do I have to say more? Those folks at UPC are too much.

•Media—When not sensationalizing child molesters, serial killers, or drunken students, they are generally O.K. Someone has to keep an eye on the unit who run the show.

•Environment—I have become even more convinced that ecological destruction will get us before nuclear war does. If we don't watch this bunch of rape-and-pillage Republicans in Washington, we will be in serious trouble before long.

Summer beckons. With it comes the prospect of extensive travel—either to Montana or perhaps Faroffistan. Wherever I might end up, I am sure that the Happy Valley has not seen the last of me.

'Corruption'-UMass style

Cris Schuster

Nearly four years ago I thought a person went to a liquor store to buy alcohol. I thought one got a can of pop out of a Coke machine. I thought I carried a purse, got sprinkles on my ice cream cone and took a drink from a drinking fountain.

Now I "know better."

As an out-of-state student from Illinois I had a lot of learn about living on the East Coast. After four years, I still don't understand why a liquor store is a "packie" or why a drinking fountain is a "bubbler." Some things, I guess, I'll never understand. But I learned to conform and appreciate what people in Massachusetts really have.

A vocabulary is a superficial thing, something that in time one learns to change. What I found more difficult to change when I came here four years ago were my attitudes in life. I had a lot of learning to do here at UMass.

I don't know how many times I went through culture shock during my freshman year. I had a hard time accepting people who were radically different from me in the way they dressed and thought. I have to admit I still laugh sometimes at people who don't dress in a conventional way, but I no longer laugh at those who think differently. I've learned not only to accept, but to appreciate people who think differently.

But more importantly, I've learned to think differently.I've learned that this world and our president aren't as wonderful as my parents would have me believe. I've learned to stand up for my beliefs and not stand in the shadows of others. I've learned there is a difference between a girl and a woman. I've learned there are somethings that are a worth protesting and being arrested for. I've learned to take pride in being a feminist. I've learned to be an individualist. I've learned to be an individual. I've learned all that not in a text book, not in a class, but from the people here at UMass.

In some ways, I don't mind going back to Chicago. I'll be returning to a city that is very much alive, where people know their geography (unlike most New Englanders) and understand why I'm a Cubs fan. I've missed the city's skyline and being a spectator in the crazy world of Chicago politics.

But when I go back to Chicago, I'll be going back to a world where coed bathroom rallies and banning Coors beer are unheard of; a world where people think of themselves and not their neighbors in Nicaragua and South Africa; a world where little is done to fight racism, sexism and anti-Semitism. I'll be going back to a world where I'm glad I'll no longer fit in.

Some have compared the University to a cocoon, a self-contained world. We've been spoiled here. We've been protected but we've been able to grow into individuals. We've been exposed to many issues people in the real world refuse to see. We've had few responsibilities, but we've seen more than many ever will in a lifetime.

My parents are firmly convinced their daughter has been corrupted here by UMass and the people in Massachusetts.

I know better.

Letters to the Editor

Come on!

Although the antics of the Undergraduate Student Senate may often be described as comical, they are, for the most part, harmless. It is only when they are considering an act of overwhelming stupidity that a normally apathetic student, such as myself, can be compelled to say something about it.

Tonight, the senate will consider a motion to remove John Ruddock speaker from his duly elected position. The logic (?) behind this motion concerns Ruddock's wonderfully orchestrated arrest last Wednesday.

Putting aside for the moment the absurdity of the charges, this motion should be struck down immediately on one point alone. The motion calls for his removal on the basis of charges, he has been convicted of nothing. If the senate ousts him on these grounds they will be denying John Ruddock one of his most basic civil rights. The accused is supposed to be considered innocent until proven guilty.

The senate is supposed to uphold the constitution, not subvert it. What kind of governing body does this university have? One that considers itself about the law? One that feels that a students constitutional rights have no meaning?

We'll know what kind of senators we have on Wednesday night, when we see just who thinks the constitution is worth the paper it's written on, or the many lives that have been given to defend it.

Random Notes
It'll be tough in the future

University of Massachusetts, 1987.

"Chief, there's a call from Resident Agent 54. Alcohol emergency."

"What's the deal, Sergeant?"

"It seems a suspect was observed in a dormitory room committing an act of alcohol consumption. Male, age 19, one bottle of beer. The agent discovered the infraction on a routine hourly room inspection."

"Well, don't just stand there! Get some officers out there and get the new cells ready! We didn't spend half a million bucks on the new holding facility for nothing."

"We didn't pay for that, Chief. The students did."

"Whatever." The chief picked up the blue phone. "Send cars three, four and nine. Find out if anyone else on that floor is drinking." He sighed. "Things were a lot simpler around here when we were just arresting demonstrators or letting the FBI take over investigations."

"There's more, Chief. Three other people were drinking, together in the same room with the original suspect. Not only that..."

"How old are they? Were they rioting?"

"I believe they were, sir. The agent says there was loud music playing and that two of them threw a Frisbee in the corridor for a brief period."

"Call the state police! Call the chancellor! Call our attorney to make sure it's okay to break their knees."

"Don't worry, Chief. The student government already voted to eliminate legal assistance for students..."

The chief picked up the red phone. "One more thing. Arrest the speaker of the student senate—quick, before they make a resolution about this."

ARTS

Our critics' summer selection

By PETER WISSOKER
and BRAD VERTER
Collegian Staff

The following are some fine treasured tomes that have recently been published, which make ideal summer reading material.

There are three or four biographies of the Kinks which have come out in the last year or so. The Kinks: The Official Biography (Faber and Faber, $19.95) by Jon Savage is the only "official" biography of the three. This has its advantages and disadvantages. There is less gossip and, no mention of their drug comsumption in the mid-sixties, but there are some good pictures and it does give a good outline of the history of the Kinks, for example the tour they did without Ray Davies when he had a nervous breakdown in 1966. The bibliography is only adequate.

There is nothing like an outside observer coming in and giving you an objective opinion about what they see. This is what photographer Jacob Holdt, a Dane who came to America in the early 1970's has done in his book American Pictures (American Pictures Foundation, $14.95). Holdt goes to the underside of America, the part we love to forget. His commentary is cutting. The book is one of the most engrossing and depressing I've ever read and the photography is both ironic and artistic at the same time.

One periodically wonders what it would have been like to live with the people who made up the Bloomsbury circle in the earlier part of this century. A new and really interesting book written by Angelica Garnett, Vanessa Bell's daughter, talks about growing up with the people who circulated in this circle with her mother. Deceived with Kindness (HBJ, $14.95) tells of Angelica's sense of things from the point of view of someone who is only recovering now from her childhood. In the book she talks about her aunt Virginia Woolf and Clive Bell and Roger Fry (whom she really loved) among others. The book is remarkably honest and perhaps one of the most interesting of the dozens of accounts which exist of that period of time.

On the other hand a more depersonalized and more intellectual account of the father of Virginia Woolf and Vanessa Bell is Leslie Stephan: The Godless Victorian (Random House, $25.00) by Noel Annan. Originally published in 1951, the book has been updated and revised. Leslie Stephen was a great man in his own right, author of the first Dictionary of National Biography and other history books. This biography examines both Stephen's life and the issues which surrounded him and his biographies. The book takes a look at some of the issues writing biographies, which makes for a particularly interesting biography.

A scientist is by stereotype someone who is both dispassionate and withdrawn. Richard Feynman in his new autobiography Surely You're Joking, Mr. Feynman (Norton, $16.95) shows that he is hardly withdrawn. The book is basically a collection of anecdotes from one of the leading physicists alive today. Particularly entertaining are his accounts of how he picked almost all the safes and file cabinet locks at Los Almos and how much of a pain it was to win the Nobel Prize. The book is extremely accessible and there may even be too little science for most physicists.

For the amateur scientist there is a great new guide to astronomy out. Entitled appropriately enough Astronomy (Macmillian, $8.95) the book is part of Macmillian Field Guide Series and provides great instruction for getting involved in astronomy. It advises the reader to wait to use a telescope until they have learned to really see the sky with their naked eye. Congratulations to Storm Dunlop for writing one of the clearest astronomy guides in years.

In the life as art department Julian Barnes' Flaubert's Parrot (Knopf, $13.95) is a wonderful dissection of Flaubert as perceived by the mind of a retired British Doctor/Realist. The book is layered and self-referent in waves, all the way down the the title. The book traces simultaneously the lives of Flaubert, the author, the critics of Flaubert, critics in general, and the question of whether life reflects art or vice versa.

In Breaking with Moscow (Knopf, $18.95) Arkady Shevchenko--former advisor to Andrei Gromyko and UN official--tells his fascinating story of life in the higher eschelons of Russian government before he defected in mid-1978. The book is well written and well worth the while of anyone interested in modern Soviet politics.

With all major events in human history there arises the question: Was the event caused by inevitable social circumstances, or did it occur by virtue of a remarkable individual? In his book Family Portrait with Fidel, Carlos Franqui addresses this question. Franqui, a seminal agitator during the Cuban revolution (He published the underground newspaper, Revolucion), provides the insightful analysis that only an insider's view can provide.

The latest Self-help-for-Students book is Your Ticket to Medical or Dental School by Lawrence Graham (Bantam, $5.95 paper). Although the book certainly does contain some useful information, it mentions nothing that a good counselor won't tell you. Graham has also written two similar books; Your Ticket to Law School and Your Ticket to Business School.

JOHN BRERETON, ed.: Traditions of Inquiry (Oxford University Press, $19.95) It is odd that Oxford should release a book celebrating writing instructors at the end of May, when most students are taking finals and many harbor ill feelings towards their teachers. At any rate, the book is an interesting anthology of articles on educators who have, in one way or another, influenced the approach to teaching college writing. One key article, on Theodore Baird an instructor formerly at Amherst College, is by Walker Gibson, a UMass Professor (Toot toot). A book fascinating for those who are interested in the subject, it makes an ideal gift for your favorite writing instructor. or perhaps, more appropriately, for a writing instructor you feel is particularly incompetent.

MIRA LIEHM: Passion and Defiance (University of California Press, $29.75). This lucid and interesting book traces the development of Italian movies, focusing on the output since 1942. Film was heavily exploited by Mussolini, she tells us in her prologue, giving us a worthy introduction to the origins of Italian cinema. Liehm explores in depth the work of directors we are familiar with , such as Antonioni, Bertolucci, Fellini, Pasolini, Rossellini, Visconti and Wertmuller, as well as the work of many less well-known directors. In fact, many of the pre-1942 works she mentions have never been viewed in America until recently. Her analysis of trends is profound; and, yes, she even discusses Sergio Leone, the Spaghetti Western king. Passion and Defiance is highly recommended for those interested in what is, according to Liehm, "the most important art."

BENJAMIN M. SCHUTZ: Embrace the Wolf (Bluejay, $13.95) If ever a first novel showed its greeness, this one does. This poor attempt at a hardboiled thriller is paced well enough and has a decent plot: Leo Haggardy, private eye, traces a psychopath who has effected the disappearance of a man and his two daughters. This is not particularly pleasant, but is suitable material for an entertaining read. The book's major fault is its cliche-ridden, awkward style. A typical example is: "Someone had taken his life, put in the shit machine and turned it into garbage." Schutz's writing is the shit machine that turns Embrace the Wolf into garbage.

Lenny Bruce experiences euphoria in the hilarious book The Unpublished Lenny Bruce, available for $8.95 (plus 75¢ postage & handling) from Running Press, 125 South 22nd St., Philadelphia, PA 19103.

Madonna shines in Madonna: Lucky Star by Michael McKenzie (contemporary, $6.95 paper). An entertaining pictorial essay of the life of America's favorite singing sweetheart.

ABBY ROBINSON: The Dick and Jane (Delacorte, $14.95) If Dashiell Hammett and Dorothy Parker had a daughter (Lillian Hellmann permitting), her name would be Abby Robinson: The Dick and Jane is a hilarious pastiche. Jane the narrator is a witty, sophisticated, horny, SoHo-based photographer with a penchant for vocabulary culled from the gutter side of hardboiled jargon. Jane teams up with a gumshoe and ends up saving her "Golden Boy" lover from becoming destroyed by a cult of William Blake afficionados. The action is fast and funny, the allusions are varied and clever, and the characterization is vivid if a bit facile. Raymond Chandler meets Fran Leibowitz in this enjoyable and very entertaining book.

RAMSEY CAMPBELL: Obsession (Macmillian, $16.95) Ordinarily I might be embarrassed to gush over a horror writer, but in Campbell's case any praise restrained would be a critic's baseless vanity. His previous book, The Face That Must Die (Scream Press) is a masterpiece of psychological instability. His latest book, Obsession, is similarly piercing in its malevolent energy. The story is basic enough: Four children unknowingly sign a pact with the Devil. When they feel its toll 25 years later once the products of their selfish requests return to haunt them, they strive to extricate themselves from their malignant contract. Campbell uses his usual devices to transform this simple plot into a terrifying nightmare of wretched, introverted intensity: Short chapters, illicit sexuality, and children as the subjects of evil. Campbell is everything Stephen King tries to be (except rich). Obsession is a violent and exciting exploration into the minds of the tormented...it's a terrific book!

RON KOVIC: Around the World in Eight Days (City Lights, $5.95 paper) This slim (90 pages) rebel-on-the-road book opens with our hero making a bet that he can circle the globe in eight days. He hitchhikes to the West Coast in five days, meeting a madcap array of characters. Once in California he meets with the insane DJ Doctor Twist and a drug-crazed journalist/adventurer who helps him complete his journey during a surreal time machine sequence. Kovic is a Vietnam vet. The last part of the book deals with his frustration and malaise: "Even after all these years," the narrator says, "it still hurts." The narrator is very egocentric and either instantly befriends everyone or is already old friends with them. The book is entertaining but is by no means brilliant. It would have been better written 10 or 15 years ago.

Gotcha doesn't really get you

Gotcha'
Directed by Jeff Kanen
Starring Anthony Edwards and Linda Fiorentino
Mountain Farms

By THOMAS HARRINGTON
Collegian Staff

Late spring is a tricky time for movies. You tend to get a lot of stuff that was intended for summer release, but wasn't quite good enough. That's why Gotcha comes as sort of a nice surprise.

Anthony Edwards, who you might remember from Revenge of the Nerds, is a freshman college student who's a champion at "gotcha", the local hunt-and-kill game, but has considerably more trouble finding a date. All this changes though, when he runs into a mysterious East Euoropean woman while on vacation in France.

Of course, it isn't long before this woman is dragging him into trouble in East Germany, and he becomes a target of the KGB, and starts putting his game experience to good use.

This movie borrows freely from other sources, especially Risky Business, and there are some gigantic holes in the plot, but there are a couple of things that make it worth sitting through. The most important is Anthony Edwards, whose good-hearted naitivite carries most of the film. He actually makes us like and sympathize with the rich white American on vacation he plays, and he manages to get smiles with a lot of badly written jokes.

Linda Fiorentino makes a nice contrast as the danger-loving spy he gets caught up with. At times her accent makes her sound like she's on the rebound from an affair with Boris Badenoff but she handles her "dangerous woman" role quite well for the most part.

Things are at their best when we're in Europe, where there's some nice location shooting in France and Germany. The scenes are cheaper and less substantial in the college part of the film, making us miss out on the comedy-suspense atmosphere.

Gotcha' isn't outstanding, but it does deliver most of what it promises: a little sex, a little action, and a little fun. If it only provided a substantial amount of any one of these though, I'd feel better about recommending it.

WOLFGANG LEPPMANN: Rilke, a Life (Fromm, $12.95 paper). Rainer Maria Rilke, one of the greatest modern German writers, had a fascinating life. Raised a girl for the first seven years of his life, he led a precocious, promiscuous existence among the higher eschelons of European society. His friends included Rodin, Tolstoy, Hesse, Mann, Diaghilev, Kee, and Balthus, among others. Leppmann traces the influence of Rilke's contemporaries on his works, and demonstrates how Rilke's writings coincide the progression of his life. The book reads like fiction and is highly recommended.

THOMAS B. HOLMES: Electronic and Experimental music (Scribner's, $12.95 paper). This brief, comprehensive survey of avant-garde electronic music is impressive in its scope and clarity, in addition to a short history of experimental music and sound recordings in general (interestingly enough, the first important electronic instrument, the telharmonium, was invented in neighboring Holyoke), Holmes provides an explanation of the mechanics and theory which provides a foundation for the genre. There is also a discography which includes composers as diverese as John Cage, Jimi Hendrix, Philip Glass and Throbbing Gristly. This is a very informative book: a must for anyone seeking an intelligent overview of modern music.

ANTHONY BURGESS: 99 Novels (Summit,$10.95) This extraordinary piece of British pompousity is particularly appaling. Burgess, author of A Clockwork Orange and many lesser books, assigns himself the role of Arbiter of Good Taste and tells us which are the best novels of the English language since 1939. It is interesting to see what he left out. There is no mention of William Gaddis, Carson McCullers, Truman Capote, or Kurt Vonnegut, for example.

Now that you have been informed of all these fine books, you now have an excuse to stay inside in a dark corner and evade the summer sun's malignant rays.

drive in making his soccer team the best left an impression on me. Some coaches would play games with me, promoting themselves more than the sport, thinking they could manipulate the "student" newspaper, but for the most part UM coaches are good people doing a good job under difficult conditions.

I've tried my best to present coverage of all sports at the school with limited staff and space. These limitations force me to pick and choose often, but the average sports fan at UMass knew how the teams he went to see were doing at home or on the road.

I'll be back next September with high expectations. My grades have suffered and I've made some enemies, but on the whole running this section has introduced me to many new friends and considerably broadened my horizons.

I finish the year deep in debt to my close friends who helped me considerably. They know who they are and how I feel about them. So to Laura Yee, Nancy Bukar, my roommates Al and Dan and One-hit Allard I say thanks.

Thanks especially to Tony "The Butcher" Betros. He of the award-winning Sports Log, dean of wrestling knowledge and my ever valuable assistant editor. I will always be there for the tag Tony.

But, most of all, I raise my Budweiser to anybody who came up to me during the year and said, "Hey, aren't you the sports editor?" and proceeded to either criticize me, praise me or just shake my hand. These people who read the sports pages faithfully are why I do what I do and put everything I have into it.

Have a good summer.

Longmeadow. "He's got the potential to really develop into something—he could get to be one of the top swimmers in New England," Yarworth said. Ed Burton, of Poughkeepsie, N.Y. is, according to the coach "very versatile. He will be able to swim any event for me and, if I've got a hole in a dual meet, he can fill it for me," Yarworth said.

Chris Payson, a distance freestyler from North Attleboro will also contribute depth to the team. "I think he's a very hard worker and he has very good times. I expect him to finish in the top 10 in the New Englands," Yarworth said.

Returning next year to aid the cause will be co-captain Drew Donovan, New England champion in the 100-, 200- and 500-yard freestyle, breastrokers Mike Hoover and Fred Marius and backstroker Marc Surrette.

"Next year we'll be challenging to win the New Englands. I don't set goals that are unattainable, just hard to attain," Yarworth said.

Women capture bronze at crew Easterns

JV boat places in Philadelphia

The women's crew team fared well at the Dad Vail meet in Philadelphia over the weekend as the junior varsity eight took a bronze medal.

The crew of Patty Hooley, Sarah Bulkley, Jeanne Bulla, Su Mecky, Heidi McCool, Lisa Davidson, Mary Kay Olson and Alison Hill, with cox Michelle Amari took third.

The men's and women's teams, overall, placed tenth out of 70 teams. The meet is the Division 2 national championship.

The men's eights and fours reached the semifinals of their events with good rows. The women's novice missed the semifinals by one second.

The meet was the final one of the season for the crew teams.

Attackman Tom Carmean was named first all-New England and is up for All-American consideration. The sophomore led UMass in scoring with 62 points.

Carmean named all-NE, Syracuse series over?

Orange coach cites crowd, officials

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts attackman Tom Carmean was named to the first team New England lacrosse all-stars after a 28 goal-34 assist season.

Carmean, a transfer from Long Islands's Farmingdale Community College, was seventh in the nation in assists despite missing three games with an injured shoulder.

In other lacrosse news, Syracuse coach Roy Simmons Jr. told UMass coach Dick Garber he may end the two school's ten year series because of poor officiating at UMass and rowdy crowds (see below).

Senior attackman Tom Lukacovic was named second team after a 23 goal-12 assist season. Senior midfielder Karl Hatton (11 goals-six assists) and junior defensemen Tom Aldrich and Mark Stratton were also chosen by the coaches for the second team.

On Sunday, Lukacovic and Hatton will play for the West team in the 10th annual senior East-West game at Trinity College. UMass goaltender Gerry Moreau will oppose his teammates in the pipes for the East. Senior Mike Fiorini is an alternate as only two players could be chosen for each team. Moreau made the East squad because of a shortage of senior goalies.

On the national scene, Fiorini, Lukacovic, Hatton and Moreau are up for consideration for the annual North-South game that pits the nation's best seniors against each other. Lukacovic, Carmean and Hatton have all made it to the second All-American ballot after being nominated before the season and being voted on once already.

GORILLA GRUMBLINGS: UM coach Dick Garber said yesterday he will play any team in the nation on a home and home basis (meaning that UM would play away one year before hosting the team the next). Simmon's decision might involve other factors such as the fact that SU's slim come-from-behind 12-11 victory dropped them to second nationally and lost the top seed in the NCAA playoffs. The playoffs, which start today, will see Johns Hopkins host Adelphi, Army at Virginia, Penn at Syracuse and Brown at North Carolina. The Hopkins-Adelphi winner plays the Army-Virginia winner with the SU-Penn victor playing the Brown-N.C. winner. The finals are May 25 at Brown.

Simmons was quick to criticize the UMass crowd, but his own players, most notably All-American Tim Nelson, continually swore at the officials drawing an unusually high five unsportsmanlike conduct penalties. Nelson confronted the officials after the game and delivered a curse-filled tirade. Assistant coach John Desko went as far as throw a flag back at the officials. Every call met with dispute from the SU staff. Crying, it seems, is one way to get to the top. The SU crowd is also no prize.

The Aldrich-Fiorini gym class series ended with the Fiorini squad taking a two game (total goals) series 10-9. Suicidal goaltending by Tom Dougherty proved the difference in the last game.

How sweet it was: A look back at the sports year

Peter Abraham

The year is up. Since I took over as sports editor in September I have seen an estimated 83 different games involving University of Massachusetts teams, some great wins, some bitter losses, some just plain forgettable.

For the past few days, I have reflected back on the year and the various seniors the school's teams are losing to graduation.

Horace Neysmith, Peter Tracy, Donald Russell, Lori Stukes, Pam Moryl, Bob Simeone, Mike Fiorini, Todd Comeau, Angelo Salustri, Gerry Moreau, Liz Feinberg, Bobby Braun, Andrea Muccini, Dave Cavanaugh, George Papoutsidis and Tom Lukacovic come to mind.

Bruce Kingman, Don Day, Glenn Holden, Craig Fuller, Ron Young, George Ramming, Jim Knopf, Karl Hatton and countless others impressed me. All added something to the program. Some were heroes and set school records, others just went out every day and worked their hardest. Every student that gets enjoyment out of attending a sporting event on campus owes these people thanks.

I remember the joys of 1984-85: The football team beating New Hampshire, the field hockey and women's soccer team vaulting into the national spotlight, the men's soccer team beating UConn, the men's basketball team beating Northeastern and sending West Virginia into overtime. The women's team rebounding from tough losses to look toward the future. The track teams, with almost no scholarship support, placing high in the New Englands, the baseball team, beset with injuries, setting a school record for wins.

I remember the women's lacrosse team pounding opponents and finishing just short of the NCAA playoffs, the men taking Syracuse to the limit, the softball team, with no seniors, climbing to fifth in the Northeast.

This school, not known recently as a sports power, is making inroads. A fundraiser has been hired, the Cage is being renovated and a new arena is in the planning stage. The future seems promising.

I will never forget the individual performances: Pam Moryl scoring almost at will on both the field hockey and lacrosse fields, Horace Neysmith skying for a rebound and beating his man downcourt for a dunk, Tom Carmean wheeling around the net and stuffing home another goal. Carl Smith, as time runs out, hitting another desperation jumper. Vito Perrone, Todd Comeau and Dave Cavanaugh planting an opponents' ball carrier. Bob Simeone catching a pass for another school record. Todd Comeau smashing another homer into the trees in center. Lynn Stockley hurling a shutout. Mike Fiorini inventing new ways to shoot a lacrosse ball or Tom Aldrich putting on the serious game face and holding his man without a point. It's been memorable.

Some people who believe sports aren't important will never realize the courage it took for Peter Tracy to lift his injured body off the bench and get back on the defensive line, or the guts it took for Carl Smith to play the end of the UConn game with a broken hand, refusing to come out. Karl Hatton popped his shoulder back into its socket and ran back on the lacrosse field. I respect these athletes, personalities, not scores and results, are what makes writing sports a good time and most UM athletes have a lot of character.

The best personalities are often those of the coaches. The young and determined leaders like Bob Stull, Ron Gerlufsen and Jeff Gettler show me what hard work can accomplish.

Easy-going coaching veterans like Dick Garber and Dick Bergquist were never too busy to sit down with me and explain a certain concept or play. Kalekeni Banda's

Swim team lands top recruits

By NANCY A. BUKAR
Collegian Staff

For the first time since the 1930s, the University of Massachusetts men's swim team placed in the top three at the New England championships this year, and with the incoming recruits coach Russ Yarworth landed, first place is no longer just a dream.

Seven swimmers have already committed themselves to attend and coach Yarworth is waiting to hear from two others, John Turner, a backstroke transfer from the University of Kentucky and Ian Toal of Apponequet High School, the Massachusetts high school 50-yard freestyle champion with a time of 21.7.

"This kid is hot," Yarworth said, referring to Toal. "I really want him." Toal, if he decides to attend UMass, would be the only scholarship athlete this year. Yarworth expects to hear Toal's decision as of last night.

Turner, a native of Darien, Conn., will have his decision to Yarworth by the end of May. Turner's best times for the 100- and 200-yard backstroke are each two seconds faster than the winning times at this year's New Englands. If he attends UMass, he would still have two years of eligibility left.

Other strong swimmers that will contribute to the team include Mike Bolles, a freestyler from East

Sports Log

Tony Botros

Just a few final thoughts...

After one year and a half of Sports Log, this is the final one. Please, no one shed a tear, let there be no parades.

The winner of this year's NBA Championship is going to have a tough time repeating, because New York City has a new face in the crowd. Coming from Cambridge via Georgetown, Patrick Ewing was destined to be a number one pick since he started school. Four years later, he is number one and he will be donning the uniform of the Knicks. A frontcourt of Ewing, Cartwright, and King should propel the Knicks back into the thick of the playoffs. There is no question that Patrick has the talent, if he applies it to the pro ranks, look out...The funniest part was the lottery itself. Each city in contention for Ewing had its own good luck charm, Seattle had a "St. Patrick Ewing Day"—imagine putting Ewing on your dashboard—New York had a lucky horseshoe from a successful harness racer.

Commissioner Stern read the draft picks from number seven to one. It was ironic that the next night, CBS also aired the Miss USA pagent. It should have been handle more the same way. Each club should have had to answer a question from Bob Barker on what they'd want in life. I could just see the responses "Peace on Earth, good will to all men, and a seven-footer that can do it all."

What Sports Log would be complete without the mention of the latest fad to hit this country since the Cabbage Patch Kid? Yes, pro wrestling will continue on strong for awhile and then fade out, but right now, let's just sit back and laugh. Last weekend, NBC aired "Saturday Night's Main Event," a 90 minute show in Saturday Night Live's slot. It featured wrest-ling matches and interviews and is perhaps the silliest 90 minutes of television. Which, of course, means it will do well in the ratings.

This past year has been very special to me. To be able to write how I felt is something that not too many people are able to do. This column was a pleasure to write and there are so many people to thank. Peter Abraham—for giving me the space to write and create and for not giving me the figure four. My roommates—for bearing up to the ridicule they received for admitting they lived with me. All the people who helped in my column—Flip (Mr. Siver), Tim (golfing with the Bruins), Coops (Thank You!), Lee (Did the Celtics play?), Nancy (put me in your column), the Count (wrestler extrodanaire) and all my other friends. Your compliments and criticisms were all taken to heart. I will miss you all very much. You are very special people.

No more need be said.
